SIR: Being manufacturers of flax and tow yarns, threads and twines, on a large scale at Gilford, Ireland, and also having established a branch factory for similar goods eight years ago at Greenwich, Washington County, State of New York, we believe we are in a position to express an opinion as to the result of any alteration in the tariff as it at present exists, formed from an unprejudiced consideration and only affected to a trifling degree by self-interest.

The exemption from duty of what is known as "dressed line" would induce us to abandon the importation of flax in any other than this condition, thereby practically closing our hackling department in this country, and giving a corresponding impetus to the same employment in our Irish factory, owing to the much higher rates of wages we have to pay in this country.

Any reduction in the existing tariff on manufactured goods would enable us to import from Great Britain all the goods that we now make at less than we could produce them here, unless we could establish such a substantial reduction in the present wages of our employés as would enable us to compete with the lower wages paid in Ireland.

We believe that a reduction in the present duty on manufactured goods would compel us and others to close the flax mills in this country, reship their machinery to the United Kingdom, and thus check, if not exterminate, an important industry that has made rapid strides toward development during the last ten years, and is attracting the attention of a large section of the public in this country. To compel us and others to reship their machinery after paying an average duty of 40 per cent. into the United States Treasury on millions of dollars' worth of machinery, would, we submit, be a great injustice. With adequate protection we foresee a great future for this business and a large increase in the manufacture of home-made goods, so we therefore ask your careful consideration to the importance of fostering and encouraging this industry, and your strenuous opposition to any measure that will reduce the present duty on manufactured goods.

We are, yours, respectfully,

DUNBAR, McMASTER & CO.

Hon. JOHN M. FARQUHAR,
Washington, D. C.

I desire to submit the letter without any further comment than to say it comes from one of the most excellent business houses in the whole State of New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read lines 33 and 34, as follows:

Tow of flax, or hemp.
Hemp manila, and other like substitutes for hemp.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out those lines, and I do so at the instance of hemp-growers from Kentucky. I propose to submit as my argument an extract from a letter from as staunch a Democrat as I know of in Kentucky, and who has the hardihood to dissent from the doctrines of his party, even though they come through a national convention, when he believes they are destructive to the interests of the people of Kentucky, and especially of a large number of laborers who are dependent, at a season of the year when labor is otherwise deficient, upon the hemp crop for their employment. I know the gentleman well personally, and have known him for a long time. He says in the course of his letter:

We raise in Kentucky about 24,000 acres of hemp. Average crop per acre is about 1,000 pounds, which sells at $5 per 100 pounds, or $100 per ton. Of this amount from $18 to $21 per acre is expended for actual labor, and nearly all this labor is done by the colored population, and often at a time of year when no other profitable farm work can be found for them, particularly at the spreading and breaking season in the winter time. Much of the remainder of the amount received goes to the lessee of the land, the owner netting about $20 per acre. The lessee, having to do a great deal of work himself, should of course have his labor credited up with a good large share of the remainder, which, however, is over and above the $18 per acre received by the day laborers. I am reliably informed that the jute, sisal, and manila importers have formed a "trust—"

I want the gentlemen here from Kentucky to know that some of their fellow-citizens believe there is a hemp, manila, and jute trust formed by the importers—and but for the production of hemp in Kentucky would at once put up the price of twine, so largely used by the farmers in binding wheat, to 30 cents a pound, thus increasing the cost of twine for the harvesters at least 200 per cent., to say nothing of the increase they would make in rope, bagging, and other articles so largely used by the farmers and planters. Placing hemp on the free-list would destroy its production entirely and allow the "trust" above mentioned a complete monopoly in price on this article. If our members of Congress have the interest of our great agricultural population of the West and South at heart they will never strike hemp from the list of dutiable articles, and not only prevent its production, but permit foreign importers to wring millions of dollars from the farmers to feed and fatten this hydra-headed "trust." The wiser way would be to raise the duty on hemp still higher, thus encouraging an increased production and decrease the amount of foreign substitutes therefor now brought into this country. * * *

Great complaint is being made throughout the hemp-producing district of Kentucky about the action of the Committee on Ways and Means in placing hemp on the free-list, and the voice of the people will be heard in the primaries next summer in condemnation thereof.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask the gentleman who wrote that letter.

Mr. KELLEY. A gentleman, sir, who is the peer of any man on this floor.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not contradict that; I simply want to know whether or not he is a constituent of mine.

Mr. KELLEY. He is a citizen of Kentucky, and a constituent of the governor of Kentucky.

Mr. McCREARY. Does he raise hemp?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know.

Mr. McCREARY. What county does he reside in?

Mr. KELLEY. Would you like to know?

Mr. McCREARY. I would, sir.

Mr. KELLEY. Very well, you may if you can learn. I shall not betray my correspondents into the hands of those who would destroy their interests.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will only recognize gentlemen in opposition to the motion.

Mr. NELSON. I am opposed to the motion, and in opposition to it I desire the Clerk to read a statement which I have marked and will send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

One of the stupidest taxes in the tariff-list is that on manila and sisal, materials needed in the manufacture of the cheap binder-twine used in harvesting machines ever since wire was discarded. Wire proved a failure in the self-binders because it caused an injury to thrashing-machines and mills that ground the grain and was too dear; but inventive ingenuity solved the difficulty by substituting binder-twine. This twine is now used extensively throughout the western portions of the country. Being a cheap twine, only needed to hold sheaves together for a short time, hemp, which is much dearer, is not used in its manufacture, and the substitutes, sisal and manila, are found satisfactory. The duties on these materials last year (1886) amounted to $1,188,282, and the incidence of the tax, or the profits of manufacturers and middlemen on the tariff tax, to nearly as much more.

This tax protects no one, is not needed for revenue, and is an injury to every farmer it touches. The theory in taxing these substitutes was that such a levy was necessary to protect the hemp-growers of Kentucky and Missouri, but in fact nothing of the sort is done. Hemp is too costly for binder-twine, and it is cheaper to use sisal and manila with the duties added. The tax does the hemp-grower no good, and is a wholly unjustifiable levy on hundreds of thousands of farmers of the West. Unless the tax is increased to prohibition and made to keep out sisal and manila altogether, it can not operate to compel the use of hemp in making binder-twine for farmers. Why not repeal it outright?

Mr. ROWELL. What line is covered by the motion to strike out?

The CHAIRMAN. Line 44.

Mr. McKINLEY. I move a pro forma amendment, and ask to have the letter read, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

CINCINNATI, April 14, 1888.

HONORABLE SIR: We have a large plant and expensive machinery for the purpose of manufacturing twines of Kentucky hemp; therefore we are very deeply interested in the tariff question. We notice that the Mills tariff bill aims to admit foreign fibers free of duty into this country. We think it sufficient that we are compelled to buy our machinery from England, but when it comes to manufacturing the material we want to use our home production.

Kentucky hemp is low enough as it is, and should the duty be taken off of foreign fibers, our American hemp will have to be sold so low that it will not pay the producer to raise it at all.

The binder-twine interest in this country is a very large one, and is growing rapidly every year. The consumption of this commodity last year was about 40,000 tons. Most of this was made of foreign fibers, Manilla and Sisal. Now, we think that the foreigner has got the lion's share, and as the binder-twine made of Kentucky hemp is beginning to be popular, we anticipate that the future will see binder-twine made of American hemp used very largely; but should the Mills tariff bill become a law, our American product will have to be sold so low in competition with Russian hemp, as to drive it entirely out of the market. Under the circumstances we think it a very important matter to a large and growing American industry, that the Mills bill should not become a law.

Trusting that you will appreciate the necessity of keeping the rate of duty on foreign fibers as it is at present, we are,

Yours, respectfully,

GEORGE H. BONTE.

Hon. WILLIAM McKINLEY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. McKINLEY. I also ask to have read certain resolutions adopted by the Flax and Hemp Spinners and Growers' Association at their convention held in Chicago on the 25th of February, 1886.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

The committee on resolutions reported as follows:

Resolved, That we, as growers and manufacturers in convention assembled, agree to use every endeavor to advance the interests of the flax and hemp industry in the United States; that as growers we will use every effort to raise and prepare the fiber with reference to the wants of the manufacturers, and that as manufacturers we will co-operate with the growers and give preference to American flax and hemp.

It was moved by Mr. Boyce, of Muncie, Ind., that the report be adopted, and seconded by Mr. Loughridge. Carried.

The committee further reported as follows:

Whereas any reduction of the tariff at this time on foreign fibers, including jute, manila, sisal, flax, and hemp would, in our opinion, be disastrous to important domestic industries, both agricultural and manufacturing: Therefore, be it

Resolved by this convention, representing both producers and manufacturers, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be respectfully urged to oppose any such reduction, whether by direct legislation or indirectly by reciprocity treaties; and that a memorial be prepared and forwarded to every Senator and Member of Congress, and that we will individually urge the matter upon their attention.

Moved adoption by Mr. Boyce, of Muncie, Ind., and seconded by Mr. Sparks. Carried.

Mr. McKINLEY. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I move to strike out the last word. I ask to have read the extract which I send to the desk, which is a brief report of the proceedings of the Flax and Hemp-Growers' convention, held at the Ebbitt House, in this city, on the 28th of March, last.

The Clerk read as follows:

FLAX AND HEMP GROWERS MEET—WITHOUT REGARD TO PARTY AFFILIATION THEY OPPOSE MILLS'S TARIFF BILL.

WASHINGTON, March 28.

At the annual meeting of the flax and hemp growers, which convened at the Ebbitt House this morning, a number of interesting statistics relative to the business were presented. President Turner, in his report, said that he would venture to say that the President of the United States was wearing shirts and using towels made of foreign linen.

Among the interesting papers were a series of letters from manufacturers and growers throughout the United States, protesting against the passage of the Mills bill. One of them, from several Kentucky dealers, dated at Lexington, assured the association of entire sympathy with its efforts to defeat the change of tariff.

It says that the signers are conversant with the wishes of the hemp-growers, and know that they are opposed to any reduction of the existing duty on hemp or its products, and further states that the president of the Farmers' Exchange has written and sent to Representative W. C. BRECKINRIDGE a letter assuring him that the farmers can not compete with foreign hemp if the present duty is taken off, and urging him to see that they are taken care of.

A resolution was adopted protesting against a reduction of the tariff on flax and hemp, and a committee was appointed to present a copy of the resolutions to the Ways and Means Committee of the House. The president urged that the individual members continue their fight against the bill, and added that he had received protests against it in great numbers from members of both parties.

Mr. McKINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I intended to have read, when I was on my feet before, a resolution passed by the senate of Kentucky on the 23d of February, 1886. I send it to the desk now and ask that it be read:

IN SENATE, February 23, 1886.

Be it resolved by the senate of Kentucky, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States be requested to oppose any law the effect of which will be to admit free of duty through the ports of this country any article or articles of foreign growth the use of which will come into competition with our home-grown hemp of Kentucky.

A copy.
Attest:

HARRY GLENN,
Clerk Kentucky Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume that the formal amendment is withdrawn. The question is on striking out line 34 of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McKINLEY. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 69.

Mr. McKINLEY. I demand tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 78.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "hemp." I make that motion for the reason that hemp is a well-known agricultural product, and I do not think it is wise policy for the Congress of the United States to so shape its legislation as to drive the agricultural interests of the country into the production of one or two, or perhaps three staple crops. I think one of the difficulties with the agricultural interest to-day is that it is confined to too few lines of production, and it does seem to me that we should encourage diversity of industry in agriculture as well as in manufacturing and other pursuits. I know that under the present rates of duty the protection of hemp has seriously declined, because farmers have found that they did not receive an adequate amount of protection. I hope, therefore, that hemp will not be placed upon the free-list, but will be continued at its present rate of duty, or, if any change is made, that more protection, instead of less, shall be given to the producers of the hemp.

Representing a section of country which does not raise hemp, but which, in its mills, fashions it into articles of commerce, I say that we are perfectly willing, ay, anxious, that the agricultural portions of the country which are engaged in the production of this crop shall have the benefit of the protection which the present law gives and an additional amount sufficient to encourage the cultivation of the plant. I have nothing further to say upon this subject, except to ask leave to incorporate in my remarks an article from the Lexington (Ky.) Leader, giving the reasons why additional protection should be accorded to this industry.

The article is as follows:

HEMP AND FLAX SHOULD BE PROTECTED.

[Lexington (Ky.) Leader.]

The New York Press recently published an exhaustive article on the hemp and flax industries of the United States, proving conclusively that they are entitled to and should receive increased protection rather than the tariff reduction proposed by the Ways and Means Committee. In spite of the protests from Kentucky, Wisconsin, Iowa, Indiana, Kansas, Illinois, and Dakota, the Democratic leaders are determined to deal a death-blow to these two important industries, and turn over the business to Calcutta, Dundee, and Belfast. If they succeed in accomplishing their ends they will practically confiscate $8,000,000 of capital invested and throw out of employment 6,000 factory employés, to say nothing of the vast army of laborers engaged in the agricultural districts where the fiber is grown.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the word "hemp."

The question was taken, and the Chair declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 65.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Jute butts.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out line 35. I send to the desk a special report from the Department of Agriculture on jute culture and the importance of the industry, by Prof. S. Waterhouse, of Washington University, St. Louis, and I ask the Clerk to read the passages marked, extending from page 4 to page 8.

The Clerk read as follows:

Till recently the Government of India has never fostered the cultivation of jute; but without its patronage this industry has within the last half century risen to a world-wide importance. In 1828 the total foreign sale of jute was less than 40,000 pounds, worth $300. Now Calcutta, which is the great point of distribution, exports immense quantities of this staple to Bombay, Madras, Ceylon, Burmah, Singapore, Penang, Java, Australia, Brazil, the west coast of South America, France, Great Britain, and the United States. Only about one-fourth of the crop is reserved for domestic consumption. According to the fashion of the different countries, pepper, coffee, sugar, rice, cotton, soda, lime, the matte and regulus of the precious metals, and many other articles of commerce, go to market in a dress of gunny cloth.

The statistics of the development of the jute culture in India are impressive and suggestive. In 1862 India exported 10,000,000 pounds of fiber and rope and 300,000,000 yards of gunny cloth. In 1860 Great Britain employed more than 30,000 spindles in spinning 80,000,000 pounds of Indian jute. Recently the staple has risen to the dignity of the fourth place in the exports of India; only cotton, opium, and rice exceed it in commercial importance. Some of the Indian factories are immense. There is an establishment at Barnagpoor, near Calcutta, which employs more than 4,500 workmen, and annually manufactures more than 30,000,000 pounds of jute. In 1872 the total exportation of Indian jute was 700,000,000 pounds, of which Great Britain received upward of 395,000,000 pounds. In the same year more than 900,000 acres were devoted to the cultivation of jute in India, and in the thirteen provinces in which jute is principally raised, out of a population of 15,725,000, more than 1,350,000 were wholly or partly engaged in this occupation. These figures conclusively show the vast magnitude and importance of this industry to India. Other statistics will illustrate the value of this staple to an exclusively manufacturing community.

Nearly half a century ago some sagacious Scotchmen engaged in the manufacture of jute. Their humble experiment has developed into a success that has enriched Scotland and promoted the commerce of the world.

At first many difficulties arrested their progress. Much of the fiber was discolored by the tannic acid of the bark through improper methods of preparation, and it was only after years of persistent effort that a successful process of bleaching was discovered.

Again, the fiber stubbornly resisted the action of dyestuffs, and over this difficulty chemical science has yet only partially triumphed. Jute can now be dyed, but the colors are not fast. Still the variety of tints now imparted to jute permits it to be combined with other materials in cheap imitation of many valuable fabrics.

Jute is mixed with cotton, linen, and silk. It is a material part of twilled stair carpeting and low-priced broadcloth. In combination with other textiles it imitates the gloss of Irish linen, the luster of French silk, the beauty of Turkish rugs, and the splendor of Axminster, Kidderminster, Brussels, and Venetian carpets. Single or mixed, it enters into the manufacture of a thousand articles of commerce. In 1872 there were in Dundee about 100 jute mills, employing upward of 20,000 workmen and manufacturing more than 180,000,000 pounds of jute annually. In the same year nearly 50,000,000 gunny bags, most of which were made in Dundee, were exported from Great Britain. Of the 300,000,000 pounds of jute that were manufactured in the United Kingdom in 1876, 200,000,000 pounds were woven in the mills of Dundee. The annual value of the flax, hemp, and jute manufactured in Dundee is now $15,000,000. The jute factories of Dundee have created a flourishing city, given employment to thousands of workmen, diffused prosperity throughout a large community, promoted the commerce of Scotland in the importation of the raw material and the exportation of the manufactured product, and facilitated the movements of the cotton and grain crops of the world. What has been so successfully accomplished in Dundee can be done with a still grander success in the United States.

We not only can spin and weave the fiber, but we can also raise it. We not only can derive the profits of making the fabrics, but we can also enrich ourselves by the twofold economies of the growth and manufacture of the staple.

Under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture experiments in the culture of jute have been successfully tried in South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, and Texas. These trials conclusively established the facts that wherever in the Southern States there is a hot, damp climate and a moist soil of sandy clay or alluvial mold jute can be profitably raised. It is probable that much of the land now devoted to the growth of cotton, rice, and sugar-cane would yield larger returns if applied to the culture of jute. The plant matures in this country in about the same time that it does in India. The April plantings were cut in July and the June plantings were cut in September. Some of the stalks reached the height of 15 feet, and in some instances the fiber was, according to the judgment of experts, superior in strength to that of India.

The yield was in several cases at the rate of 3,500 pounds to the acre. These facts, so familiar to the Department of Agriculture, are here repeated for the information of those who have not seen the results of the experiments inaugurated by it. The trials that have been made strengthen hope into an assurance that jute can be successfully cultivated in the Gulf States and in Southern California.

The conditions of soil and climate and the practical tests of experiment are here so favorable as seriously to alarm the government of India. The official report of an Indian commission appointed by the state has expressed a grave apprehension of American competition in the culture of jute.

It is to be hoped that the enterprise of the South will prove that this apprehension was well grounded.

The economic importance of this culture to the United States is incalculable.

No country in the world is capable of deriving so vast a benefit from the industry as our own. The magnitude of our grain and cotton crops is unparalleled in other lands.

In 1870 the quantity of cereals and vegetables produced in the United States, and requiring to be sacked before they could be sent to market was largely more than 1,500,000,000 bushels. Ultimately this vast mass was handled in bulk by elevators, barges, canal-boats, railroads, and steam-ships; but before it could be brought from the various points of production to these facilities of transportation it had to be inclosed in bags. If it were necessary to renew these bags every year, it would now cost the United States $1,000,000 annually for its grain, pulse, and potato sacks. This calculation is based upon the assumption that all the bags are made of jute. If the material were cotton, flax, or hemp, the expense would be still greater. But as the sacks last several years, the annual cost is not probably one-fifth of the above aggregate. In 1876, the cotton crop of the United States was about 4,500,000 bales, and at the ruling rates the cost of the gunny cloth in which this cotton was sent to market was not less than $3,900,000.

Unlike the grain sacks, the jute baling can not be used a second time, and therefore a wholly fresh supply is necessary every year. Our native production of fibers is greatly inadequate to meet the demand. In 1868 the United States paid $23,000,000 for imported flax, hemp, and jute. In 1879 the cost of imported fibers was more than $30,000,000 in gold. The quantity of jute alone imported in 1870 was upward of 19,000,000 pounds. Yet these figures, although large, but imperfectly indicate the demand which there would be for jute if it were a domestic production. The cheaper fiber would, of course, be substituted for the more costly wherever it was possible, and accordingly jute, in consequence of its comparative inexpensiveness, would supplant hemp and flax in the manufacture of carpets and many other fabrics. For bagging and cotton baling jute has already most entirely superseded the use of the other fibers.

But possibly it will be found better, in order more fully to meet the varying needs of commerce, to interweave jute with cotton, flax, and hemp; and in that event the introduction of jute, instead of depressing, would stimulate the culture of these fibers. But the vast need of our country for grain-sacks, cotton-bale covers, and a cheap warp for a woof of other textile materials will create a correspondingly vast demand for home-grown jute. It will indicate a lack of Southern enterprise if American jute does not yet rise to a textile importance second only to that of American cotton.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. That will do for the present. There are two or three other points that I will get in on the next line.

Mr. MCKINLEY. In connection with the extract just read, I ask to have printed a protest by the same authority, Professor Waterhouse, on the same subject.

The protest is as follows:

To the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

A purely disinterested regard for the material prosperity of the country is my only apology for this address.

The new tariff bill proposes the abolition of the imposts on foreign jute and ramie. There are weighty reasons which plead for the exemption of these fibers from the list of free imports.

Jute is one of the most important productions of India. The variety of its uses is almost illimitable. The range of manufactures from this textile extends from coarse matting and cotton baling to fine imitations of linen and silk. The growing needs of mankind are steadily increasing the demand for this fiber. Jute is annually enriching India with a productive wealth of scores of millions.

Ramie is the strongest fiber in the world. Narrower than jute in the range of its applied uses, it is superior in its suitability for finer fabrics. Barely inferior to silk in beauty of luster, it surpasses its glossy rival in durability. It is woven into textures of practical utility and elegant luxury. It is wrought into cordage of extraordinary strength, laces of filmy delicacy, and plushes of exquisite beauty. The demand for this valuable fiber far exceeds the supply.

The luxuriant growth of jute and ramie in the Gulf States shows that the conditions of soil and climate are suited to their culture. Numerous experiments, continued through a succession of years, justify the assurance of Southern farmers that "these plants can be cultivated almost as easily as Indian corn." The success of repeated trials has dispelled every intelligent doubt that the soil of the South is adapted to the growth of these textiles.

A diversification of industries is essential to the highest welfare of the country. The Southern States have long been impoverished by an unwise devotion to the cultivation of a single staple. There is no truer economic maxim than that variety of employment is a productive factor of national wealth. The culture of jute and ramie meets an imperative requirement. The tillage of these plants would not only richly diversify Southern agriculture, but would employ labor at seasons when cotton needs least attention, and would bring returns at times when the income from cotton is not available. Industries opening such copious sources of public wealth and so happily supplying the wants of both labor and capital are worthy of legislative encouragement.

The prospects are now bright. Several companies have been formed to promote the success of the new industries. Capital has been invested in the culture of the plants, in the decortication of the stalks, and in the manufacture of the fiber. From the outset the Southern farmer has encountered no impediments in raising jute and ramie. Irrespective of Congressional legislation, the sole obstacle to success has been the want of a cheap and rapid means of preparing the fiber. The only difficulty of the problem begins after the easy work of the planter ends. For several years there have been machines which worked with a fair degree of efficiency, and since the last harvest two other decorticators have been invented. Experts who have seen the operation of the latest inventions bear testimony to their practical excellence.

And now, when there is every assurance of success, a bill which proposes to remove the duties on imported jute and ramie has been brought before Congress. The passage of this measure would probably prove fatal to the new industries. In India and China the wages of agricultural labor vary from 3 to 15 cents a day. Without the assistance of a tariff the comparatively high-priced labor of the South would contend in vain against such competition. Even the aid of improved machinery will not alone equalize the cost of the products.

It is true that, in spite of the cheap labor of India, unprotected American cotton controls the markets of the world, yet in this instance there is an equivalent to a tariff in skillful husbandry and the peculiarly adapted fertility of Southern uplands and sea islands. But the soil of the South has no special superiority for the production of jute and ramie. These plants flourish in the Gulf States and produce fiber of surpassing excellence, but they do not grow there with a greater luxuriance than they do in Oriental lands. Hence their profitable cultivation in the United States implies not only effective machinery for the treatment of the stalks, but also the encouragement of protective imposts on foreign textiles. The economic superiority of mechanical to manual methods of preparing the fiber, together with the aid of a tariff which would virtually equalize the difference between Oriental and American wages, would insure the prosperity of new industries.

Decorticators are now so effective as to render the cultivation of protected jute and ramie a profitable industry. But even if all existing machines were radically defective, it is probable that not many years would elapse before the mechanical talent of our country would remedy their imperfections. The problem which challenges solution is far easier than many others which the inventive genius of Americans has already solved. The ingenuity which has overcome so many greater obstacles will not permit itself to be vanquished by a less difficulty. The prize of success is too splendid to remain long unwon. The fortunate inventor will not only acquire wealth and fame, but will also cause an industrial development like that which Whitney effected, and will raise two other textiles to a commercial importance second only to that of cotton.

Apart from legislative protection, the sole prerequisite to success is a thoroughly efficient decorticator, and even if such a machine does not now exist, there is every probability that the want will soon be met. Heretofore the singular reluctance of Southern planters to engage in new enterprises has disheartened hope and repelled inventors from a problem whose solution seemed to offer no adequate reward. But latterly a deep public interest in the culture of jute and ramie has supplanted the former indifference, and now the opportunities of enrichment by industries whose probabilities of success border upon certainty are attracting many ingenious minds to this field of invention.

Under circumstances which seemingly assure the prosperity of the new culture, is it wise for Congress to make the proposed change? The abolition of duties on rival imports would benefit only a comparatively small number of people, but the successful growth of jute and ramie in the South would add large and richly productive resources to the wealth of the nation. In their crude and manufactured forms jute and ramie are yielding India and China an annual revenue of not less than $150,000,000. But Texas alone can raise more jute and ramie than India and China have ever yet produced. Under the patronage of wise laws, with the greater productiveness of intelligent agriculture, and with the economies of efficient machinery, the South ought at an early day to derive from the tillage of these staples as large an income as India and China now do.

This attempt to diversify the productions of the South may eventually fail, but when the probabilities and results of establishing prosperous industries are so great it would seem to be the dictate of sound statesmanship to foster the cultivation of these textiles by protective legislation and to defer the withdrawal of duties from competitive fibers until the impossibility of success has been demonstrated. It will not be necessary to wait long for a definite solution of the problem. In a few years the success or failure of this endeavor to raise new textiles in the South will be clearly ascertained. This season thousands of acres of jute and ramie will be planted in the Gulf States. Tests on so extensive a scale will soon determine the cost of production. If the culture of the new products ultimately proves unprofitable, then every consideration of public policy will sanction the removal of the duties on imported jute and ramie. Meanwhile it will do no harm to delay action. There seems to be no present need of the proposed change. No fiscal motive could have suggested the alteration, for the effect which a relinquishment of the imposts would exert upon the revenues of the Government would be too inconsiderable to influence the deliberations of Congress. It is earnestly hoped that our national council will not, by an unnecessary act of legislation, prostrate industries whose prosperous development, now apparently assured, would largely contribute to the enrichment of the South and the conveniences of mankind.

S. WATERHOUSE.

WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY, ST. LOUIS, March 20, 1888.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the amendment, and move to strike out the last word, "butts."

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman withdraw his amendment unless by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. SCOTT. I object, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 45, noes 65.

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if he desires to make any further remarks on this subject the Chair will recognize him on the next line to move to strike out the word "jute."

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, we will let things take their regular parliamentary course.

Mr. SCOTT. I move, sir, that the vote be announced and reported to the House, and I ask for a call of the House.

The vote by tellers was announced as—ayes 15, noes 80.

Mr. DALZELL. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair, in accordance with the rule, directs the roll to be called for the purpose of reporting the names of absentees to the House.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Allen, Mass.	Dargan,	Hovey,	Phelps,
Allen, Mich.	Davenport,	Howard,	Pidcock,

Mr. LYMAN (during the call). I desire to ask that my colleague from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] be excused. He is not able to be here.

The CHAIRMAN. This is not a call for the presentation of excuses, but simply to ascertain the names of those who are absent. Only the House can excuse a member.

The roll-call being concluded,

The CHAIRMAN said: The roll-call being now completed, the committee, in accordance with the rule, will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, had found itself without a quorum, whereupon the Chairman directed the roll to be called, and now reported the names of absentees to the House, to be entered on the Journal.

The SPEAKER. It appears from the report just presented that 209 members, being more than a quorum, have answered to their names.

In accordance with the rule, the Committee of the Whole will resume its session.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to strike out line 35.

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. BURROWS called for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 45, noes 86.

Mr. KELLEY. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. KELLEY and Mr. SCOTT were appointed.

The tellers having made a partial count, the Chair announced—ayes 5, noes 78.

Mr. KELLEY. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will retain their places. The Chair requests that the gentlemen who have not voted will pass between the tellers, so that the committee may not find itself without a quorum.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to inquire whether we can not come to some accommodation with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY]. If he wants time for debate, we will concede any reasonable time; if he wants liberty to make any motion, there is no objection to that, so far as I know.

Mr. KELLEY. I was reading from an official report on the matter of jute; and five minutes having been occupied, I asked leave to withdraw my former amendment and substitute another, in order to permit the completion of the reading of an extract from that report. I had stated that it was a special report on this question from the Agricultural Department, having been made by Professor S. Waterhouse, of the Washington University of St. Louis. I had not stated, as I might have done, that this gentleman had made the circuit of the world in order to study the question of the development of jute and ramie.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether the gentleman is in order now in making these remarks?

Mr. KELLEY. I am simply responding to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a question of order. I object to any speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state again to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that the subject of the next line is jute, and on that he can be recognized.

Mr. KELLEY. I have no further statement to make. I am here as a teller, and ready to stand by parliamentary law and usage and courtesy. [Applause and cries of "That is right!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to find out what the difficulty with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is.

Mr. KELLEY. I have stated all that I have to say.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. So long as the gentleman simply stands on his feet and insists upon a quorum, while gentlemen on his side refuse to vote, of course he can not proceed.

Mr. KELLEY. I am not here to be lectured while performing a duty to which the Chair has assigned me, even by so distinguished a person as the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. As I have not undertaken to "lecture" the gentleman, his observations are entirely gratuitous.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] told us the other day that this bill could not pass, and filibustering may as well come now as later. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the vote on the pending question. Gentlemen who have not voted are requested to pass between the tellers. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The regular order on that side of the House is filibustering.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was only exercising his right on this floor; and we on this side do not propose to be bulldozed.

Mr. DAVIS. It is a deliberate attempt to gag this side of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MILLIKEN. And gentlemen on that side are obstructing the business.

Mr. SCOTT. Allow me to make a brief explanation. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KELLEY. I object to any explanation here; the gentleman should remember that he silenced me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. They will neither vote nor talk. You do not want to talk yourself nor let anybody else talk.

Mr. KELLEY. I was silenced by an objection from your side.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. REED. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED. Has the Chair decided that an amendment could not be withdrawn before a vote is taken upon it, except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so decided.

The Chair will cause the Clerk to read the fifth clause of Rule XXIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

5. When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the rule under which the committee is now proceeding to consider this bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Simply for exercising the privilege of a member on this floor I am charged with obstructing business here. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KELLEY. I will say to the gentleman that he was away at the convention when usage established the fact that amendments were permitted to be withdrawn in order to make way for other amendments and for debate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That was done, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows very well, only by unanimous consent.

Mr. KELLEY. Well, now, again I protest against being lectured——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And without unanimous consent it can not be done. Every privilege of debate has been accorded.

Mr. KELLEY. I say I protest against being lectured by a gentleman even as eminent as you are, sir. [Laughter and cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman is simply seeking to embarrass the consideration of the measure before the House.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will you call that gentleman from Arkansas to order? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the line which has been read. The tellers are upon the floor, the committee has been dividing, and those gentlemen who have not voted are requested to pass between the tellers. A quorum has not yet voted.

Mr. SCOTT. As my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has made a speech since I objected to his first effort to continue the debate, I think it is no more than justice to me that I should be permitted also to make a statement. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SCOTT. I did not object to the gentleman withdrawing his motion in any feeling.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not care about what the feeling may be; you did it.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. OWEN, Mr. DAVIS, and others. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Gentlemen are demanding the regular order. Well, you will have the regular order, and it will be called a great many more times hereafter. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Well, it does not become the gentleman to threaten us. That does not come with any propriety from that side. It is most unseemly.

Mr. SCOTT. I am not threatening; I am simply telling the gentleman what will be the result.

I move that the committee rise.

Mr. NELSON. I made that motion awhile ago, and the Chair held that it was not in order. Is it any more in order now?

Mr. SCOTT. Then I move that the roll be called.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is acting as one of the tellers.

Mr. NELSON. That does not give him any more right to make the motion than I have. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is still dividing, and the count has not yet been reported to the House.

The Chair begs to announce the result of the vote to the committee.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I believe there is some misunderstanding as to the pending question. I think it is very proper that we should have the stenographer read the exact motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and all that occurred in that connection for the information of the committee. I make that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the exact condition of the motion for the information of the committee.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania first moved to strike out line 35, relating to jute butts. That was debated under the rule for five minutes on each side. Thereafter the gentleman moved to strike out the last word, which was also debated on both sides. Then he desired permission to withdraw the amendment and submit another, in order to continue the debate. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the right of the Chair [Mr. SCOTT] objected. Thereupon the committee proceeded to take a vote.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit a correction?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. I think what took place was exactly as I shall now read:

The Clerk read as follows:
35. Jute butts.
Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out line 35.

And thereupon Mr. KELLEY had read as a part of his remarks the statement of Professor Waterhouse, to which he had been referring. The official record then goes on:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.
Mr. KELLEY. That will do for the present. There are two or three other things that I will get in on the next line.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] then took the floor and read another statement of Professor Waterhouse upon the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].
Mr. KELLEY. I withdraw the amendment, and move to strike out the last word, "butts."
Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, can the gentleman withdraw his amendment unless by unanimous consent?
The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent.
Mr. SCOTT. I object, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The motion was made as stated——

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. If this amendment is disposed of or withdrawn, in either event is not another amendment in order to this line, under which we could have five minutes' discussion, and is not the whole controversy one of temper, which, however, commenced with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], and which is sought to be attributed to this side of the House? Now, had we not better, by unanimous consent, withdraw the amendment and go on?

Mr. SCOTT. Since there has been speaking here, I claim the floor. You can not call the regular order on me if I have the floor. I propose, as far as in my power, that any amendments made in the interest of this bill shall be fully and freely discussed; but upon amendments of a dilatory character withdrawn at the end of five minutes I will stand here until the 4th of March and ask a vote.

Mr. REED. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] having been absent from the proceedings of the House, has, on account of a lack of knowledge of what has been going on, made a suggestion which arises from his lack of knowledge on the subject.

Mr. SCOTT. Perhaps so.

Mr. REED. He says he is opposed to formal amendments made for the purpose of delay. There never have any such amendments been made, nor is it the purpose nor object of a formal amendment to make delay, but to permit discussion. There never has been since this bill was before the committee any thing except bona fide discussion. There never has been any attempt to induce members to talk. There never has been any disposition to cause any unnecessary discussion. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] It has all been as spontaneous as the action of the last Pennsylvania Democratic convention.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Just as spontaneous as the gentleman means to indicate their action was—cut and dried.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Do you say it was not spontaneous?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not say any such thing; your colleague means that. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, which is the announcement of the vote, the tellers having finished their labors. The Chair will announce the vote—ayes 5, noes 87.

Mr. KELLEY. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. SCOTT. The Chair says the gentleman from Pennsylvania. There are two gentlemen from Pennsylvania acting as tellers. I would like to know which gentleman the Chair means.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman on the left of the Chair [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. I want the country to know I am resisting such an attempt at tyranny.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am glad our friends are proud of their filibustering; which is simply against the rules and the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Abbott,	Bryce,	Cutcheon,	Hatch,
Allen, Mass.	Burnes,	Davenport,	Heard,
Allen, Mich.	Burnett,	Davidson, Fla.	Henderson, Iowa
Anderson, Kans.	Campbell, F., N. Y.	Dibble,	Hitt,

McKinney,	Plumb,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules the committee will now rise, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] will take the chair.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, had found itself without a quorum, whereupon the Chair had caused the roll to be called, and now reported the names of the absentees to the House, to be entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and seven members, more than a quorum, having answered to their names, the committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out line 35 of this bill.

The Chair being in doubt as to the result, a division was demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 36, noes 82.

Mr. KELLEY. No quorum.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know exactly what this division is on. I was not in the House when it was commenced.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been some misapprehension about it and the Chair will state it again. The Chair was under the impression that the motion had been made to strike out the last word before this amendment was offered, but it appears from a reference to the record that the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left of the Chair [Mr. KELLEY] stated that he withdrew his amendment (which was to strike out line 35, the words "jute butts"), and moved to strike out the last word "butts," whereupon the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] objected, and the Chair held that the amendment could not be withdrawn except by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. Was not the last amendment pending the motion to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment pending was to strike out both words.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] afterwards moved to strike out the last word, and that amendment took precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was this: "I withdraw the amendment and move to strike out the last word." Thereupon the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the right of the Chair [Mr. SCOTT] objected to his colleague [Mr. KELLEY] withdrawing his amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If that amendment was withdrawn, would not the line stand as it is in the bill, and is not that what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] wants, to have the bill stand as it is?

Several MEMBERS on the Democratic side. No.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, if I am now entitled to the floor, I think I can explain the situation without having the "regular order" called upon me. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] arose in his place and proposed to amend by striking out a certain line in this bill. He then sent up to the Chair a consular report, which, if he had desired to have it appear in the debates, he could have got leave to have printed.

Mr. KELLEY. It was not a consular report.

Mr. SCOTT. Well, it was a document which the gentleman could have asked to have printed if he desired it to appear in the debates. The five minutes of the time of the committee allotted to my colleague was occupied in reading that document. Then, at the expiration of the five minutes allotted to him, my colleague got up and asked to withdraw his amendment, and proposed to strike out the last word, in order to occupy five minutes more of the time of this committee, in violation of the rules of this House.

Mr. KELLEY. I deny the accusation.

Mr. SCOTT. I have the floor, sir. You sit down.

Mr. KELLEY. I deny the accusation.

Mr. SCOTT. You sit down. You sit down.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLEY. The House was voting, and I say the gentleman [Mr. SCOTT] is out of order in interrupting a vote to make a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the taking of the vote by tellers.

Mr. KELLEY. Exactly. [Cries of "Regular order!" on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania on the right [Mr. SCOTT] asked permission to make a statement, and, as no objection was made, he proceeded to do so. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair will appoint tellers. The Chair desires first to make a statement to the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the left [Mr. KELLEY]. The Chair perhaps misled the gentleman by a statement made a while ago, that he might move to strike out the next line. The Chair might have stated, and does now state, to the gentleman that if this amendment is voted down, it will still be in order for him to move to strike out the last word.

Mr. REED. I submit that as a parliamentary matter it was entirely in order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to do as he did, that is, to move to strike out the last word pending the motion to strike out the last line.

The CHAIRMAN. That was in order.

Mr. REED. And that being so, the fact that the other gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] objected to that which was unparliamentary did not prevent that which was parliamentary from going into effect. Therefore I submit that we ought now to be voting upon the question of striking out the last word; or, rather, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] ought to have the floor in support of his amendment to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] perhaps did not intend the parliamentary effect of his statement. He said, according to the record, "I withdraw the amendment (which amendment was to strike out the line), and move to strike out the last word."

Mr. REED. And the last part of that proposition was parliamentarily admissible. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] had a right to object to the first part, the proposition to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman [Mr. SCOTT] did object to the first part.

Mr. REED. Yes; but he had no right to object to the last part, the amendment which is now pending.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not object to the last part.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary statement. From the time you took the chair, sir, for the consideration of this bill by paragraphs there had been no exception to the practice of an amendment being withdrawn in order that another might be made, but to-day the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], who was not present during the time when such parliamentary courtesy prevailed without disturbance of the temper on either side of the House, arose here and, as dictatorily as though the Keifer gag-law had already been adopted, silenced me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply desires to state that it would be in order——

Mr. KELLEY. If I may be permitted now to call up my amendment and proceed with my argument, I shall be glad to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply desires to state that it was in order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to move to strike out the last word without withdrawing his first motion.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. He does that now.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. [Cries of "Regular order!" on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SCOTT. I wish to inquire whether it is in order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to amend his motion. He first asked permission to withdrew his amendment; to that I objected. He then moved to strike out the last word; to that I did not object.

Mr. BURROWS. That is in order.

Mr. SCOTT. Are we not bound now to have a vote on the gentleman's proposition, I objecting to the withdrawal? I put that inquiry to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] need not have asked permission to withdraw the regular amendment, which was to strike out the line. He did, however, ask permission; and to that the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the right [Mr. SCOTT] objected. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] had taken the floor and moved to strike out the last word, it would have been in order pending the other amendment, because, notwithstanding a motion to strike out the whole clause, a motion to strike out a part of it would be in order as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I have the floor, as I understand.

Mr. REED. The Chair can straighten this matter out. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] did make the motion just indicated by the Chair, but the attention of the Chair was inadvertently directed to the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] as if that were the vital point; but if the Chair had had the whole matter in mind, he would have said that the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania was a valid one, but nevertheless the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to strike out the last word was properly before the committee pending the other motion, because it is in order to perfect the clause or paragraph which it is proposed to strike out.

Mr. SCOTT. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania acquiesced in the proposition I made, and appealed to the House.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not a fact that the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was, "I withdraw the amendment and move to strike out the last word?"

The CHAIRMAN. The language of the gentleman as taken down at the time was, "I withdraw the amendment and move to strike out the last word."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then there was objection to the withdrawal and the House was dividing on that.

Mr. REED. The House could not divide on that.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The point of order I make is, that nothing else is now in order but the completion of the vote which was being taken.

The CHAIRMAN. As there has been some misapprehension, the Chair desires the committee to understand the exact situation. The Chair will state again that the gentleman from Pennsylvania need not have asked to withdraw his original amendment; and if he had not done so there would have been no occasion to object. But he did make that request, and objection was made. The Chair then proceeded to put the question. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] now moves the amendment which has been indicated, and the committee will give consent to allow the question to be put again, the Committee of the Whole, the Chair suggests, can be extricated from this difficulty.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can a gentleman offer an amendment under the five-minute rule, debate that amendment for five minutes, then move another amendment and debate that for five minutes, without giving any other gentleman an opportunity to occupy the floor?

Mr. PAYSON. That is not the pending question.

Mr. BLAND. Such a proceeding, I submit, violates a direct rule governing our proceedings in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. After the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] had spoken five minutes in favor of his amendment, the Chair would have recognized any gentleman who desired to speak in opposition to it. No gentleman rose for that purpose. It was then in order for any gentleman to take the floor and move another amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] desired to move another amendment, and the Chair recognized him for that purpose. But the gentleman stated that he desired to withdraw his previous amendment, and to that objection was made.

Mr. OATES. I wish to put a parliamentary inquiry just there. There was pending, as I understand, a motion to strike out the line.

The CHAIRMAN. There was.

Mr. OATES. And the proposition to withdraw that amendment was objected to, so that the amendment is still pending. Now, when there is a motion pending to strike out a whole line, is it in order to move to strike out the last word?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Several MEMBERS. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending a motion to strike out the whole of a clause or paragraph or section, it is in order to move to amend the section by striking out only a portion of it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make this suggestion: When a vote is being taken on a proposition, and a request to withdraw it is objected to, nothing else is in order but to proceed with the vote. In this case there was objection.

Mr. REED. The objection was fatal without a vote.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand that.

Mr. REED. And the Chair inadvertently ordered a vote upon one amendment when he should have ordered it upon another. We can now get out of the difficulty by taking the right vote.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not quite a correct statement. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] did not make the simple motion to strike out the last word, but, as has been stated, he undertook to withdraw the previous amendment and then to move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] asked whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] could withdraw his amendment, and the Chair replied that he could not, except by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] thereupon objected to the withdrawal of that amendment. It would then have been in order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to move to strike out the last word.

Mr. REED. But he had already done so; and the Chair will see upon reflection that he had the right to do so, and that the Chair ordered the vote on the other proposition by mistake.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, the question right here is whether upon that statement being made and the objection being made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT], and that objection being sustained by the Chair, whether the record does not show the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] accepted it and permitted it to come to a vote. Instead of the vote being as stated by the Chair, the vote was cast in a way which would preclude any motion to strike out any portion of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this whole matter might be amicably arranged by allowing this motion to be withdrawn, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] permitted to address the committee on the motion to strike out the last word. If there be no objection, the Chair will entertain the gentleman's motion to strike out the last word and recognize him as entitled to the floor. The Chair has sustained the objection that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has no right to withdraw his amendment striking out the line in reference to jute butts, which the Chair now understands he does not desire to withdraw, but to move an amendment to strike out the last word.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KELLEY. Not in my time.

Mr. SCOTT. Not in the time of the gentleman. I understand the decision of the Chair to be that this gentleman can rise and move to strike out a line and that he can occupy five minutes under the rules of the House in discussing that proposition, and that at the expiration of five minutes he can offer to withdraw that amendment and move to strike out the last word and occupy another five minutes on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not decide that at all. That is not the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. SCOTT. That is what I understood the Chair to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair merely said that he thought this matter might be amicably arranged at this time, and he thought it should be done in order that the business of the House might be proceeded with. The Chair suggested that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] be allowed to move to strike out the last word, and occupy five minutes on that amendment. It was the duty of the Chair to recognize any gentleman for five minutes in opposition, but no gentleman took the floor for that purpose, and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania taking the floor could submit another amendment.

Mr. McSHANE. While the committee is dividing?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks for unanimous consent——

Mr. McSHANE. Is it in order to discuss a pro forma amendment when the committee is dividing on an amendment to strike out a line of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided that. The Chair asked for unanimous consent——

Mr. McSHANE. There is no consent given to withdraw the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked for unanimous consent, and heard no objection. The Chair asked that this question might be withdrawn for the present, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was recognized. If there be no objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. McSHANE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. What is it the gentleman objects to?

Mr. McSHANE. To the discussion of this matter pending a division of the committee.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman wants to punish his own side in order to get a quorum upon an immaterial question.

Mr. McSHANE. I do not want to punish anybody, but to get a vote to which we are entitled on the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman has the right to withdraw his request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so stated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If he does not persist in his request he can move his amendment in regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman indicated that he did not desire to withdraw the amendment which he offered, to strike out the line concerning jute butts, but simply desired to move to strike out the last word, which, if he had made at the time, he would have had the right to be recognized.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman makes a substantive amendment and speaks on it, and no one answers it, the vote must be taken on it. Now, can he move a proposition and occupy five minutes on it and then make another proposition and occupy another five minutes on that? The rule, sir, never contemplated any such thing as making one amendment and making a speech on it, and then making another amendment and making another speech on it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the duty of the Chair to recognize any gentleman in opposition; but no gentleman having risen for that purpose it was the province of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move to perfect the paragraph before the vote is taken, and the Chair recognized the gentleman to make an amendment for that purpose. If there be no objection the Chair will recognize the gentleman fron Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] to proceed.

Mr. McSHANE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Nebraska that the gentleman from Pennsylvania now withdraws his request for permission to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. And asks to be recognized to proceed with the debate. There is nothing in the way of the Chair recognizing some gentleman to oppose the amendment but the fact that the committee was dividing and no quorum appeared. If the gentleman insists upon the point of no quorum of course no other business can be transacted until that point is settled.

Mr. McSHANE. But the House is voting upon an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has not been disposed of for the want of a quorum.

Mr. KELLEY. I desired, if possible, to settle this to-day. I did not want to leave it as a pending matter to come up in the legislative day of to-morrow; but if gentlemen desire to perpetuate the question I will be on hand to continue it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to make this suggestion, which I think will meet the views of both the gentlemen from Pennsylvania? and it is that there is a parliamentary way of disposing of this question. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has offered an amendment and spoken in favor of it. It is the right of any gentleman who is opposed to the first amendment offered by the gentleman to rise in his place and seek recognition for the purpose of discussing that amendment. If no gentleman desires to speak in opposition, then the gentleman from Pennsylvania will himself be entitled to recognition, if he so desires, for a further amendment. That is the parliamentary way of disposing of the matter.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to ask my friend to yield to me for a moment right there. Will he hold to the doctrine that if an amendment be proposed on this side of the House, and is advocated here and nobody replies to it, debate is thereby terminated on the paragraph, whether it be a line or more? That seems to me to be a new species of tactics issued last evening by one who has not been here to see how courteous this debate has been running.

Mr. McMILLIN. Permit me to state that my suggestion was not an inspiration derived from the proceedings of last night or any other night. I stated what was the parliamentary law and usage by which we must all stand or fall.

Mr. KELLEY. I believe your purpose was good.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the right of every member here present is, when an amendment is offered, to ask to be recognized to discuss it, under the rule, for five minutes. Then it is the right of any other gentleman to speak in opposition to it. That right was about to be cut off by the inadvertence of my friend; I do not say by his desire, but the effect of his suggestion would be, if he had been permitted to proceed, to accomplish just that result. After further debate upon his part on the second amendment he could withdraw that and offer another, and so on, indefinitely, and thus destroy the very rule which he must admit is for the preservation of the orderly proceedings of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. One moment——

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman moved an amendment, and occupied five minutes in debate upon it, and desired to proceed. Now, my suggestion is that the Chair can recognize any gentleman who wants to discuss the first amendment in opposition to it, and after that debate has been exhausted, then the gentleman can offer his second amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I beg to correct the gentleman in a single point, and most courteously. Nobody did rise to reply in debate to the amendment I offered. I sent to the desk and had read an extract from a pamphlet and nobody rose to reply; and therefore, if this side can not or could not offer a further amendment, debate was cut off and a precedent was established by which the bill should be rushed through, practically without discussion. Desiring, however, to have that discussion, and having in my hand official information of the highest value, I sought an opportunity not to put it in the RECORD, but, if possible, to make it reach the ears and intelligence of the members of the committee.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I believe that, as my friend from Pennsylvania occupied the floor for five minutes, I now, if I may be recognized, am entitled to occupy it in opposition to his amendment. Am I correct?

Mr. REED. If that is the understanding, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desired to have that course taken, but understood the gentleman from Nebraska to object on the ground that the committee was dividing and the point of no quorum was made.

Mr. McSHANE. I withdraw that.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it is in order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to proceed.

Mr. SCOTT. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to say here in all frankness and candor that in objecting to the withdrawal of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] it was not factious opposition on my part. But, sir, I do believe that the amendment proposed here to this bill was made and withdrawn simply for the purpose of killing time; I will not say delaying this bill, but it is a natural inference I believed, sir, that it was my duty as a member of this House, in behalf of the business men of this country, whose interests are more or less affected by even the discussion of this bill [derisive cries on the Republican side], to make every endeavor to get a vote on the bill at the earliest possible date, so that the country would know—so that the business men of the country would know—what they have to do to manage their own affairs. I had no other interest, Mr. Chairman, and no other object in view, because, as a business man, and I claim to be one, I know that, whether this bill may be for the best interests of the country if it should become a law, or whether it may be detrimental, during its agitation no merchant, no manufacturer, no business man affected by it can tell from one day to the next what he can do or ought to do in the management of his business. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I repeat I had no other object in view; and as for my getting up here to antagonize any gentleman on this floor, with any partisan feeling, it was the last thought that entered my mind.

But when I saw my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania arise and move to strike out a line, and then send up to the Clerk's desk to have read a document which he could have had printed in his remarks, occupying the time to which he was entitled in the reading, then withdrawing the amendment which he had proposed, and then moving to strike out the last word, thereby occupying ten minutes in place of five, to which he was entitled under the rules, in the reading of the document sent to the Speaker's desk, I could come to but one conclusion—that the gentleman was endeavoring to talk this bill to death. I did not believe that was in the interest either of the gentlemen on the other side or of our side. I believe that both parties in this country can meet the issues involved in this bill by honestly saying, we have done nothing to obstruct it. If the majority of this House can pass this bill, they are responsible for it, and alone responsible. If the minority are able to defeat it, let them defeat it, and we will go to the country upon that issue.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this amendment is now exhausted.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out the last word. Protesting that I have offered no amendment during the last ten or twelve days of this discussion for any other than creditable and patriotic motives, I have the right to infer that had the gentleman been in his seat to observe me he could not have assumed that my purposes were not frank and were not patriotic. I have brought to the attention of the committee this remarkable report of Professor Waterhouse on jute and ramie and have read that portion which shows that in 1828 India raised but 40,000 pounds of jute, which were then worth but $300, and that in 1872 she raised 700,000,000 pounds of jute, and that jute has risen to be the fourth industry of India. I want to show to the people of the South that they have land admirably adapted to competing with India and that they have labor docile, ready, and admirably adapted to compete with British India manufacturers. This writer says:

An interest in the economic welfare of the United States naturally suggests the inquiry whether an industry productive of so great affluence can not be established in this country. The substantial identity of climate and soil in some districts of Bengal and certain sections of the South creates a presumption that jute could be naturalized in the Gulf States. This probability practice tests have strengthened into certainty. Hundreds of successful experiments have shown the ease with which jute can be raised in the Southern States. The results of many of these trials have been published in the reports of the Department of Agriculture. The accounts which, in return for distribution of seeds, have been personally received would fill many pages. They are unanimous in their testimony. They prove beyond the possibility of intelligent doubt that under proper conditions of soil and moisture jute thrives on the borders of the Gulf with great luxuriance. But few of the tropic weeds whose noxious exuberance seems to be in inverse ratio to their value exceed it in rankness of growth. Some of the reports assert that jute can be raised as easily as Indian corn.

In 1881 Mr. Drummond, of the British legation at Washington, deemed the subject of jute culture in the United States worthy of a special report to the English Government. He says:

Experiments were made in those (Southern) States which proved that the cultivation and preparation of these fibers (ramie and jute) is practicable and profitable.

Last year 1,500 packages of seeds were distributed to the farmers in Louisiana, and reports have come in that the jute plant flourishes in every parish, growing in the alluvial soil to a height of 15 feet and in the pine flats and on the hills to 10 and 12 feet. Now this is interesting to us, for all manufacturing countries have been dependent upon India for their supply of jute.

There is no need of further experiments to corroborate what has been so fully demonstrated. It is now a well-established fact that jute flourishes as luxuriantly in the United States as in India, and experts have testified that the fiber when properly prepared is quite equal to that of Bengal. If, then, the effort to introduce the culture of jute into this country is unsuccessful, the failure will not be due to the fact that the plant will not grow on American soil.

In India jute is raised almost exclusively on ground that has been flooded by the annual overflow of the rivers. The alluvial deposits left by the inundation forms just the soil which the plant requires. The bottom lands of the Lower Mississippi closely resemble the jute fields of India.

There are in the South extensive tracts not suited to the cultivation of sugar or cotton, but well adapted to the growth of jute. If the plant will flourish on the salt marshes that fringe the Gulf, the area of land available for this tillage is almost immeasurable. The capacity of these lands should be thoroughly tested. If suited to the production of jute they can be converted into prolific sources of public prosperity.

In India the mass of the people has an inertia which the forces of modern civilization can but sluggishly move. Utterly unacquainted with improved processes, the native workmen plod on in the unthrifty ways of their fathers. By always sending the best jute to market and reserving the poorest for seed they have produced a marked deterioration in the quality of the fiber. The inferiority of recent products is a matter of universal observation and complaint. A desire to escape the oppressive exaction of Indian monopolists as well as to secure better material has led the manufacturers of Dundee to try extensive and costly experiments in Egypt. But while the soil of the Delta is well suited to the production of jute, the intellectual and industrial character of its inhabitants does not indicate a successful result. The same lethargy and indifference to modern methods which are proving so disastrous in India will in all probability insure failure in Egypt.

But the South has cheap and docile labor which can be easily trained to the requisite degree of skill. Intelligent experts superintending every operation of the new industry will apply to the cultivation and treatment of jute the best processes which science has discovered. Experience will determine the exact conditions of soil and moisture best adapted to the growth of the plant, and a careful selection of the seed of the finest stalks will soon improve the quality of the fiber. It is probable that in the course of years American-grown jute will attain an excellence as high and distinctive as that of sea-island cotton. A vigilant attention to every means of improvement can not fail to produce a fiber of superior strength, fineness, and beauty. The yield per acre in the South has often been larger than that of India. Scientific agriculture, enrichin g the soil with a generous supply of plant food and preventing its rapid exhaustion by a judicious rotation of crops, ought assuredly to develop a greater fertility than that produced by a system of ignorant and wasteful tillage.

The excellence of the fiber is generally proportioned to the freedom of the plant from branches. When there are no offshoots the filaments have greater length, softness, and gloss. But thick sowing seems to be the only practicable way of preventing branching. If, therefore, the seed is sown broadcast, it should be scattered with a liberal hand; but if it is planted in drills the rows should be near each other. Then the struggle for light and air will cause the plants to grow tall, straight, and branchless.

In India the plan of planting in successive months has been tried. The example may be worthy of American imitation. If the seed were sown at intervals in April, May, and June, so the harvest would not be all gathered at one time a less number of machines and a smaller force of workmen would be required to handle the crop. In a double sense, the smaller the plant the less would be the outlay. An income at seasons of the year when the returns of other crops are not available would not be the least important advantage which this system would confer upon the planter. The laborers, too, would obtain uninterrupted employment and regular wages during months in which they ordinarily have but little to do.

And so the pamphlet reads. I have marked passages which, under the general leave given already to extend my remarks, I propose to print in the RECORD. If the gentleman had not sought to drive me from the floor I would have consumed then only as much time as I have now occupied in stating these facts.

Mr. McMILLIN. I know of no article other than this upon which we can more properly sacrifice the revenue that is necessary to be sacrificed in order to get at that healthful state of finances that shall leave our Treasury unincumbered. The value of the jute butts admitted last year was $1,802,162, and the duty received was $344,826. I know of no industry that would be destroyed by the proposed action, and I hope that we will get a vote on the proposition.

Mr. WARNER. Is a pro forma amendment subject to an amendment? If so, I move to amend by striking out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. If there is no objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be allowed to withdraw his formal amendment. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I renew it. I do so, not for the purpose of discussing the jute question, although I apprehend I know as much of this industry as the majority of the members of this House. I rise for the purpose of having read an extract from a letter from a large manufacturing house in St. Louis, treating of the question of burlaps and cotton bagging.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest to my friend that that letter will more properly come in when we reach the subsequent line.

Mr. WARNER. I understand what I am doing. The part of the letter to which I refer relates more especially to the jute interest. I ask the Clerk to commence at the bottom of page 4, and read a short extract.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is questionable whether the duty should be taken off of raw jute or any of the textile fibers, because of the infant enterprise of growing these fibers in the United States, and the practicability of raising them has already been fully demonstrated in the Mississippi Valley as well as in the Southeast. The only need is machinery for decorticating purposes. Already nine different inventions have been produced for this purpose, and the result of decorticating jute by machinery, so as to successfully compete with the cheap India labor, will unquestionably be reached in the near future. This achieved, the industry of raising jute, ramie, and other fibers would be of larger value than the cotton crop itself, and give to America the market of the world for her manifold textiles. The small revenues derivative from the present tariff are wholly unimportant as compared with the great interests involved in these possibilities.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I simply submit this bit of evidence to the committee, coming from practical men, men who know whereof they speak. I submit to the committee whether it is worthy of their consideration in the absence of all evidence to the contrary.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this formal amendment will be withdrawn. The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion to strike out lines 34 and 35 of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Is debate on this amendment exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS. I renew the amendment. I hold in my hand a statement from Professor S. Waterhouse, of the Washington University in St. Louis, speaking of the disastrous effect of the proposed legislation. I desire to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TALKS ON THE TARIFF.

Our tariff talk to-day is taken from a letter recently written by Professor S. Waterhouse, of Washington University, St. Louis, on the subject of American jute culture, in which he says:

"This spring a very large acreage of jute and ramie will be planted. Machines of superior excellence for the decortication of the fiber have been recently invented, Southern planters, whose unfortunate experience in the culture of a single staple has taught them the importance of a diversified agriculture, are manifesting a lively interest in the cultivation of these foreign textiles.

"Never were the prospects of the new industries brighter than now. At this auspicious moment an impolitic proposition to place jute and ramie on the free-list has been brought before Congress. The adoption of the proposed measure would wholly arrest or, at all events, seriously retard the further development of these textile interests. An utterly needless enactment would imperil the success of industries that would diversify the husbandry and enlarge the resources of the Southern States. Successful competition with the cheap labor of India and China will require not only the facilities of improved machinery, but also the aid of a protective tariff.

"The interests involved are prospectively large. An ultimate income of scores of millions is jeopardized by a wholly unnecessary act of legislation. Prompt and efficient steps should be taken to prevent this proposed abolition of duties on foreign jute and ramie. The influence of every man who feels an interest in the material prosperity of the Southern States should at once be strenuously exerted to arrest the passage of a measure so fraught with industrial disaster. Arrays of facts showing the magnitude of these textile interests should be laid before Congress. The press can render an invaluable service to the South by an immediate publication of such information as will demonstrate the impolicy of the proposed legislation. But delay may prove fatal. The need of prompt action is urgent."

Mr. BURROWS. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out line 35 of the bill.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Jute, sunn, sisal grass, and other vegetable fibers, burlaps—

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to move an amendment to this line?

Mr. BAYNE. I will yield for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the gentleman's proposition? The gentleman can use a minute and then I will move that the committee rise. What is the gentleman's amendment directed to?

Mr. BAYNE. "Jute," in line 36.

Mr. McMILLIN. Line 37 has been read.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, let the two go together. I want to include the two lines, so as to move to strike out both together.

Mr. McMILLIN. That can not be done. Line 36 has been passed.

Mr. BAYNE. I rose to move to strike out "jute," in line 36.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Line 36 has not been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk read lines 36 and 37, and the beginning of line 38.

Mr. KELLEY. Line 36 consists of a word of four letters only, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] says he rose with reference to that line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] addressing the Chair when the Clerk was pronouncing the word "burlaps," at the beginning of line 38. The question is on the motion that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the Chair hold that line 37 was read? I was paying strict attention and I did not hear it read.

The CHAIRMAN. It was read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to submit a motion to strike out line 36.

Mr. McMILLIN. That has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a motion pending that the committee do now rise, which takes precedence of a motion to amend.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand it, my motion is pending to strike out line 36.

Mr. McMILLIN. The record will show what motions have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of revenue, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. A similar petition of members of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Oregon, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I am directed by that committee to ask that it be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, and that it also be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Military Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, and it will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a concurrent resolution, which I ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution to invite international arbitration as to differences between nations.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be, and is hereby, requested to invite, from time to time as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any government with which the United States has or may have diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes arising between the two governments which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency may be referred to arbitration, and be peaceably adjusted by such means.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the resolution be printed and take its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am also directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back a number of bills, petitions, memorials, and resolutions of various kinds on this subject of international arbitration, with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from their further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The titles of the bills adversely reported by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2634) to promote and perpetuate peace between the United States and Great Britain and France by the establishment of a permanent international court of arbitration, to which all differences that may hereafter arise between these nations may be referred; and

A bill (S. 292) to promote peace among nations, for the creation of a tribunal for international arbitration, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not exactly an adverse report. The committee simply wish to be discharged from their consideration, because the concurrent resolution reported embodies the desire of the great body of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition, then, does the Senator desire made of the bills?

Mr. SHERMAN. Simply that they lie upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. All I desire in regard to all these bills and resolutions is simply that they lie on the table. They are not adversely reported, because the substance of all that the committee now think proper to report favorably upon is embodied in the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understood the Senator. The Committee on Foreign Relations report back the bills and resolutions asking to be discharged, and that they lie upon the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

SILVER BULLION—SUSPENSION OF RULES.

Mr. STEWART. I submit two resolutions to avoid the technical difficulty attending the notice I gave yesterday to suspend the rules, which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the third paragraph of Rule XVI be suspended so that it shall be in order to propose the amendment hereinafter set forth to the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, at any time while said bill shall be pending and open to amendment in the Senate during the present session of Congress, to wit:

"That whenever the circulation, or any portion thereof, of any national bank not in liquidation, shall be surrendered, by the deposit of United States notes in the Treasury, or otherwise, and the same, or an equivalent amount, is not taken by other national banks within thirty days thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to purchase, at the market price thereof, an equivalent amount in silver bullion in excess of the minimum of $2,000,000 worth per month for coinage purposes, which shall be coined and used as provided in the act passed February 28, 1878, entitled 'An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal tender character.'"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire present action on this resolution?

Resolved, That the third paragraph of Rule XVI be suspended so that it shall be in order to propose the amendment hereinafter set forth to the bill (H. R. 9377) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, at any time while said bill shall be pending and open to amendment in the Senate during the present session of Congress, to wit:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase and coin, under the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal tender character,' approved February 28, 1878, not less than $4,000,000 worth of silver bullion per month."

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. STEWART. I believe the resolution that was pending for consideration yesterday is in order now, and I desire to have that disposed of.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator yield to allow me to submit some remarks of which I gave notice?

Mr. STEWART. I will consent that the resolution submitted by me be temporarily laid aside, to come up after the Senator's remarks are concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further resolutions, concurrent or other?

Mr. HALE. I ask that the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Alabama relative to the treaty between the United States and Great Britain.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolutions, submitted by Mr. MORGAN June 7, 1888:

Whereas in the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations on the treaty now pending in the Senate between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888, the question is presented whether the President had authority to negotiate such a treaty without the previous consent of the Senate; and

Whereas in said report the question is also raised whether the persons appointed by the President, without the advice and consent of the Senate, as plenipotentiaries to negotiate and sign said treaty were lawfully appointed, and whether said document is a treaty duly negotiated for the consideration and action of the Senate; and

Whereas said committee declare in said report that the matters to which said treaty relates were not fit subjects for negotiation with the Government of Great Britain, and that the time for negotiation with that Government on these subjects has passed; and

Whereas the Senate will consider said treaty on its merits, and declines to adopt the views of the committee as expressed in their report as to the constitutional powers of the President in negotiating treaties; and also declines to affirm that the time for negotiation with Great Britain on the subject of our fishing rights or the commercial rights of our fishermen has passed, or that the existing difficulties on these subjects are not subjects of negotiation: Therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the treaty signed by Thomas F. Bayard, William L. Putnam, and James B. Angell, as plenipotentiaries of the United States, in conjunction with the British plenipotentiaries, on the 15th day of February, 1888, and sent to the Senate by the President as a treaty duly negotiated for the consideration and action of the Senate, is properly authenticated as a treaty made by the President of the United States, acting within his constitutional powers, and is lawful and valid as a negotiation.

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the time has not passed for negotiation with Great Britain as to the just interpretation of any part of Article I of said treaty of 1818 upon any point of sincere disagreement between the two Governments as to the true meaning of the same, and that no act of Congress has declared that such time for negotiation has passed, nor has the time for such negotiation passed in respect of any commercial rights that may be claimed, or that may be needed, for our fishermen in any of the harbors or ports of the British possessions of North America, and that the existing matters of difficulty, including the claims of our fishermen for damages wrongfully sustained, are subjects for treaty negotiation.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, what I shall say was suggested by listening last week to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who spoke upon the resolutions which have just been laid before the Senate—spoke with force and ingenuity, as he always does, but it filled me with a kind of wonder that he as the representative of his party and the advocate of the Administration should be urging and advocating the cause of "our friends, the enemy." I remembered that in older days, at a time when the party which he so faithfully and ably serves was, as it is now, in power in the United States, a great and distinguished leader of that party on the floor of the Senate, upon an occasion bearing some analogy to the present, spoke in different terms and argued upon a different side in relation to controversies that had arisen between the United States and Great Britain and Canada touching the fisheries. I send to the desk to be read by the Secretary an extract from a speech delivered in the Senate in 1851 by that eminent Democratic leader, Senator Lewis Cass, of Michigan.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

We did not get the right to fish on the ocean from England or any other earthly power. We got it from Almighty God, and we mean to hold on to it through the whole extent of the great deep, now in the days of our strength, as our fathers held on to it in the days of our weakness. * * * I desire no war with England. Far from us and them—from the world indeed—far be such a calamity. But sir, the way to avoid war is to stand up firmly and temperately for our clear rights. Submission never yet brought safety and never will. To yield when clearly right, is to abandon at once our interests and our honor, and to show the world how the finger of scorn can be best pointed at us.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss here the technical side of this fisheries controversy, to go over the history of negotiations upon it as they have been engaged in in the past, nor to narrate the circumstances which have arrested the attention of Congress and the American people within the last four or five years. Others have done this already.

This is not a local question. It involves the national spirit and national sympathy. There is no man living in any part of the United States who takes an interest in public affairs who is not concerned that out of this contention shall come the establishment of the rights of his fellow-citizens who are engaged in the fisheries.

The life of the fisherman is picturesque; his nature is hardy; everything about him attracts attention. He represents an industry that appeals to the sympathy and the favor of the American people. He is one that has been looked to, and will be again looked to by the nation in emergency. He has done more than his part in fighting the battles of this people in years that have gone by; and should ever war with any power confront us again, fought as it must be upon the seas rather than upon the land, then the American fisherman will be found prompt and ready at the summons of his country. His vocation has been, as has been said time and again before, a nursery for the American navy; and so, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] said the other day most forcibly, his case ceases to be a local case.

It involves us all, all the American people, their spirit and their patriotism. Yet, Mr. President, the American fisherman is the man who has the real, direct interest in this controversy, he is the man who is most nearly touched, who is hurt if any man is hurt, who is distressed, put in peril of loss of property, and perhaps of personal danger, and who has suffered and endured for a hundred years as perhaps no other representative of the American people, no man representing any other vocation has for so long, and he is the man who can measure the extent of the hardships and annoyances and dangers that are visited upon him, and he is the man who knows when those annoyances and dangers and hardships are to be removed by legislative or diplomatic instrumentalities.

He can tell whether a remedy has been found for the wrongs that have been visited upon him—as to the facts which go to make up the real situation. Legislators and negotiators can teach him nothing. He can teach them.

The American fisherman wants peace and does not want war. Peace means to him the continuation of his vocation. With each recurring season his vessel is fitted out and he goes forth, either for weal or for woe, to the waters where his fare is to be found and takes the chances that the season affords. War means to him precisely the contrary, the interruption of this vocation in which he has perhaps grown old and unfitted to engage in other labors. It means the destruction of his livelihood; it means ruin. Therefore the American fisherman is willing to bear much, and has borne much in the past. How he has suffered everybody by this time knows. He has been seized inside and outside of the disputed line where he may fish, upon pretexts that he was preparing to fish, preparing to enter forbidden places, or infracting or preparing in some way to infract Canadian laws or regulations. While doing errands of mercy, helping fellow-men on the other side, in peril of wind and wave, he has had rude hands laid upon him. He has not known for years past what fate awaited him when he sailed away upon the sea, leaving family and friends at home upon his at best perilous quest. In these years he has dreaded the malice and spite of other men more than the dangers of the great deep.

Mr. President, it is not to our credit nor to the credit of administrations in the past that the American fisherman has so suffered, and there is force in the argument which is used by those who favor this treaty that whatever may be said against it, it is no worse than arrangements and compromises and adjustments that have been made or acquiesced in in the past.

In dealing with this question I put my opposition to the treaty upon no denial of this. Neither do I propose to assail in detail the provisions of the treaty, unsatisfactory, illusory, valueless comparatively as they all are. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] has done that in a most thorough and efficient fashion, as he is in the habit of doing when he addresses himself to any subject, and others no doubt will follow in the same line. But the treaty is a failure, and must needs have been a failure inevitably, because neither the Administration nor our negotiators were able to see or take into consideration the whole situation touching relations between Canada and the United States.

I am not here in any way to raise questions about or to asperse the character or the motives of our negotiators. I grant to them a faithful and earnest desire and intention to do their best, set as they were in this grapple with the able, experienced, and wary men upon the other side. But neither the Administration nor the negotiators who represented it in this contention seem to have taken into account the steady march of Canadian aggression for twenty years under British inspiration and British tutelage, gaining commercial advantages over us, both under the guise of carrying out treaty stipulations and in the course of violating them, and both the Administration and our negotiators failed to see that the time had come for considering all these things and for striking a proper balance. But I am anticipating somewhat here, Mr. President, and return now to the fisherman, who is directly involved in this controversy.

I have said that he desires peace, not war. But he will agree to no surrender. His voice is all one way upon this matter. He is against the treaty. There is no fishing vessel that has sailed out from the New England coast, from Provincetown, or Gloucester, or Marblehead, or Portland, or Booth Bay, or Castine, or Bucksport, that has not as it sailed out sent back from its master and crew an execrating protest against this treaty. Bad as was the old condition, beset with annoyance and trouble and danger to him, it was better than the treaty. Whether he shall have retaliation such as has been placed by Congress in the hands of the President or not, he is not for the treaty. He will have none of it. He does not believe in it, and scouts it as a remedy; knows as he peruses its provisions and applies them to his experience that they are illusory and good for nothing.

The testimony of men who are engaged in the fishery business, who fit out fishing vessels, and who make up the fishing interest, is all one way.

Not long ago, soon after the treaty had been made public, a newspaper published in one of the towns upon the coast of the State of Maine, in the midst of the dwellings and business places of the fishermen and those interested in that industry, sent out to the business men and business firms engaged circulars of inquiry covering three propositions:

First. Do you favor the ratification of the treaty?

Second. If ratified would you favor repealing the duties on Canadian fish and oil to obtain the rights thereby to be gained?

Third. Any further views?

With one exception the replies that came up from men engaged in the business, representing, as I know personally from acquaintance with many of them, one party as much as the other, Democrats as well as Republicans, were, "No! no! no!" In one case one man only replied, "Yes; I think it better than the last treaty." And that is the best he could say; but he goes on, "I do not favor repealing the duties for what we might gain thereby."

Mr. Luther Maddox, who is the secretary of the National Fisheries Association, a most intelligent and competent person to testify in this case, who has given years to the study of the subject, and who knows the conditions of the fishermen and the application of this treaty to their work, has written in the strongest terms of denunciation. The press generally of both parties in the region where this industry is leading have taken the same ground. In Massachusetts such old veterans of the Democratic party as Judge Charles Levi Woodbury, Mr. Richard Spofford, and many others, have been as earnest, as strong in their denunciation of the whole scope and effect of the treaty as gentlemen who are not in sympathy with the party represented by the Senator from Alabama and the present Administration.

I have said, Mr. President, that this result, bare, valueless, insignificant as it is claimed to be by those to whom I have been referring, who know most really about the subject, might have been expected from the narrow basis upon which the negotiation was inaugurated. It was not likely that we should come to an accord upon the questions in dispute, narrow as was the scope of the negotiation. If there was any one thing that the Canadians desired with a most heartfelt and long-cherished hope, it was a free market in our ports for their catch of fish. They had been restless and impatient ever since they had ceased to enjoy that market. I suppose if motives could be brought to light, analyzed, weighed, and measured, that the desire to drive the United States into again opening its ports to Canadian-caught fish has been more at the bottom of the controversies that have arisen and the wrongs which have been inflicted upon our fishermen in the last few years than any other cause, and the sentiment of the United States is just as strongly against this concession.

How, then, could the negotiation result in accord upon this? What could we offer to Canada, to Great Britain who stands behind Canada, that could make her agree to our interpretation of the treaty of 1818 as modified by the acts of 1830? What could we give in the narrow basis on which this negotiation was conducted to Great Britain or Canada besides free fish that would cause her to yield that which is our contention on this subject, the admission of all our vessels, fishing or others, into every privilege of a commercial nature enjoyed by Great Britain and Canada in our ports, and interchangeably by the mercantile commercial nations throughout the civilized globe? If we could not give them free fish, what great privileges already enjoyed by Canada through the generosity of the United States could we urge to induce Great Britain to give to us full commercial rights for all our vessels wherever they floated the American flag in any of her colony's ports?

That brings me, Mr. President, to the consideration of such matters as the Administration did not propose to consider in this negotiation, but which, I believe, must be considered in some future negotiation before the subject of the fishery contention can be settled fully and finally and fairly between the two nations.

I have referred to the constant course of Canada under British inspiration and British instruction and British backing for the last twenty years in gaining commercial advantages over us. Ever since the Dominion of Canada was created, in 1867, twenty-one years ago, a single purpose has been steadily borne in mind and pushed by the Canadian authorities, to the detriment of the commerce, trade, and business of the United States. These provinces before were of small account; they had little communication. The maritime provinces had their own interests, and there was little in common between them and the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, and the far regions that stretch away to the Pacific Ocean. There was no concert of action, there was little trade, there was little prosperity, there was little growth; but the moment these provinces were united and became the Dominion of Canada, then the British spirit, which nobody can study without having a sort of admiration for it, of making its power felt, of pushing for advantages against rival and adjacent nations, began to be shown by the Canadian Government.

It was a country comparatively without railroads at that time; it had no capital; it had no accumulation of wealth that could be drawn upon to build railroads that should compete with the marvelous growth and expansion of the railway system of the United States which stretched its iron chains away to the Pacific and bound the two oceans together—Canada was helpless, so far as individual effort was concerned, in the construction of railway lines that should compete with ours and reduce their business and their profits.

Governmental aid was at once invoked, and there is no such spectacle afforded in the history of the world of governmental assistance in the form of subsidy, in money and land and bonds and payment of interest to railway enterprises as that which is shown in Canada in the last twenty years. Saying nothing of the Grand Trunk combination, which was largely helped by government, which has cost $120,000,000, there are two great lines of railway in Canada that could never have had the breath of life breathed into them, could never have had a mile of road built or a train equipped, but for the interposition of the government in subsidies and aids of the kind I have mentioned. The Intercolonial road, which connects the maritime provinces with Ontario and Quebec, received from their government subsidies to the amount of $15,000,000; and the great Canadian Pacific Railroad, stretching from the two eastern provinces through Manitoba and British Columbia and finding its terminus on the waters of the Pacific Ocean, has received in governmental aid $130,000,000.

The benefactions bestowed by the United States upon the great lines of railway that unite us with the far West are not, all taken together, to be compared with this. The Canadian Pacific Railroad was built for two purposes, and it is time that any administration that conducts the affairs of the Government of the United States, no matter what may be its politics, no matter which party it may represent, should take into consideration and watch with jealous scrutiny the course pursued by Canada, with Great Britain behind her, in building these great roads that stretch from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. There never should be a day in the future when this whole question should not be considered by the existing Administration and taken into account in any negotiation between Great Britain and the United States.

The administration now or in the future that is derelict in this ought to be condemned by the American people because of its want of patriotism in not looking closely to these rival enterprises, which bode no good to our own interests.

This great road, shored up by these colossal subsidies, was built for two purposes: First, to add to the military strength of Canada as a component part of the British Empire, and thus to British power in a military sense by opening this communication, which it would control under all emergencies, between the St. Lawrence River and the Pacific Ocean. Everything involved in what is known as the Monroe doctrine rises to view when this subject is considered, for here, at an expense of $150,000,000, a foreign power is adding immeasurably to its military weight and establishing conditions which may in the future be fraught with the gravest considerations to us. But the present Administration pays no attention to this, and not only have these subjects not been taken into account in negotiations, but added commercial privileges have been granted by it.

That, we may say, was the first object in building the great Canadian Pacific Railway.

There was another object equally apparent, and that was to add to the resources of Canada, to her wealth, at our expense. The Canadian Pacific Railroad, owing the life that is in it to governmental aid, was not constructed under circumstances such as surrounded the building of our American systems in the United States. Wherever with us a railroad was built civilization followed; towns sprang up almost as fast as the rails were laid, and in many cases before they were laid; cities arose that have been the marvel of the age, making it difficult to compute their growth in wealth and in population, thereby adding to the revenue of the road and making the enterprise one that would justify the investment of private capital.

The local business upon the great routes that have been built in the United States to connect us with the Pacific has been constantly increasing, and is to-day, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], who has given such faithful attention to this subject knows, a great factor in the conditions of prosperity that attend these great roads. The Canadian Pacific presented an entirely different condition. It runs for hundreds of miles through waste places. It has been pushed forward, not by any development along its line that is worth counting; not by business that has come in from the regions through which it has passed, but by the rich hand of the Government that has overflowed in its bounty upon every mile that the road has been built.

What, then, was the object, Mr. President, underlying the building of this road aside from the military feature to which I have adverted? It was seen that there was a prospect that this road, finding its terminus at Vancouver, with additional help from the British and Canadian Government, in the way of establishing steam-ship lines to connect with the road and to run to Asiatic ports, might not only divert commerce that would otherwise naturally come to the United States, but that in addition to that, this commerce coming directly from Asia, if our Government could be impressed, persuaded, or wheedled into an arrangement, traffic could be actually taken from our own lines in our own territory and our own ports and diverted to the Canadian road. It was a bold assumption, but it has succeeded with this Administration. The foresight of the British and Canadian policy has been justified.

On the 12th day of December last a resolution passed the Senate directing the Secretary of the Treasury—

To transmit to the Senate copies of all letters or other communications in his Department relating to the recent bonding of the Pacific Coast Steam-ship Company, together with copies of all other papers touching said transaction.

The Secretary inclosed copies of the desired papers. I read from Senate Executive Document No. 32 of the present session. Following this is the reply of the Secretary, transmitting the correspondence had by him and his assistant with the collector of customs in San Francisco and between him and the general agent of the Pacific Coast Steam-ship Company, a tributary of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the upshot of which is that the privilege was granted to this road of conveying under bond, without payment of duties, goods, merchandise, nine-tenths of which without that would have passed over American lines. This privilege begins at our own port of San Francisco and enabled the steam-ship company to take merchandise north to the Canadian terminus at Vancouver.

I am not going in detail into the history of this correspondence and this astounding concession on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury. The document speaks for itself, and is worth any man's reading. The upshot of the transaction is found in the following letter, which settled the business to the entire satisfaction of the Canadians:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., September 4, 1886.

SIR: The Department has received your letter of the 24th ultimo, and its inclosed communication from the general agents of the Pacific Coast Steam-ship Company, wherein it is requested that instructions be issued to enable said company, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to transport merchandise from your port through the Dominion of Canada to points in the United States, and vice versa.

In reply, and referring to the regulations governing the transportation of merchandise to, from, and through the British possessions in North America, under the laws and the treaty of Washington (Synopsis 2171), you are informed that said regulations are applicable to the transportation referred to in your letter and its inclosure. It is, however, necessary that the route by which it is proposed to transport the goods shall be bonded, and an application for that purpose, in accordance with the provisions of articles 713 to 720, Customs Regulations 1884, from the Pacific Coast Steam-ship Company will receive prompt consideration. It is to be understood in case the company decides to bond as a common carrier that its bond shall cover transportation from the time the goods are delivered at the port of first arrival until delivery is made at the port of destination.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Acting Secretary.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS, San Francisco, Cal.

The Secretary of the Treasury or his friends may say that this was simply carrying out the provisions of law based upon section 30 of the treaty of Washington. But that section has been abrogated long ago, and though I do not affirm it as a proposition of law, it is yet contended, and was contended before the committee of which the Senator from Illinois is chairman, that the only object of the law, which grants the right to the Secretary in his discretion, if he chooses to give such privileges, is simply to carry out the provisions of section 30 of the Washington treaty, which has long ago been annulled. But at best all that can be said for this remarkable act of the Secretary of the Treasury is that he had the power to do it, and that he chose to do it, but equally he had the power not to do it had he so chosen.

Mr. President, there is not a railroad man of intelligence in the United States, there is not a great authority upon railroads among us, there is not a man who has studied the subject in all its bearings, who will not tell you and me and the Senate and the public that the gain derived by the Canadian railroads by this order of the Secretary more than ten times outbalances any gain that we get through what may fairly perhaps be termed the reciprocal relation of railroads in the two countries, as illustrated by the Grand Trunk and by our own railroads which have branches through the lower part of Canada.

I affirm here that any one who investigates this subject and takes the testimony of men who know the most about it, will come to this conclusion: That the Canadian Pacific Railroad benefits by this transaction ten times over all the benefits that we gain by being allowed what is called the "transit trade" over Canadian lines. Conversing only a few days ago with one of the brightest men engaged in railway traffic, the head of one of our systems in the United States, as good a Democrat as the Senator from Alabama, or as the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of State, he said to me "our roads are going to be ruined by these indulgences which the Administration has granted to the Canadians." And it was not a fitting thing, sir, that any negotiation with Canada or Great Britain should have been set on foot that did not take into consideration the commercial privileges now enjoyed by Canada and Canadian railroads by the act of the Treasury Department of the United States.

The course of Canada has been characteristic in this whole business of the transit trade. Wherever any interference with bonded privileges granted to us and from which we could benefit could avail such interference has been resorted to. Senators will remember, particularly Western Senators, that when the large product of Manitoba needed an outlet into our territory and to our great grain centers, every hindrance that could be placed upon this transit was put there, and when called to account the Canadian Government denied that it had taken any part or had issued any orders, but Western business men knew all the same that the trade was interfered with and hindered, while Canada was receiving uncounted, almost unmeasured benefits, of a like kind from us.

Here is another thing that ought to be settled in any negotiation between us and Great Britain or Canada. If Senators will look at the map they will find a long line of frontier water way from the upper Lake Superior along the rivers that connect the Great Lakes, through Huron and St. Clair, down through rivers that connect below, and through Lakes Erie and Ontario to the St. Lawrence, to the northern boundary of New York, whence that river flows northwardly and leaves the United States. It is a frontier water way upon which has grown up a marine traffic that is immense in its extent. It is used for both Canadian and American trade, and it ought to be as free to the one as the other, if there is any reciprocal relation to be maintained between the Canadian Government and our Government.

Aiding this water way, furnishing facilities to the vast commerce using it, there is a canal at the Falls of St. Mary, which lie between Superior and Huron, commonly known as the Sault Ste. Marie. Upon this canal the United States has expended $4,000,000 in building and our Government is now maintaining it.

Through that canal, unmolested, unvexed by a single exaction, floats the British and Canadian craft alongside of the American craft. No discrimination whatever is made, and there ought to be none. But if you will follow down hundreds of miles through the lower lakes you will find that Great Britain has built between Erie and Ontario a canal that is known as the Welland Canal, and vessels of the United States and vessels of Canada or of Great Britain alike seek passage through this canal, and one of the things which Canada has done to discriminate against American commerce is to lay a tax upon every vessel that goes through the Welland Canal which delivers her cargo into a port of the United States, a tax of 20 cents per ton. Single vessels going through there have paid from $130 to $200 for each trip—not discriminating against the vessel, but, what is worse, against the port that is her destination. Here are two vessels with the same kind of cargo coming to the mouth of the Welland Canal and seeking passage through it. One is American, the other is Canadian. If the American vessel is to take her cargo to Oswego, in New York, she has got to pay 20 cents per ton for that privilege. If the American vessel takes her cargo to Kingston, on the Canadian side, she pays nothing, or at most a nominal tax. If the British vessel takes her cargo to Oswego, which is our port, she pays 20 cents per ton; if she takes her load to Kingston she pays nothing.

It is a discrimination against our trade, against our commerce. It is in the same line with the policy that has been pursued as to the Canadian Pacific Railroad. It is to divert commerce from us to them. Is there any American citizen who can contemplate such an act as this without a feeling of impatience? Is there any Senator here, no matter what may be his party affiliations, no matter how he may be associated with this Administration, who does not feel in himself a restiveness of spirit over such an exaction as this and that it is tolerated and permitted and acquiesced in?

Sir, there never ought to be a negotiation between the two countries, either now or in the hereafter, that does not take into account this very matter, this grievance, this sore grievance that I am now imperfectly describing; and yet the American negotiators in dealing with the Canadian and British negotiators were not permitted to bring this subject up and make it a part of the convention, and in the result to establish what should be right and just between the people as touching this matter.

I do not think, Mr. President, that the spirit of the compact made between the United States and Great Britain in 1817, which is entitled "Arrangement with Great Britain as to the naval force to be respectively maintained on the American lakes, concluded April 28, 1817; approved by Senate April 16, 1818, and recommended to be carried into effect; proclaimed April 28, 1818," has been fairly carried out. As a result of that arrangement, covering the scenes of the memorable conflicts that took place on the Canadian lakes between us and Great Britain in the war of 1812, it was agreed as a measure of peace that both naval forces should be dismantled, destroyed, and that thereafter, in the language of the arrangement—

The naval force to be maintained upon the American lakes by His Majesty and the Government of the United States shall henceforth be confined to the following vessels on each side; that is—

On Lake Ontario, to one vessel, not exceeding 100 tons burden, and armed with one 18-pound cannon.

On the upper lakes, to two vessels, not exceeding like burden each, and armed with like force.

Not only has the letter, but the spirit of that pacificatory arrangement been carried out by the United States Government so that we have in all the lakes but one war vessel, the Michigan, which would not be considered in any modern naval conflict to be even a war vessel. Neither has the United States ever by any act taken any course that would nullify the spirit of the compact by providing methods through which she could instantly supply upon those lakes such naval force as is prohibited by that arrangement; but, on the other hand, Great Britain has gone on, has built and deepened canals, and can to-day on twenty-four hours' notice put a fleet of twenty gunboats from the St. Lawrence River into Lake Ontario. I should say that in any great negotiation undertaken to settle questions which might be fraught with mischief in the future, this might well be considered.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question in this connection. What does the Senator consider the character of the purpose indicated by the construction of the heavy armament of Great Britain in the Northwest? Is there in international relations any apparent cause for the construction of great defenses for that part of the British Empire? Is there any foreign power that threatens that coast, or can they be erected with reference to any probable condition of events except it may be warlike conflicts with the United States? I should like to know the Senator's view of the immense fortifications on the Pacific coast being erected by the British Government.

Mr. HALE. I do not believe that any enlightened British statesman contemplates with any feeling except apprehension and dread armed conflict with the United States. I do not believe that there is any purpose on the part of any British administration, or has been in the last ten years, or is likely to be, any deliberate purpose or desire to enter into hostile conflict with the United States; but the things that are going on now, such as those to which the Senator from New Hampshire has called our attention, are in the line of Great Britain's course always. She is, after the fashion that is commended in the proverbs, provident for the future, and wherever her trade begins to extend, wherever her business begins to take root, as it has of late through the development of the Canadian railroad system, there Great Britain in time of peace prepares for war.

I know of nothing in the situation referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire that would account for the expenditure of money by Great Britain and the erection of works such as he has described, except in carrying out this policy on the part of Great Britain; and it ought to admonish the United States, setting aside any question of counter preparation on our part, that in any negotiation that takes place to settle contentions between us and Great Britain or Canada we should not leave out these matters that have led to such transactions as the Senator from New Hampshire referred to.

Mr. BLAIR. May I ask one question further? I should like to know if under the arrangement of 1817, to which the Senator has referred, between these two nations, in order that their power of offense or defense should be in equilibrium, neither having the advantage of the other in view of what future controversies might require, there should be any less reason why the construction of great fortifications or the establishment of great naval stations on the Pacific coast should not be looked upon as equally dangerous to American interests in that part of the world? Can it be otherwise than a fact that with this naval preparation and these fortifications of the harbors the British power is in a condition whenever a crisis in any matter occurs to sweep every American interest from the Pacific coast without any pretense of resistance on our part? I ask whether an act of that kind ought not to be looked upon as in the interest of possibly future hostile relations in the contemplation of that power?

Mr. HALE. The Senator can draw his own inference as to what may be at the bottom of this policy as conducted by Great Britain.

It has seemed to me, Mr. President, a remarkable spectacle that in this emergency we are confronted with what perhaps is a solid array on the other side of the Chamber, which takes the ground that this treaty is sufficient under the circumstances; that under it our rights are secured; that it is a praiseworthy result of an important negotiation. Of course it follows that in advocating the treaty Democratic Senators find themselves arguing the British side. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] was conscious of this, when, in his elaborate and able speech on Monday last, he presented the case of the Administration in favor of the treaty.

I do not believe that all Senators on the other side will accept this position with complacency or satisfaction. In controversies which have heretofore arisen with Great Britain such has not been the fashion of the great leaders of the Democratic party. They have taken pride in maintaining the American side, which must now be left to this side of the Chamber. But Democratic Senators this year are led at chariot wheels. They are obeying the orders of the President, and from that source they have received no patriotic inspiration to guide them in the consideration of this subject.

Thirty-seven years ago in the United States Senate an old Democratic Senator from the State of Arkansas, in the course of a speech upon a controversy which had arisen with Great Britain in relation to the fisheries, said:

> It is a remarkable fact that in looking back through the history of our Government, especially to the war period of 1812 and since that time, in every dispute or hostile collision with a foreign country, without an exception that now occurs to me, there has been a party in our country and represented in the two Houses of Congress, which has invariably taken sides with that foreign country and against our own.

It was Senator Solon Borland, of Arkansas, who uttered these words——

Mr. HOAR. I was called out by a colleague in the other House about ten minutes ago when the Senator was entering upon a very interesting portion of his remarks, as I can well conjecture, for I came back while he was speaking of the great expenditure made by Canada and the British Government in regard to railroads, and then he made some observations about the stipulation of 1817 in regard to the naval armaments that may be maintained on the lakes by the two countries. I should like to ask the Senator in that connection if he stated to the Senate the fact that has come to my knowledge, that Canada has just contracted for a ship-railway across the isthmus between the Bay of Fundy and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to which she has stipulated a guaranty of 20 per cent. on the stock, and which is to convey vessels not less than 2,700 tons, so that she will be able from any station on the Bay of Fundy or even from Halifax to transport very promptly, and in case of difficulty with this country, any number of gun-boats sufficient to navigate the entire length of all these lakes? In addition to that she has contracted or is about to contract, is making arrangements as I know from very high authority, for a shorter but generally parallel route to the Welland Canal, making connection between the upper and the lower lakes, which, in connection with this ship-railway, will bring her vessels to our own doors, so that she will have within the next two or three years the entire command of the lakes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have made no allusion to the subject that has been so well adduced by the Senator from Massachusetts, because I was not fully informed as to the facts as he is, and I am obliged to him for having brought this matter into the discussion, because it supplements what I have been saying as to the course that is being pursued by Great Britain from year to year, and, indeed, as in this case that he has brought here, at the present day.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who believe that these subjects-matter which have a growing importance touching the relations between the United States and Canada, and therefore Great Britain, will be ultimately settled without further negotiations. Why it was that our negotiators, who were able and honest and patriotic men, yielded and accepted such a treaty as this I can not say. I do not attribute to them, knowing them all well as I do, any motive or impulse in the least shaded by impropriety. I do say this, however, that one month before these negotiators came to an accord and the treaty that is now lying before the Senate was signed, I do not think a man could have been found in Washington who believed that a treaty would be concluded. What considerations moved in the mind of the American negotiators neither I nor any associate of mine here can tell. But we do know that at last our representatives gave way, and the able gentlemen on the other side succeeded in negotiating a treaty that they were satisfied with. And because that treaty is really in substance of so little account, because it secures to the interest that is most affected nothing worth reckoning, because the great opportunities that these negotiators had of considering all subjects arising between the two nations in a broad and liberal way and securing a treaty that would have settled the peace of the two countries for a generation—because of all these things I am opposed to the ratification of the treaty.

I do not suppose that anybody believes that this treaty will be ratified by the Senate. Mischief enough, I fear, will come out of it at best. In any subsequent negotiation I fear that our side will be hampered and embarrassed by the concessions that have been made in this treaty. I do not think it is fitting or proper in open session to go into a discussion of that point.

I have endeavored, Mr. President, and I thank the Senate for its attention, to show some of the reasons why it is that the American people believe that this treaty does not meet the occasion and should be rejected by the Senate. The public sense is keenly alive when any question of national pride or national humiliation is concerned, and I make no doubt that the Senate will agree in its action with the clear and plain sentiment of the people that, weighed in the balance, this treaty is found wanting.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. There comes over as unfinished business from yesterday the District of Columbia appropriation bill, leaving two amendments undisposed of subject to action. I think it will take but a few moments to dispose of them. I should be glad to have that bill acted on now in order that it may go into conference, so as not to run the risk of failure by the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. MORGAN. I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that these resolutions shall go over until Monday week without prejudice to their present condition before the Senate, so that they may come up at the conclusion of the routine business of the morning hour on Monday week. I do that because some Senators on the other side have indicated to me a desire to be absent next week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the resolutions be laid over until a week from next Monday.

Mr. HALE. I hope there will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no objection, and it is so ordered. The resolutions are postponed till Monday, June 25.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to take up the District appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will first lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business 649, being the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] had been recognized.

Mr. PLUMB. I can not yield. We must first consider bills for which there is absolute necessity. After this appropriation bill is disposed of I am directed to bring up another one, but I shall allow an interval between them for other business.

Mr. BLAIR. At the conclusion of the appropriation bill I shall make the request again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the request of the Senator from Kansas that the regular order be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the District appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire what the regular order is. I have just come in, having been detained in committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] who had charge originally of the general bill to provide for the construction of post-office buildings, or the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] what the plan is in regard to the consideration of that bill. It is a very important bill, and has been some time before the Senate. It is a bill in which I have taken a good deal of interest, having first presented the subject to the Senate formally by a bill, and I should like to know if the Senator will not make some arrangement by which it can be called up at an early day, either under a special order or otherwise.

Mr. SPOONER. That bill was reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I am anxious, and I know the members of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are, to press that bill at the earliest day possible on the attention of the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have no doubt whatever of this, Mr. President, but the bill has been much delayed unexpectedly, and I wanted to make an appeal to whichever Senator has the bill in charge at this time to bring it forward, to advance it, if possible, and secure the designation of a day when it may be considered, and I hope it may be on as early a day as possible, and to do this it seems necessary to have some definite understanding respecting its consideration with the formal consent of the Senate now.

Mr. VEST. I have not the slightest objection to take up the bill, but I must state to the Senate that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] will be absent next week. The Senator from Wisconsin and myself framed the bill. I reported it at his suggestion, but he really has charge of it. I reported it in his absence, and I would rather he should be here when it is considered. Whatever day is agreed upon between Senators will suit me. I shall be here when the bill comes up.

Mr. PADDOCK. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin is to be away for a few days, but I would ask him before he goes, if he can, to fix upon some day which will be agreeable to him for its consideration, and that he ask the Senate to agree that that day shall be set aside for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered after the morning hour one week from Friday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that Order of Business 1101, being the bill (S. 2762) to provide for the erection of public buildings for post-offices in towns and cities where the post-office receipts for three years preceding have exceeded $3,000 annually, be taken up for consideration immediately after the morning business on one week from Friday next, being the 22d instant. Is there objection?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator whether that interferes with bills for street railways and the various special orders. If so, I will object. Otherwise, I will not.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not wish to interfere with the special orders. I will say after the special orders have been disposed of.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to inquire of the Senator if it will not answer his purpose to give notice that at that time he will call up the bill. And a majority of the Senate, without doubt, unless there is some exigency in the way, would accede to the Senator's suggestion. But making special orders in the last days of the session involves a great deal of trouble often. I suggest to the Senator that he give notice that at that time he will call up the bill. He can have the assurance, I think, of the Senate that, unless some pressing exigency is in the way, such a notice would be regarded.

Mr. VEST. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. The bill was taken up and considered by the Senate, I think, when the Senate was going on with the Calendar. Then in some manner it was laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill is now upon the Calendar. It has never been under consideration except on the call of the Calendar, and is subject to the order of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. The bill was taken up by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But other business has intervened.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Missouri will remember, I think, that the bill came up under the five-minute rule, under an order to proceed to the consideration of bills regularly upon the Calendar. It was reached and was considered under that rule, and it then went over and occupied its position at the head of the Calendar. It has been set aside from day to day by other orders.

Mr. VEST. According to parliamentary law, after other bills that intervene have been disposed of then the bill comes before the Senate without being made a special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that when other business intervenes, if the bill was taken up on motion, it went back to the Calendar.

Mr. SPOONER. I would say to the Senator from Missouri that in his absence the bill was reached, and at the request of his colleague it was passed over without losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. I was not aware of that.

Mr. SPOONER. I am quite content to adopt the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], in which I think there is force, and I will ask, the bill being in charge of the Senator from Missouri, that he give notice that on one week from the coming Friday after the morning hour, he will ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill.

Mr. VEST. Let the Senator from Wisconsin do that; or if he prefers I give that notice.

Mr. SPOONER. That will suit me. I shall be here at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his request, and the Senator from Missouri gives notice that one week from Friday next, after the morning business, he will move to take up the bill for consideration.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to take up the District appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8989) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to change an amendment adopted yesterday. The change becomes necessary by what has since occurred. I ask that on page 19, in the place of what now constitute lines 19 and 20, what I send to the desk be inserted. There is some question about the location of streets in the northeast part of the city which has only been satisfactorily settled this morning, which makes it desirable, if not necessary, that this amendment should be changed as proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to change lines 19 and 20, in section 1, on page 19, so as to read:

For work on Fourth street, towards the Bunker Hill road, and on First street extended to Michigan avenue, and from thence along said avenue to Lincoln road, $15,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. There was an amendment on page 38 in the appropriations "for charities" which was amended by adding certain words. I ask unanimous consent, after consulting the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], to substitute for the amendment offered by him what I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 38, in section 1, line 15, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out the amendment already agreed to and to insert:

And from this sum the commissioners may allot to the Washington Night Lodging House Association a gross sum not exceeding $1,500 to be expended in the discretion of said association; and the commissioners may allot part of the appropriation remaining to the Young Woman's Christian Home for maintenance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now ask that the amendment of the committee, on page 42, line 1, may be modified. The amendment provides, "one draughtsman, $1,800." It should be $1,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, that modification will be made.

The question before the Senate is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to an amendment reported as in Committee of the Whole. The clerks inform the Chair that the amendment of the Senator from Florida is in the possession of that Senator.

Mr. CALL. On page 2, line 20, I move, after the first word "one," to insert the word "chief;" so as to read:

One chief inspector of plumbing.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. On the same page, in line 20, I move to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$3,000;" so as to read:

One chief inspector of plumbing, $3,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the recommendation of the majority of the Committee on the District of Columbia and the accompanying letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The papers referred to are as follows:

COMMITTEE ON DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

We recommend the passage of the amendment to the District appropriation bill, in line 20, page 2, so as to read as follows: "One supervising inspector of plumbing in all buildings and of sewers in the District of Columbia, $3,500."

Committee on the District of Columbia.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 29, 1888.

DEAR SIR: With pleasure we notice the action you have proposed upon the question of the sanitary inspection of all dwellings. We believe that many houses which are occupied as dwellings, and some of our public buildings, are so deplorably unhealthy as to menace the public health, and without some action of Congress there is no authority for the application of remedial measures. The inspector of plumbing, though evidently an efficient and energetic officer, has no authority beyond the examination of private structures in course of erection; and we earnestly recommend the early and favorable action of Congress upon some measure similar to that proposed by you.

Very respectfully,

WM. M. GALT.
S. C. BUSEY, M. D.
W. W. JOHNSTON, M. D.
CHARLES C. GLOVER.
E. FRANCIS RIGGS.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate.

As it is proposed to increase the duties of the inspector of plumbing, and knowing what additional labor and responsibility this work will put upon him, I feel that the salary of his present office is much too small. The technical knowledge which he employs and the work he now does ought to be well paid for.

W. W. JOHNSTON, M. D.

From personal observation, I regard the services of the inspector of plumbing as most valuable to the people of this District, and I consider the present incumbent an intelligent and valuable officer. Even without any increase of labor his present salary is too small and should be largely increased.

J. W. THOMPSON.

B. H. WARNER.

I not only concur with the within, but I think that the office of inspector of plumbing is one of the most important in the District, and that the present incumbent has proved himself to be the right man in the right place. The proper performance of the duties of inspector is so important and responsible that $4,000 would be the best use the Government could make of that amount annually for his salary. He is well worth it.

WASHINGTON, June 11, 1888.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended in the Senate.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on page 31, line 11, by striking out, after the word "under-ground," the word "thirty-six" and inserting "twenty-five;" so as to read:

For putting District wires under-ground, $25,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. Since yesterday I have found a copy of the letter of the president of the District commissioners, addressed to the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, in which the commissioners recommend an increase in the estimate for putting District telegraph and telephone wires under-ground from $25,000 to $36,000. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to it.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes, that has just been brought to my attention. The committee proceeded upon the faith of the estimate made by the commissioners and did not know of the existence of this supplemental estimate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course I supposed that the Senator in charge of the bill was not aware of this recommendation. I hope that the amendment of the committee will be disagreed to.

I also continue in the belief that the Senate should hold on to the proposition of the House of Representatives to begin the work of putting the telegraph, telephone, and electric light wires in this District under ground. I do not believe if we wait for a wholesale and comprehensive plan that we shall get any of them under ground within the next five or ten years, whereas, I believe, if a beginning is made, and through those streets and avenues where the District commissioners put the District wires under ground we put all other wires under ground, we shall have made a beginning which in time will have an end, and this city will take the lead, as it should take the lead, of all the cities in the United States in putting all wires under ground, so that from one end of the city to the other, through our parks and our broad avenues and over our magnificent public buildings, there may not be the disfigurement of a single telegraph wire or a single telegraph pole.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of concurring in the amendment striking out the proviso.

Mr. PLUMB. Before that question is put I wish to modify the amendment of the committee, which can be done by unanimous consent. I ask that the amendment of the committee be amended by restoring the sum of $36,000 in place of $25,000.

But while up I wish to say that in my judgment nothing could be more harmful to that which the Senator from New Hampshire has so much at heart than the adoption of this proposition. I think his own good sense would dictate to him that when we come to put the wires under ground it must be under some arrangement whereby the tenure by which these companies are to occupy the streets under ground may be determined in advance; and until that is done there can be no practicable submerging of the wires. To do otherwise would result, as I believe, in tearing up the streets and leaving them torn up while expensive and protracted litigation, and, as I think, to the defeat of the District, will be going on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHACE. I should like to have the amendment read

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 31, line 11, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "thirty-six" and inserted "twenty-five;" so as to read:

For putting District wires under ground, $25,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I asked unanimous consent that that amendment might be disagreed to, and the sum restored to $36,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas, if he will allow me, whether there is not a considerable mite of legislation on this bill for the District of Columbia? It so reads to me. If it be so, it has certainly been ruled in the Senate by the Presiding Officer that no legislation can be had on an appropriation bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know of any legislation but the last section, which provides for a lapse of funds, except such as was put on by the other House.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then that is enough. One mere matter of legislation on an appropriation bill is in violation of the rules, as the President of the Senate has expressed himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be non-concurred in.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. There is an objection. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs upon concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it

Mr. CHANDLER. What amendment is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment in lines 11 and 12 on page 31.

Mr. PLUMB. That is the amendment in regard to the amount?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. CHACE. I call for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote will then be held as not having been announced. The Senator from Rhode Island asks for a division. Senators in the affirmative will rise. [A pause.] No Senator having risen, is a further division insisted upon?

Mr. CHACE. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is non-concurred in. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment striking out the proviso from line 12 to line 22, on page 31.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the reading of the words proposed to be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The part proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, on page 31, line 12, after the word "dollars," struck out the following proviso:

Provided, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall require all telegraph, telephone, and other wires to be removed from all streets, avenues, and alleys wherefrom the District wires have been or may be removed, and to require all wires to be placed under ground at the expense of the body-corporate, company, or person now maintaining, owning, or using the same. The location of conduits, the trenching, excavation, and relaying of pavements in streets and alleys of the cables and devices used to be subject to the direction and approval of the said commissioners.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment was agreed to as in Committee of the Whole and was reserved for a separate vote in the Senate. The question now recurs upon concurring in the amendment. To vote "ay" strikes it out; to vote "no" leaves it in the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this question the Senator from New Hampshire asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. And I ask the President of the Senate to rule now whether that is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The provision is in the bill, and was not offered as an amendment. If the Senator from Virginia will examine the rule, he will find that the provision to which he refers relates only to amendments offered in the Senate. The proviso proposed to be stricken out is a part of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. As it came from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposes to strike out the proviso.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not care whether it came from the House of Representatives or not. If it is legislation on an appropriation bill, it has no more right to be on the bill as it came from the other House than if it were proposed to put it on in the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. It is proposed to strike it out.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then let us strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal on the question of concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I am quite in favor of compelling the telegraph companies to put their wires under ground, but it seems to me, as the Senator from Kansas suggests, that there is no proper provision made here. It can not be left, I think, entirely to the commissioners to make the regulations; Congress should do it. Therefore I shall vote to strike out the proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on concurring in the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. What does an affirmative vote do? Will the Chair please state it again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To vote in the affirmative strikes out the proviso contained in lines 12 to 22, inclusive, on page 31. The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I withhold my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am informed by the colleague of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] that he would vote "yea" if present. As I should vote "yea" on this question, I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. I do not know how he would vote on this question. I should vote "yea" if I were not paired.

Mr. CULLOM. I will state that the Senator from Florida can vote without any question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida desire to have his vote recorded?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], if here, would vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have cast my vote, as I am informed by some friends on the other side that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], with whom I have a pair generally, would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], but I do not understand that this vote divides at all upon general opinions, and I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I will ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] if he knows how the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] would be likely to vote on this question if he were present.

Mr. ALLISON. I can not tell.

Mr. HARRIS. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, but would vote if I thought the Senator from Vermont would vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON. I know how he ought to vote. I think he ought to vote in the affirmative, but I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. In order to help make a quorum I shall vote, this not being a party question. I shall vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I understand that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is absent and unpaired. That being so, I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], and I will record my vote "yea."

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Having been told that if the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], with whom I am paired, were here he would vote "yea," I also vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—36.

Allison,	Coke,	Hale,	Riddleberger,
Bate,	Cullom,	Harris,	Sawyer,

So the amendment, striking out the proviso, was concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent to insert a line which was left out by mistake between lines 6 and 7, on page 16. It was overlooked by the clerk, and was not contained in the bill as reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed to be inserted will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, between lines 6 and 7, insert:

N street between Twenty-second and Twenty-fourth streets.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill in the Senate?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by me directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a full statement of all offers of bonds for sale since April 1, 1888, which comes over from yesterday.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator from Nevada will not insist on that motion but will modify his request. I have no objection to the unfinished business being temporarily laid aside for any matter that will not take much time, but I do not wish it to be displaced by a motion to take up something else after the morning hour.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the resolution disposed of before I leave, and I shall leave to-morrow evening. If it can be disposed of to-morrow morning, that will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think it will take long to dispose of the resolution.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator does not understand my proposition. The parliamentary effect of a motion to take up the resolution I understand would be to displace the regular order. I wish the Senator to ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. STEWART. I will ask for unanimous consent, if I can get it.

Mr. BLAIR. I hope that the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada to take the resolution up to-morrow morning will be acquiesced in. I have been trying for a long time to get the Senate to consider the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law. That is a matter which has been pending for at least three Congresses in succession, and although there have been favorable reports in both Houses I think, certainly in the Senate two or three times, it has never been brought to a decision. These men have been lingering and waiting and passing resolutions and presenting memorials all these years, and I have been struggling to get consideration of the bill for some time. I thought I had made my peace with everybody, with the appropriation bills, and the fisheries question, and the Senator from Oregon, and that the bill could be disposed of this afternoon. I do not think it will require discussion. In the first section it merely repeats in substance the eight-hour law and asserts that it shall be the law in reference to the adjustment of the claims of workmen, laborers, and mechanics, and then sends them to the Court of Claims to see whether there is anything which is due under the law. I hope that I may have a chance to dispose of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses, which is in charge of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], is the unfinished business and entitled to the right of way. Yesterday, by unanimous consent, the resolution offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] was assigned for consideration after the close of the morning business to-day.

Mr. BLAIR. In the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was displaced, the Chair understands, by an appropriation bill. The Senator from Nevada now asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 62 may be informally laid aside to proceed with the consideration of the resolution indicated by him. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that both orders may be displaced to enable the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 405.

Mr. BLAIR. No, I do not ask that Senate bill 62 shall be displaced. I ask unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside in order that the bill I have indicated may be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. DOLPH. I do, if unanimous consent can be given for the consideration of his resolution. I am also willing that the regular order may be laid aside for the purpose of considering the bill of the Senator from New Hampshire when it is reached. I am willing to give way to both measures, but I do not wish to have the regular order displaced. That is all I desire to guard against.

Mr. BLAIR. As the Senator from Nevada suggests that to-morrow morning will answer his purpose, I shall object, hoping to see some arrangement made to dispose of his resolution to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think both Senators would get their measures disposed of if they would take them up in their order.

Mr. PLUMB. I think I can make a suggestion that will relieve the situation somewhat. It was my design immediately after the completion of the District of Columbia appropriation bill to call up the bill making appropriations for the Agricultural Department. I agreed to waive that for the purpose of allowing the Senator from New Hampshire at least to try to get up his bill, as that seemed to be the temper of the Senate. In view of what the Senator from Nevada says about his convenience concerning the resolution which he has submitted, and the other matters here, I shall not move either one of the appropriation bills pending to-day, but I give notice that to-morrow, immediately at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall move to take up the agricultural appropriation bill, and if that is disposed of in time I shall hope to conclude the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill also to-morrow. That will give time enough for the consideration of the other matters to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], that Senate bill 62, being the unfinished business, may be informally laid aside to enable him to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution indicated by him. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAIR. I object, in the hope that the Senator's resolution may come up to-morrow morning.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by him, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a full statement of all offers of bonds, etc.

Mr. DOLPH. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays. The effect of it is to displace the pending order. I am willing to accept any accommodation of the matter, but not to have the pending order displaced.

Mr. SHERMAN. For the sake of furthering the business I trust that the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from New Hampshire will both have an opportunity to present their matters, and then, as a matter of course, without any further order the bill in charge of the Senator from Oregon will come up. It seems to me to be a waste of time to call for the yeas and nays, and if pairs are observed that will be the end of a quorum.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not at all——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable, and debate can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAIR. I am aware of that; but yet I have heard very prolonged debates upon questions situated precisely as this is. I desire to say, by unanimous consent, that here is a great measure, at least one which concerns a great many working people in this country. It has been pending Congress after Congress, and I feel as though I ought to ask the Senate to take the responsibility of any further postponement. The Senator from Oregon is not ready to proceed with his bill; he is not desirous of proceeding with it, and if the Senate or somebody must make a choice between the consideration of this measure and the resolution of the Senator from Nevada, and there is to be debate, I must ask the Senate to decide the question.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the Senator from New Hampshire going to be absent from the city at any time within a day or two?

Mr. BLAIR. I do not know in regard to that. I have some desire to be absent, but I find that the public business will require the attention of somebody and I shall make quite as much sacrifice by remaining as by going. I do not think that the convenience of Senators in disregarding the requirements of public duty ought to be preferred to the convenience of Senators who will stay here at still greater inconvenience and attend to the public service.

Mr. HARRIS. The reason of my inquiry is because if the Senator from New Hampshire is going to remain here, as the Senator from Nevada is going away, it would furnish to my mind an obvious reason why we ought to give the Senator from Nevada the right of way.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee, by the consent of the Senate, that I have been here attending to the public service without exception every day until yesterday since this session began, so far as I remember, and I have much of the time remained in the hope of getting consideration for this bill. I know that those who are interested in pressing the bill have been here a long while at great expense, many of them, and they are exceedingly desirous that it shall be considered, and so is nearly every Senator in this body, as I understand. It was the understanding that this bill should be considered to-day if some arrangement could be made in regard to the appropriation bills, which had the right of way against everything, and I must ask the Senate to do the postponing, if it is to be done.

Mr. DOLPH. I think I can make a proposition which will permit the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Nevada to press their measures without interfering with mine. I ask unanimous consent that the regular order be laid aside temporarily, to be resumed at 2 o'clock on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses, may be informally laid aside, its consideration to be resumed on Monday next at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that it be postponed until Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent it may be informally laid aside, and the consideration resumed on Monday next at 2 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

OFFER OF BONDS.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to have my motion put to take up the resolution.

Mr. DOLPH. I withdraw my demand for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution submitted by him directing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish a full statement of all offers of bonds, etc.

Mr. BLAIR. I merely wish to say, by unanimous consent, that I hope the motion will not prevail, so that I may have an opportunity to move to take up Senate bill 405.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, and will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted June 11 by Mr. STEWART, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a full statement of all offers of bonds for sale to the Government since April 1, 1888, with dates of offers, amounts of bonds offered, premiums asked, and names of parties offering bonds; also with a full statement of the bonds purchased, giving the dates of purchase, amounts purchased, premiums paid, and names of parties selling since said date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the motion to commit to the Committee on Finance. That takes precedence of the motion to amend.

Mr. COCKRELL. That motion, I believe, was made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion was made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see him in his seat. I hope the motion, however, will be withdrawn; or, if not withdrawn, that it will be voted down.

I shall make my statement now in regard to the amendment which I have pending, in order that we may dispose of this resolution as speedily as possible.

When the Secretary of the Treasury first began inviting offers of bonds under the law in order to reduce the surplus in the Treasury, the Treasury Department received the proposals and daily made a statement showing the name of the person offering bonds, the kind of bonds offered, whether coupon or registered, whether 4½ percents or 4 percents, and the rate at which they were offered. That statement contained, as I say, the names of the persons making the proposals to sell their bonds, a description of the bonds, and the price at which they were offered.

The Secretary of the Treasury also gave the press for publication a statement of the acceptance of the bonds. This was continued for some time, when numerous complaints were made against the disclosure of the names of those who made proposals to sell bonds. It was claimed that it was proving injurious to individual business men, that it was giving publicity to transactions which should not be made public, that it was deterring individuals engaged in business from making proposals to sell their bonds for fear that a misconstruction would be put upon their offer in the commercial world. It was upon these protests that the Treasury Department changed the policy and gave to the press only a statement of the proposals received, the number of bonds, the character and designation of the bonds offered, the price at which they were offered, and then a statement as to the bonds accepted.

These statements gave every particle of information which could be desired by the most curious in regard to these bonds. They gave the number, the amount, and character of the bond, whether it was a hundred-dollar bond or $5,000 in bonds, whether a 4 per cent. or a 4½ per cent., and whether coupon or registered, and the price at which the bonds were offered. That was published. It was given out to the press at 12 o'clock. At 2 o'clock was given out the acceptance of the bonds, and that acceptance contained every particle of the information called for by the resolution, except simply the name of the person who offered to sell, which was first given out and the doing of which was changed for the reason I have stated.

The Treasury Department keeps a complete record entitled "a schedule of proposals received," giving the date of the sale of bonds under the Department circular No. 42, of April 17, 1888. As the proposals are received each day, they are entered upon this schedule in consecutive order, and numbered each day from 1 up. Upon this schedule is entered the name of the person proposing to sell the bonds, with the post-office address, and the kind of bonds, whether coupon or registered, the rate, and the price net, the per cent. realized to the investor and to the United States, and then whether the offer is accepted or rejected. At 12 o'clock all the bids or proposals are given out, showing what I have indicated, and at 2 o'clock the acceptances are given out.

I referred to the curiosity or anxiety of the distinguished Senator from Nevada to find out the names of the persons who are offering bonds. That curiosity may be explained in part by what I believe to be on record in the Treasury Department. If I am not mistaken, on the 11th day of May, 1888, one Ivan C. Michels, a journalist of this city, 622 F street, boarding at the Tremont House, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. C. S. Fairchild, in which he said in substance, "If agreeable to you, would thank you if you would favor the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining with a detailed statement of the United States bonds offered and accepted by the Treasury Department from April 17 to the present day, and hereafter to send the daily reports as furnished to the press to said committee."

I believe that in pursuance of this letter addressed to the Secretary and requesting him to send a list of these offers to the Senate Committee on Mines and Mining, of which the distinguished Senator from Nevada is chairman, the Treasury Department furnished to the Committee on Mines and Mining a detailed statement, giving all the information called for by the resolution, save only the names of the persons proposing to sell bonds to the Government. So the distinguished Senator from Nevada has had and enjoyed rights and privileges which other Senators have not enjoyed. He and the distinguished journalist whose name I have given have had before them all the time a complete statement of the bonds bought by the Government.

Now, why do they insist upon having the names? There must be a reason; there must be some motive. Why do they want the names of the gentlemen who are proposing to sell bonds? As I said yesterday, if there were the least intimation that there had been any impropriety of any kind in any act of the Treasury Department charged, I should then very gladly withdraw the proposed amendment I have offered.

The Treasury Department has no more interest in this matter than any Senator upon this floor. The Treasury Department in this whole matter has acted for what it believed to be the very best interests of the public service and the very best means of securing bonds at the lowest price. I say the official record shows that in every solitary instance, without one particle of exception, the Treasury Department accepted the lowest bid. Then the question is simply a naked one, why does the distinguished Senator from Nevada insist upon having these names when he has had all the time all the information called for, obtained upon the personal application of a journalist of this city?

I desire to withdraw my amendment, and to state that the Treasury Department invites the closest scrutiny of every one of its official acts. If the Senate of the United States thinks it is the best policy to publish to the world for the benefit of the distinguished Senator from Nevada, chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, and the distinguished journalist to whom I have referred, the names of all those citizens of the United States who have offered to sell bonds to the Government, then the responsibility for the result rests entirely upon the Senate and not upon the Treasury Department.

I hope the Senate will vote down the proposal to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance, and I shall then withdraw my amendment, and the Senator's resolution may pass just in the form that he desires.

Mr. STEWART. I am delighted that the Senator from Missouri has at last seen the propriety of having no secrecy about this matter. I was not aware of the letter Mr. Michels wrote for the Committee on Mines and Mining, but I approve of it. I think it is information that every man should possess, and I think that the more publicity we have in regard to this matter, the better it is for the Secretary of the Treasury. It is very much better for the Secretary of the Treasury to have publicity given to it. There has been criticism, and very severe criticism, of the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to matters very nearly allied to this. It is a fact, I believe it is undisputed, that several gentlemen left the Treasury Department and organized a bank in New York, and that occasioned some comment. Immediately upon the organization of that bank certain orders were made to fill it with public money. The Secretary of the Treasury on the 8th of October last directed the Treasurer of the United States as follows:

> SIR: The Western National Bank of New York City has been designated a United States depository, and the security fixed for the present at $1,000,000 of United States 4 per cent. bonds. In order to avoid the usual delay in obtaining a balance by accumulating revenue deposits, I will thank you, when the bonds are received, to cause to be transferred to said bank from national-bank depositories other than those in New York City such amounts as may be deposited therein to the credit of your general account, in excess of their authorized balances, until the sum of $1,100,000 is reached, which amount the Western National Bank will be authorized to hold as a fixed balance.
> Respectfully, yours,
> C. S. FAIRCHILD, Secretary.

This may all be very well; the money may as well be in that bank as in any other bank; but suppose this thing is to remain secret, may not the Secretary of the Treasury be injured by the suspicion that the persons who formed this bank and received this large deposit may have been given advantages, or others may have been given advantages? It seems to me it is better for the Secretary to have publicity given to these transactions. His relations with some banks are relations of friendship only, I will admit, but considering the speed with which he urged a large deposit in that bank, it seems to me that it would be well if the country knew with whom he is dealing.

Publicity, I say, is necessary for his reputation, because if it should turn out hereafter that persons connected with this bank were the principal sellers, there would be talk with regard to it, and there would be criticism. I say that publicity is better in this instance, and it is better in every transaction of the Department. If the Government can not do business in public as other people do, it had better not do business at all. It had better not buy its bonds unless it can buy them publicly, so that nobody can have reason to complain; for I say there may be complaints. There is now complaint of favoritism in the deposits in the national banks. It is suggested that the Secretary of the Treasury having the discretion uses it in the interest of his friends. He states that it is entirely discretionary with him to deposit the $60,000,000, or whatever amount may be deposited, in whatever banks he pleases. He has this enormous discretionary power, and having this enormous discretionary power his friends ought to advise him to give the greatest publicity to its exercise.

In response to a resolution of the Senate with regard to deposits with the national banks, the Acting Secretary of the Treasury said, under date of April 17:

> In reply I inclose herewith statement showing names of national banks designated as depositories, location of said banks, and amounts deposited therewith.
> No interest is paid by national banks on public funds deposited therewith.
> The place of deposit is entirely discretionary with the Secretary.
> Respectfully, yours,
> HUGH S. THOMPSON,
> Acting Secretary.

I say that this great discretionary power placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, whereby he can make rich or make poor by withdrawing deposits rapidly from one place and putting them at another, ought to make him anxious and desirous of publicity. It is an enormous power to buy an unlimited amount of 4 per cent. bonds at premiums ranging from 24½ to 27½. I say the country is jealous of these enormous premiums, and I think it is for the safety of all parties that no step should be taken in the exercise of this extraordinary power without the country being advised of it.

The paltry sum that might be saved by following another course, if it could be done cheaper, would not repay for the suspicion which necessarily would attach to the Secretary of the Treasury under the discretion he has, no matter what he did with this enormous discretion. He continues to buy bonds, and he must buy bonds and exercise this discretion; and when the country sees that these enormous premiums are paid to the bondholders they will hold him to the strictest responsibility. He had better have the transaction made public from day to day, and let the people see exactly what is being done.

I did not offer the resolution in any spirit of hostility to the Secretary of the Treasury. I disclaim it. I disclaim ever having made a suggestion of criticism against him with any improper motive; but I say in the exercise of this enormous discretion in loaning money and in buying bonds, there is an uneasiness necessarily in the country and a desire to know all, and to know the necessity of purchasing bonds at this enormous premium under any circumstances. No man justifies it except on account of an accumulating surplus in the Treasury which is withdrawing the circulating medium of the people. It is only excused because it is done to give the people the money necessary to do business with, and it is a fearful commentary on our financial legislation. It is a fearful commentary upon the legislation of the country, and whoever is responsible for this legislation and this necessity has assumed a fearful responsibility. If the people can fix the responsibility, if it can be understood where it rests, they will hold those upon whom it rests accountable.

No man placed as the Secretary of the Treasury is, exercising these enormous powers affecting the interest of all citizens of the United States, not only the money taken from them by taxation, but the circulating medium with which they do business, should shrink from publicity. If the people are to be furnished with money to do business on at this enormous sacrifice, and the sacrifice must be made, the Secretary of the Treasury ought to be the first man to say, "Let it be done publicly; let all the world know it."

I am glad that the Senator from Missouri has withdrawn his amendment, and I hope the Senate will adopt the resolution so that we may relieve the Secretary of the Treasury from the delicate position which he now occupies, and from the certainty of being censured if those transactions are not made public.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now withdraw the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri is withdrawn. The question recurs upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate with a full statement of all offers of bonds for sale to the Government since April 1, 1888, with dates of offers, amounts of bonds offered, premiums asked, and the names of parties offering bonds; also with a full statement of the bonds purchased, giving the dates of purchase, amounts purchased, premiums paid, and the names of parties selling since said date.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, who evidently has conferred with the Secretary of the Treasury, whether the books of which he speaks are kept open so that everybody may see them. Are the books that contain the offers—the bids—public?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, I think so. Here is a copy of the heading of the bids given out; they give out everything except the names of the parties. I suppose that any gentleman going there can ascertain the facts. I do not know whether they would give out the statement to the newspapers for publication.

Mr. TELLER. But I mean to an individual.

Mr. COCKRELL. Any person going there would be shown this register, which is kept daily. Here is the form of it: "Schedule of proposals received June 13, 1888." This is one made out for bids to be received this morning for the sale of bonds under Department circular No. 42, April 17, 1888. They had yesterday's receipts of bonds all put down, name, post-office address, and number of bonds, and here [indicating] whether accepted or rejected, and here [indicating] the net price. When the offer is received they send the offer up to the actuary, who makes a calculation of what it costs, of the rate of investment. The interest now on Government bonds is about 2.30 per cent.; that is what they yield, so that the Government on each purchase of a bond to-day, for example, would save 2.30 per cent. interest on the amount paid for the bond.

Mr. TELLER. I asked the question because I thought it would be better perhaps to amend the resolution so as to open the books, but if that is the practice I do not care about interfering with the resolution.

I wish to say that I intended to vote for the resolution and against the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, not that it has ever occurred to me that there was any improper conduct on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, but because I believe it to be very essential that the people of the United States on all these great financial questions should feel the same way that people do feel, I think, who come in close contact with governmental affairs. I suppose it is not an exaggeration to say that no people in the history of the world have ever given to their financial officers such unlimited authority as we have given to ours, and it is greatly to our credit that I do not think to-day there will rise a man anywhere who is fair-minded who will claim that this great power—I am speaking now of the great power given since the war—has been at any time in the history of this country abused willfully and corruptly by any official charged with its execution. Our officials may have made mistakes, as the legislative department has made mistakes, but I repeat that I doubt whether in all this land any man whose opinion would be worth anything upon that question could be found to say that any public officer serving in that great Department of the Treasury has ever misused his power.

While I am anxious that the bonds the Government buys should be bought at the cheapest possible rate, I would rather that 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. should be added to the price of every bond bought than that any considerable part of the people of the United States should believe that the officers intrusted with the power to purchase were using that power for their own personal benefit. For that reason, although perhaps it might increase the value of the bonds, and people might want to get more for them, or might refuse to offer them and thus the bonds might be enhanced in value, yet I should be in favor of giving to the people all information upon this subject, even at governmental expense, for it is more important to the people of the United States that they should have confidence in their public officers than it is that they should save a little money.

I wish to repeat that I have not the slightest suspicion that there is any necessity for the opening of these books. I have no suspicion in my mind that it will show favoritism or partiality, for I have sufficient confidence in the gentleman who is called to that high position, until the contrary is proved, to believe that he will conduct himself exactly as his predecessors have done, with honor and with credit to the American name.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the information required by the resolution I understand is now made public in every particular except in reference to the names of the persons who offer bonds. I do not know that there is any very great objection to having those names published to the world so far as the Government is concerned; but may it not be a matter of some interest to the persons who make the offer of these bonds that they should not be published as offering their securities for sale?

Might it not affect the credit of those individuals if it were known that men who are supposed to be men of capital, men of business, were under the necessity of parting with their securities? Might we not do injustice to those gentlemen, and ought we not be careful how we deal with a question of that kind when it may possibly affect the credit, not of the Government, but the credit of persons who are compelled to offer to the Government their bonds for sale?

Individually I have no objection to the information sought, but we ought not to require it from a morbid curiosity and desire to know whether Mr. So-and-so, of the city of New York, or Mr. So-and-so, of the city of New Orleans, has been compelled to sell to the Government the bonds which he holds. It may affect their credit without accomplishing any purpose whatever. If we have the information that the Government has purchased so many bonds at such a rate, what advantage is it that publication should be made of the names of those from whom bonds are purchased?

So far as the Secretary of the Treasury is concerned, the Senator from Nevada intimated that there was suspicion. Well, that may be. Suspicion arises in the breasts of a great many persons without any cause. It perhaps is the natural tendency of humanity to cast a suspicion upon everybody else but themselves.

There is no character, I suppose, so elevated in this land but that some person may have some suspicion that something is wrong in the character of that person. The highest and brightest names that have ever adorned the pages of our history have been subject to suspicions, many of which were unfounded and unreasonable and unjust.

I venture the assertion that no man who respects his own reputation, who respects the judgment of his fellow-men, will undertake to utter as a suspicion of his own anything derogatory to the present Secretary of the Treasury or to the late Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury was not anxious to avail himself of the duty which has been thrown upon him by the enactment of law to handle this fund and to invest it in Government bonds. The necessities of the country require that the money should be put in circulation.

You had the enactment upon your statute-book in which you said there was ample authority, and you censured the Secretary of the Treasury and the President for not exercising the power which you said already existed when the Secretary of the Treasury hesitated to exercise an authority which he thought might be doubtful; and now that he is exercising it the Senator from Nevada comes in and talks about suspicions for doing the very thing that you have compelled him to do by law.

While there have been some things connected with the conduct of the Government under the present Administration that I may not indorse and I would not approve, yet I say that there has been nothing in the financial operations of this Administration upon which any man can lay his finger that is derogatory or that would put a blush in the cheek of any friend of the Administration. Its record is clean. Suspicions that may arise in minds which are prone to be suspicious are not damaging. Bring the facts against this Administration.

If there is anything wrong in it, expose it as it ought to be exposed. But from the very commencement of this session there has been a feeling around to see if something could be caught up that would prove derogatory to the character of this Administration. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has been probing around through this land, interviewing persons who have been dismissed from the public service, to see if they had some complaint or some revelation that they could make which might be damaging to the Administration. It may be a congenial employment for gentlemen to deal with characters of that kind, but I envy not the disposition, I envy not the labor of love in which such committees are employed.

I suppose that the object of the resolution of the Senator from Nevada is that he may get something to lay before the public, that some person may be induced to believe that there is something wrong about one man offering bonds and not having them accepted, while the bonds of somebody else were accepted.

Make your investigation. The Secretary of the Treasury does not care, so far as he is concerned. He may have some idea that it may be doing injustice to the parties who are making these offers, but so far as his own acts are concerned I venture the assertion that he does not care a fig for all the investigations which the Senate or both Houses of Congress may institute in reference to his management of the Treasury Department.

I shall not detain the Senate, but I wish to say that I have been watching these longing, anxious endeavors of the other side of this Chamber by investigating committees and by smelling committees to bring something out that might tell against this Administration. But this Administration, at any rate, for its honesty, for its cleanness, for its freedom from everything that tends to corruption, is enshrined in the affections of the American people, and if I do not mistake the tendencies of the times that confidence which the people have given to it, and which it has been entitled to, will be continued for another four years.

Mr. TELLER. I do not see how the Senator from Delaware can assume that this is an attack upon the Secretary of the Treasury. It is nothing but a request on the part of the Senate that he furnish us the information which we have been already informed is practically public information.

I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that the way to prevent any suspicion is to have no secrecy about a public affair. Whenever the people find the doors shut and something being done behind the doors, whether it is in the Treasury Department or in any other Department of the Government, they have some suspicions immediately that there is something wrong about it. That is not confined entirely to the Treasury Department. I think they have the same objection when we close our doors and discuss secretly public questions in which they are quite as much interested as we are. For that reason I have always insisted upon the greatest publicity.

The Senator from Delaware complains that we are attacking this Administration. The Senator can not have forgotten that practically there has been no political discussion in this body since last December. Nobody is attacking the Administration now. Compare the last three years with any previous Administration, and the Senator can hardly talk about an attack being made on this Administration. He claims for it great purity. He can not claim any more for it than the friends of the preceding Administration claimed for it, and with as much reason as he claims it to-day. With a hostile Administration for now nearly four years, there has not been any scandal developed. I do not hesitate to say that when this Administration came into power a very large number of its adherents believed (and I think some of them hoped) that the opportunity would be presented of exposing a great scandal against some of the public officers who had preceded the present Administration. Nothing of the kind has been developed. I believe a great majority of the people of the United States, irrespective of party, are glad that no such scandal has been developed. They are glad to know that their public servants are honest. As for myself, I would no sooner stand in this Chamber and lodge a false charge against a public officer than I would against my neighbor. I have the same opinion of the man who does it here or elsewhere for political purposes that I have of the man who slanders his neighbor out of pique, or hatred, or for the hope of personal advantage.

This Administration is subject to criticism if it does anything that is improper. It has received but little criticism. It might have received more. Its financial policy, admitting it to be perfectly honest, which I am quite free to admit, will not stand the test of common sense and statesmanship; and to-day the Administration can not number among the supporters of its financial policy on the other side of the Chamber exceeding a fifth of the number there sitting. Who are wrong, the Senators who sit on that side of the Chamber or the Administration? I do not think even the Senator from Delaware indorses its financial policy. I doubt to-day whether the prominent financial proposition put forth by this Administration when it came into power can get five votes on that side of the Chamber, and it can not get twenty-five in another body—of its own political supporters I speak now.

But because we do not agree with the financial policy it is not necessary that anybody should insist that we are charging the Administration with corruption or lack of fidelity to public interests. It is a lack of knowledge, it is a lack of judgment upon these questions, in my opinion.

This Administration has never been arraigned on this side of the Chamber as it has been on that. No man has felt free on this side of the Chamber to speak in the harsh terms that have been heard on that side of the Chamber. While on this side we might fully sympathize with the views expressed on that side, we have refrained from doing it. I do not think anybody can complain of the Republican party that they have not treated this Administration with kindness and with courtesy such as has never been extended to any other administration in the history of this country from its earliest period down to the time this Administration came into power. It is not because we believe it has been wise; it is not because we believe there have been statesmen at the head of the Government; it is because we felt that charges here and criticisms here and criticisms in the other body would not specially promote the interest of good government.

There is a proper place and there is a proper time to bring this Administration to the test. There will be an opportunity to see whether the people approve it or approve it in such a way that they want to reelect the present Executive. It is true that the great mass of people start out handicapped with 153 electoral votes that do not need any attention and do not depend upon the popular vote as actually cast; but there is a portion of the country that has the casting vote on this question that is to be heard from soon, and if they approve of the President's financial policy, if they approve of his economic policy, if they approve of his civil-service policy, and if they approve of his foreign policy, and his vetoes and his other exhibitions of power, perhaps never before exhibited or asserted, I suppose he will be re-elected.

I want to insist that nobody on the other side of the Chamber has any right to complain of us on this side. We have made no charges of corruption, and we have not talked about there being any wickedness, but we shall not cease to criticise and to bring in question the propriety of the course that the Administration pursues upon every subject and upon any subject. That is our right; that is a right which both sides of the Senate, irrespective of political associations and affiliations, until recently at least, have asserted. I admit there are some indications now that the period of criticism of the Administration by its friends and supporters has passed. I admit it looks now as if the thumbscrew has been put in force, and every man will stand up in line and exclaim, "Great is Grover Cleveland the First," he of whom it is said by one of his organs that he has crowned himself; he who, nobody denies, forced his own nomination against the will of very many representative Democrats in this country; he who, it is alleged, fixed the platform for the Democratic party as well as his associate on the ticket.

But, Mr. President, these questions are to be submitted to another tribunal, in another place, and there is where we shall meet the Senator from Delaware, and be quite willing to meet him on these questions, and to fight out this contest in the American way, where we are allowed to do it, and, if beaten, to submit, as it becomes a Republican in a republican government, conceding to the majority the right to rule and to govern, and not to oppose and rebel against the will of the majority as has been done, at least in some sections of the country and at some times.

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada for a little information in reference to this matter. I have not heard any one state yet, and I should like to know, of what possible advantage to himself or any other citizen of the United States it will be to know the names of the persons who offer to sell bonds to the Government of the United States? For myself, I can not see of what possible practical advantage it will be to any man in the country, unless he wants to inform himself particularly of the transactions of some individual, of what public interest it is to know the name of a person who makes an offer of bonds. If it be doubted that the offer is a genuine one as reported to the Department and put on the books, there is a very easy way to verify that, but as to the constant publication of the names and the conditions of offers made to the Government of the United States, I can not see of what possible advantage it can be. I should like to hear it stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SOPHIA W. WRIGHT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 901) for the relief of Sophia W. Wright; which was, in line 5, after the words "rate of," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sophia W. Wright, a volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend from Kentucky, who says he knows more about the rules than I do, told me the motion was in order. [Laughter.] But for that suggestion, I should not have made the motion.

Mr. BLAIR. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It being ascertained that a quorum is not present, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to prefer a request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can entertain no request——

Mr. BLAIR. Except by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a request by unanimous consent, a quorum not being present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. Is that in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 14, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 13, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The Speaker announced the following as the committee on the part of the House of Representatives to visit the centennial exposition to commemorate the organization of the Northwest Territory: BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH, of Ohio, WILLIAM M. SPRINGER, of Illinois, WILLIAM C. P. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, GEORGE W. STEELE, of Indiana, MELBOURNE H. FORD, of Michigan.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War of appropriations for the Mississippi River Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUSAN E. ALGER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 1162) for the relief of Susan E. Alger; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, for two weeks, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, for two days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. PLUMB, for four days, on account of illness.

To Mr. BOOTHMAN, until Saturday, June 23, on account of important business.

To Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, until Saturday, June 23, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. STRUBLE, by unanimous consent, obtained permission to take from the files of the House, without substituting copies, the discharge and all other papers filed by C. H. Drake, late a captain in the Union Army, in relation to his application for the passage of a law providing for the muster and pay of certain officers in the Army; the said law having been enacted by Congress.

PUYALLUP VALLEY RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2807) to grant to the Puyallup Valley Railway Company a right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation, in Washington Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Committee on Indian Affairs of the House has unanimously reported a bill similar to this Senate bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be considered at this time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think we had better go on with the regular order.

Mr. VOORHEES. The gentleman will permit me to explain that this is simply a bill granting right of way through the Puyallup Indian reservation, in Washington Territory.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the bill be read.

Mr. BLAND. We are making but slow progress with the tariff bill. I think this matter had better wait until we get through with that. I demand the regular order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask unanimous consent, then, that the bill remain on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will retain the bill, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

AUGUSTA AND THEODORE HEISS.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 6803) for the relief of Augusta Heiss and Theodore Heiss was improperly referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. If there be no objection, that committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Claims. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER LANDS, IOWA.

The SPEAKER. Some time since the Committee on Public Lands proposed to report as a matter of privilege the bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title to settlers on Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, against which a question of order was raised, which is still pending. In accordance with an understanding among gentlemen interested in the bill, the Chair, if there be no objection, will order the bill and report to be printed and recommitted, the question of order being reserved for decision at a future time when the bill may again come before the House. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

GETTYSBURGH REUNION.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of committees for reports.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman will withhold that request for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope that may be deferred for a moment.

Mr. McMILLIN. The regular order having been demanded, the call of committees is the next business in order.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope that matter may be deferred a moment till gentlemen hear the proposition I wish to make. I desire to present for immediate consideration and passage a joint resolution which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Civil-Service Reform, and which it is necessary should be acted on at once if it is to avail anything.

Mr. McMILLIN. If it occupies any time I must insist on the regular order.

Mr. BAYNE. It will take no time.

Mr. McMILLIN. We have made such slow progress with the tariff bill that I think we are justified in going ahead with that to the exclusion of other business.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution granting leave of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the heads of Departments are hereby authorized to grant to all persons employed in the civil service of the United States who were present at the battle of Gettysburgh, either in the Union or Confederate forces, sufficient leave of absence, without loss of pay, to attend the reunion to be held at Gettysburgh on the 3d day of July next; such absence not to be taken from the allowance made by law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BAYNE. I trust my friend from Arkansas will allow this resolution to pass.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. These Department employés are now entitled by law to a certain term of vacation each year; and the heads of Departments can now grant the leaves to come out of the annual vacation, without loss of pay; and beyond that I think we ought not to make any extension.

Mr. BAYNE. That is an exceptional case. I hope my friend will not object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The heads of the Departments have now the power to grant leave of absence to Department employés to the extent of thirty days in any one year; and that, I think, is as far as it ought to be extended unless we extend for all, which no one says is just. Unless we do this it is class legislation; and I do not believe in picking out this or any other class of our citizens or employés for special and wholly unnecessary legislation.

Mr. BLAND. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees.

Mr. McMILLIN. I ask consent that the call of committees be dispensed with, and that gentlemen have leave to file reports at the desk.

Mr. PETERS. We had better go right through with the regular order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have no objection. Let the call proceed.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO NAVIGATION, ETC.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was called) said: I am directed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to report back with sundry amendments the bill (S. 27) to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not sent to the desk the official copy of the bill from the Senate, which it is necessary that the Clerk should have in order to make the proper indorsements upon it. What the gentleman has sent to the desk purports to be a printed copy of the Senate bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state that the original bill is not in my possession, nor in the possession of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Then the report can not now be made. The Clerk must have the official engrossed bill from the Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will ask the Clerk to furnish it, then.

The SPEAKER. It was referred to the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is not in the possession of the committee. The committee has taken favorable action, but has acted upon a printed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The engrossed bill from the Senate must be supplied in some way before the report can be accepted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That may be; but I am not responsible.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not deciding who is responsible, but merely stating that the official copy of the bill must be here before the report can be received at the desk.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the morning hour be dispensed with, and that by unanimous consent permission be granted to file reports with the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. That request has already been made and objected to by the gentleman from Kansas. It will take but a moment to complete the call of the committees.

Mr. PETERS. I want to take the regular order right through.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT DODGE, IOWA.

Mr. NEWTON, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 289) for the erection of a public building at Fort Dodge, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ANNIE M. NOYES.

Mr. FRENCH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2471) granting a pension to Annie M. Noyes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LYDIA A. EATON.

Mr. FRENCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2472) granting a pension to Lydia A. Eaton; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BETSY A. MOWER.

Mr. FRENCH also, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 2438) granting an increase of pension to Betsy A. Mower; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ABRAM G. HOYT.

Mr. LYNCH, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 4021) for the relief of Abram G. Hoyt; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO GOVERNMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BAYNE, from the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, reported back with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 178) granting leave of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AERIAL NAVIGATION.

Mr. LANDES, from the Select Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 5717) making an appropriation of $150,000 to enable A. de Bausett to build an air-ship for the transportation of passengers and freight through the air, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of standing and select committees.

Mr. McMILLIN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I have a privileged report to submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send it to the desk.

NATHANIEL Q. HENDERSON.

Mr. BOOTHMAN, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably the following resolution:

Resolved, That Nathaniel Q. Henderson be allowed, for services at the Clerk's desk of the House from April 4 to April 8, 1888, both inclusive, the sum of $50, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. The committee recommend the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BOOTHMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. Now I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

Mr. PETERS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETERS. If this motion is voted down, will it then be in order to call the committees in the second hour?

The SPEAKER. If the House refuses to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills raising revenue, or for the consideration of general appropriation bills, those being the only two motions now in order, it would then proceed to consider bills for one hour.

Mr. PETERS. I hope the motion to go into Committee of the Whole will be voted down, so that we can have the second hour for consideration.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. McMILLIN, the House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 44.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

THE TARIFF.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of a bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 37. Sunn, sisal grass, and other vegetable fibers.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out that line. The Mills bill has progressed to a certain extent in the Committee of the Whole, and without any amendments of consequence. It is perfectly evident to the members of the House, and must be now evident to the people of the country, that this bill as reported from the committee will pass the House of Representatives if the Democratic party can muster sufficient votes to put it through. It must be perfectly evident to the people of the country that they are to have this bill substantially in its present form. I believe the only modifications proposed and agreed upon by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means are certain inconsequential amendments. Now, Mr. Chairman, I heard my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] say in debate the other evening in his colloquy with my other colleague, Judge KELLEY, that this bill disturbed the business interests of the country. He said:

I believed, sir, that it was my duty as a member of this House, in behalf of the business men of this country, whose interests are more or less affected by even the discussion of this bill [derisive cries on the Republican side], to make every endeavor to get a vote on the bill at the earliest possible date, so that the country would know—so that the business men of the country would know—what they have to do to manage their own affairs. I had no other interest, Mr. Chairman, and no other object in view, because, as a business man, and I claim to be one, I know that, whether this bill may be for the best interests of the country if it should become a law, or whether it may be detrimental, during its agitation no merchant, no manufacturer, no business man affected by it can tell from one day to the next what he can do or ought to do in the management of his business. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Now, sir, inasmuch as we are sure this bill will pass the House substantially in its present form, what must be thought of the confession of that business representative of the Committee on Ways and Means that the mere agitation of this bill is disturbing the business of the country, and that no merchant, no manufacturer, no business man knows what he should do or can do until the fate of the bill shall be determined? If the agitation of this measure causes detriment to the business interests of this country, what will the passage of the bill do? My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] admits in his speech that he does not know what effect it may have upon the business affairs of the country. He wants to get it through as soon as possible, that a new adjustment of business relations may take place in conformity with the bill. He saves himself from the effects that may follow by saying the business men should know what they are to have to do; and then, in that very sentence, he says he does not know whether this bill may be for the best interests of the country or whether it may be detrimental. Is not that an extraordinary confession? It is a true confession. Unconsciously, in the heat of the controversy between by colleague [Mr. KELLEY] and my colleague [Mr. SCOTT], the truth came out from my colleague [Mr. SCOTT], and it is the fairest and plainest confession that has yet been made, that the Democratic majority which proposes this bill does not know and the best business man of that committee does not know what effect this measure is going to have upon the business affairs of the country, manufacturing, mercantile, and all other classes. But they do know, and he assumes and confesses, that the agitation of the bill injures business, and it is evidently a corollary that the bill itself, if it should become a law, would have that effect.

The question recurred on Mr. BAYNE's amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Burlaps not exceeding 60 inches in width, of flax.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words of that line.

Mr. McMILLIN. We have passed that line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman rose in time to move an amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the Clerk read the paragraph. I think the paragraph was not fully read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman desires to move an amendment to line 37.

Mr. McMILLIN. We have passed from that, but I understand the gentleman rose in time.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter that has been presented on the other side repeatedly. I embrace this opportunity because I notice that some one, I do not know by whose order or at whose request, has laid upon the desks of members a statement which I regard as very important and to which I desire to call the attention of the House.

If there has been any argument found in any of the speeches on the other side of this House that seemed to sustain their vague ideas of revenue reform it has been the argument which has been made so often on the labor question in which there is a palpable error. Every gentleman who has spoken in support of this bill, so far as I have observed, in his effort to ascertain the profits of the manufacturer, has first added together the wages paid and the cost of materials used and then subtracted this sum from the value of the product, and called the remainder the manufacturer's profits, and on this basis his argument and his conclusions were based. In this way the greatest and most illogical conclusions have been reached, and the most erroneous teachings have been inculcated. The manufacturer pays so much for labor and so much for materials, but this is not all that he pays out. The census reports show certain things, but we must not infer that they show everything. Take for instance the following figures from the census reports of 1880, showing amount of capital, wages, cost of materials used, value of productions, and percentage on capital after deducting wages and material from production.

Wages paid	941,226,925
Cost of materials used	3,396,823,549
Value of production	5,369,579,191
Percentage on capital after deducting wages and material from production	36.7 per cent.

The 36.7 per cent. is not profit, and those who have called it the manufacturers' profits have entirely ignored the interest on the money invested, the discounts paid, the expense of reclamation of goods, freights on rejected goods at destination points, damages in transit, transfer rents, express charges, office expenses, personal services, leases, taxes, water rents, repairs, wear and tear, commissions on sales, advertising, fuel, insurance, accidental delays, printing, postage, traveling expenses, and other outlays, which will aggregate from 20 to 25 per cent. of the capital invested, according to the character and magnitude of the business. From this 36.7 per cent. there should be subtracted at least 20 per cent. for these legitimate contingent expenses, which would at once reduce the estimate to 16.7 per cent., which is subject to other deductions on account of the under estimate of capital shown in the census reports.

I have taken the trouble to ascertain what these census returns mean, and have made inquiries of twenty-five or thirty manufacturing establishments in regard to their manner of doing business, and I know what answer they give when interrogated as to the amount of their capital, and I am satisfied that they have answered inquiries as to capital by a statement of the nominal amount of capital, the amount for which the companies have been incorporated, although the amount of capital actually employed may be, and often is, a great deal more.

I undertake to say that the census reports do not show the actual amount of capital employed in the business of the country. There is in my district a company whose capital is $300,000, and it has a surplus of $120,000, and yet the officers inform me that they use in their business an average of $600,000, and consequently they use in their business $180,000 above their capital and surplus.

Gentlemen on the other side, in calculating the expenses of that business, would ignore entirely the fact that the corporation is required to pay interest on this $180,000. It is quite evident therefore that calculations of this kind are necessarily erroneous, and the census statements as to capital are only approximate. They do not show the amount of capital actually employed in the industries of the country. Mr. Chairman, I desire further to call the attention of the House to two tables, prepared by Mr. C. A. Scott, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

There has been a great deal said here in regard to the profits made by the manufacturers of this country, but if gentlemen will take the trouble to look at these tables as I have done they will discover that where the protected industries are separated from the unprotected industries of this country, the protected industries make 10 per cent. less than the non-protected industries.

Here is a list of twenty-one of the leading manufactures of the country, some of which are highly protected, among them being the manufacture of iron and steel, boots and shoes, men's clothing, women's clothing, cotton goods, woolen goods, glass, hosiery, knit goods, and many others, and if you add together the wages paid and the cost of the materials used, and subtract the sum from the value of the product, you will find that the remainder is equal to 27 per cent. of the aggregate capital as shown by the census reports.

If you take from this 20 per cent., which is the estimate made by business men generally as the aggregate of interest, insurance, and the other expenses to which I have alluded, you will find that these twenty-one manufacturing industries have left a profit of only 7 per cent. Hence as protected and non-protected industries are mixed together in the census reports, in order to determine which receives the highest award of percentage, we will select, without prejudice, protected industries from the list furnished by the census, as shown in the following table, comprising nearly one-half of the whole:

The percentage on capital after deducting wages and materials from production is 27 per cent., from which deduct 20 per cent. for contingent expenses, and the result is 7 per cent. due the manufacturer and 32 per cent. due labor on the capital invested—over four times as much in favor of labor. Continuing this inquiry the following table of non-protected industries is submitted, comprising nearly one-third of the whole:

As herein shown, the percentage on capital after deducting wages and materials is 37 per cent.; subtract 20 per cent. for expenses, as described, and the result awards the manufacturer 17 per cent. and labor 28 per cent. on capital invested; hence the preceding tables clearly show that protected industries pay the highest proportion of wages and receive a less proportion of profit than the non-protected and other industries.

If I am correct, and I will be glad to be corrected if I am not, all of the speeches made by the Democratic side of this House in regard to the influence of a protective tariff upon labor have been fallacious and misleading. All of their conclusions have been erroneous. The charge that the profits of the manufacturer have been enormous is wholly unfounded. Their statements as to how much went to capital and how much to labor are untrue, and they have been misled by omitting to charge up against the gross receipts the contingent expenses, as I have explained, and by counting the capital furnished by the census reports as the whole of the capital employed, when it is only the nominal capital. And this view is confirmed by the comparison I have made between protected and unprotected industries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The amendment of Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Burlaps, not exceeding 60 inches in width, of flax, jute, or hemp, or of which flax, jute, or hemp, or either of them, shall be the component material of chief value.

Mr. WARNER. I move to strike out lines 38, 39, and 40. I make this motion for the reason that the State which I in part represent upon this floor manufactures nearly one-half of the cotton bagging that is made in the United States and more than in any other State in the Union. It is true, sir, that while there is not a manufactory of this article in my district, but I should welcome one, two of the gentlemen who represent the great manufacturing city of St. Louis are absent on important business, and for the further reason the letter and the papers which I hold in my hand have been sent to me, and with the consent of my colleague [Mr. CLARDY] I present them to the committee.

To save time I will read a petition from one hundred and sixty-one operatives in one of these mills, in the city of St. Louis, the petition of those who work in the mills, men who earn their living by the sweat of their brows, asking that they be not placed upon the starvation wages paid to operatives at Dundee, Scotland, or, what is worse, the cooly labor of Calcutta, India, or be turned out of employment. I have not time to read the petition in full, but I will have it printed with my remarks. It gives quotations from the consular reports to show the abject condition of poverty, squalor, and wretchedness that exists among the operatives of Dundee, Scotland, and gives the reasons why the change which the pending bill proposes in the tariff in this particular should not be made.

The great manufacturing industry of the State of Missouri, and of the United States, which manufactures 50,000,000 yards of cotton bagging annually, is affected by taking the duty off burlaps to this extent, that if burlaps are admitted free of duty they will be substituted, as stated in this communication, for cotton bagging used for the bagging of the cotton product of this country, and thereby these mills will be shut down, if the testimony before the committee is to be believed. I think I saw a gentleman on the other side smile when I gave as my reason for presenting this petition that the proposed legislation affected the manufacturing interests of my State. Mr. Chairman, while my Democratic friends are making so free in claiming protection for every interest in their States, I know no reason why a Representative of the State of Missouri, representing her interests upon this floor, should not also claim a slice of the same protection. Democratic members from other States demand protection for their industries; why should not my Democratic colleagues do the same without having their Democracy questioned?

Sir, I now send to the Clerk's desk a paper, as I have said, signed by one hundred and sixty-one laborers in this industry. The Clerk will please read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 25, 1888.

Memorial of operatives of the Standard Mills Bagging Company of St. Louis, Mo.

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that they are operatives and employés of the Standard Mills Bagging Company of the city of St. Louis, Mo.; that the provisions of the Mills tariff bill reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, and now pending in the House of Representatives, reducing the tariff on jute bagging to 15 per cent. ad valorem and placing burlaps on the free-list, will compel all the manufacturers of these fabrics in the United States to permanently shut down their factories, or will compel us, your petitioners, to work for the low wages paid to the operatives of Dundee, and, after a short time, the still lower wages paid to the pauper labor of Calcutta—in the former case less than one-half and in the latter case less than one-fifth the wages we receive.

Your petitioners would respectfully solicit your attention to the official report of Consul Wells to the State Department on the condition of jute laborers of Dundee (Consular Reports on Foreign Labor, volume 1, page 86, and volume 2, page 954), wherein it appears that the average weekly wages of females are but $2.50; that 23,670 persons live in 8,620 single rooms—"hovels"—with nothing to lie on but the bare floor, and no covering but coarse burlap cloth, and that only occasionally; that 74,374 men, women, and children occupy 16,187 two-room houses, and that thus, from extreme poverty, overcrowding in "these vile dens," filth, and neglect, they are subjected to all kinds of wretchedness, infectious diseases, and immorality, with hardly a chance to raise themselves to the level of a decent manhood and womanhood.

Your petitioners respectfully suggest that provisions of law which subject us as wage-workers to the alternative of such unhappy conditions as are shown in these official reports can not be in accordance with the wisdom of your honorable body, and humbly pray relief therefrom.

Your petitioners state that the wages paid them are the only means of livelihood for themselves and their families; that the various departments of their work, to which they have given many years of their lives, require long practice and skill; that if this business is destroyed they will be cut off from the means of earning a living in work which they understand, and will be subjected to the hardships of novel precarious employments now already overcrowded.

Your petitioners therefore humbly pray that the present tariff on bagging and burlaps may be retained, being satisfied that no one is injured by it, while they themselves are wholly dependent upon this business for a living.

And your petitioners will ever pray, etc. (161 signers.)

Mr. WARNER. On this question I have distinguished authority for asking my Democratic colleagues to aid in this, notwithstanding my colleague from the State of Missouri [Mr. BLAND] said the other day that he was in a "combine" to take the duty off lead, zinc, and everything from which he could take it. I trust that if he is in such a "combine" he will look for the interest of his own State as well as the gentlemen who are in the "combine" with him have looked to the interest of sugar and rice, as well as the gentlemen from California have looked out for prunes and the gentleman from Connecticut for wooden screws, and so on by numerous gentlemen in behalf of the interests of their State.

Mr. MCKINLEY. If I can be recognized I will yield my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. CLARDY. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. WARNER. Notwithstanding the announcement made at St. Louis by the distinguished champion of the "star-eyed goddess of liberty" that you have "delocalized" this question of tariff, I wish to read in contradiction to this, as well as to the position taken the other day by my colleague [Mr. BLAND], a short extract from a discussion upon the zinc and lead question, which we shall have to face in this bill soon. I am surprised that he stands in favor of taking the duty off lead and zinc. A distinguished Senator from Missouri, in the course of a discussion of this question in 1883, in another place said:

The zinc industry is an infant American industry.

The cotton-bagging industry of this country is an infant industry.

It has grown up since the war—

Says the distinguished Senator—

Two-thirds of the zinc product in the United States are produced west of the Mississippi River, in the States of Kansas and Missouri.

I state to this committee that a majority of the cotton bagging is made west of the Mississippi River, and nearly one-half of it in the State of Missouri; and therefore this industry presents a stronger case, if possible, than that of zinc and lead.

If the duty which the committee proposes now upon zinc be reduced, the result will be the destruction of this industry—

Exclaimed the honorable Senator [Mr. VEST].

The laboring men engaged in this industry in my State, through their memorial, and the manufacturers by letters and petitions, say that if the Mills bill should pass taking the duty off burlaps, thereby affecting cotton bagging, this industry must perish.

I ask the members of this committee to make good the words of Mr. Watterson, in St. Louis; do not take the roof off the house until you have at least given the occupants a reasonable and decent time to get out of it.

The distinguished Senator says further:

Now we propose to have a tariff for revenue, and inside of that tariff I want to keep the duty upon zinc. I want to keep it there because in my State and in Kansas eight cities and towns are dependent upon it. I want to keep it there because I know it is an infant industry. I want to keep it there until this infant industry, staggering, trembling, crawling, is able to stand and exist without it.

Further on he gives as his reason that he is representing the interests of his own State, leaving the representatives of Massachusetts and other States to look after the interests of those States. He said:

I propose to protect this industry and this production [lead and zinc] if I possibly can.

He differed with my colleague [Mr. BLAND]. He subscribed fully to the principle that "he who fails to provide for his own household is worse than an infidel."

I now submit to the committee further evidence. It is worthy of full faith and credit. It is worthy of consideration by the committee.

The Clerk will please read the letters I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Office of Warren, Jones & Gratz, manufacturers, 112 Walnut street, St. Louis. Agents for Southern Mills Baggging Company, Standard Mills Bagging Company, Muncie Bagging Manufacturing Company. Importers of iron cottonties.]

ST. LOUIS, March 8, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We urgently and respectfully call your careful attention to two clauses in the tariff bill introduced by Mr. MILLS.

The two clauses referred to are the ones placing "burlaps" and "bagging for covering cotton" on the free-list.

If these two clauses are adopted they will destroy a large industry in Missouri, South Carolina, Louisiana, Texas, Alabama, Georgia, and Kentucky.

BURLAPS.

These goods are frequently used for covering cotton, and would be used very extensively for that purpose if placed on the free-list. At present there is not a yard of "burlaps" cloth made in this country; all of it is imported, and pays a duty of 1½ cents per pound, or 3 cents per yard for 2-pound "burlaps." Even with this duty on "burlaps" there is no "burlaps" bagging made in this country, it being a much finer grade of bagging than the usual character of bagging made for covering cotton. The "burlaps" bagging is mainly used for grain-sacks, wool-sacks, and similar purposes, and if it could be used only for these purposes it would not work any injury to American industry if put on the free-list, but as it can be used for covering cotton it would destroy the industry of making bagging, especially for covering cotton, as the removal of the duty on "burlaps" would greatly reduce its price.

BAGGING FOR COVERING COTTON.

Missouri manufactures more "bagging for covering cotton" than any other State in the Union, and if this class of goods is put on the free-list the industry in this State would be destroyed. The "bagging for covering cotton" is made especially for that purpose and is a much coarser grade of goods than "burlaps" bagging, and hence can be made in this country, as it does not require such skilled labor as "burlaps" bagging. At present not a yard of this class of goods is imported; it is all made in this country; hence placing "bagging for covering cotton" on the free-list would not help to reduce the surplus in the Treasury at all, as there is no revenue derived from it. At present the bagging made in this country for covering cotton is being sold at cost, or less than cost, all over the country, the competition among the American mills having brought the market to this condition, in spite of the fact that the industry is protected by a duty on imported goods.

If "burlaps bagging" and "bagging for covering cotton" are placed on the free-list, the entire industry in America will be transferred to England, and every bagging mill in America will be compelled to close down, and will only be worth what they can be sold for as scrap-iron, as the machinery can not be used for any other purpose

It is proposed by Mr. MILLS's bill to place jute butts (the raw material for making this bagging) on the free-list also. As the duty on jute butts is very trival, being only $5 per ton, it would not enable the American mills to continue to make bagging. If the jute butts are placed on the free-list, it would reduce the cost of manufacturing bagging in this country 12½ per cent. We would suggest that the duty on "burlaps, bagging," and "bagging for covering cotton" be reduced in the same proportion, or to 1¼ cents per pound, which would be equal to 2½ cents per yard.

WAGES.

The principal reason why bagging can be made so much cheaper in England than it can in this country is because they pay their labor only one-third to one-half the wages that we pay ours, and still our labor complain that their wages are too low. The wage question is of paramount importance. Upwards of fifteen hundred operatives are employed in jute manufacture in Missouri alone. It is in a large sense a professional employment, acquired by practice and generally followed permanently. These workers receive from two to three times as much pay as similar workers receive in Great Britain and Germany, spinners and weavers earning here $5.50 to $6 and $8.50 to $9, respectively, per week, whereas abroad they get from $2 to $3 and from $2.75 to $3.50, respectively, per week. Not a jute manufacturer in the United States could live a day with these products placed on the free-list: so, in addition to the destruction of millions of dollars invested in this class of business, thousands of operatives, absolutely dependent on it for their livelihood, would be thrown out of employment.

The placing of these products on the free-list would not cheapen them to consumers. The ingenuity of American inventors and American methods, together with the natural competition of trade, have cheapened these products over 50 per cent. in ten years, whereas if the same goods were to be had only from abroad the entire importation would flow through New York and Boston, and thus be subjected to the arbitrary prices fixed by controlling monopolists into whose hands the business would necessarily fall.

It is questionable whether the duty should be taken off of raw jute or any of the textile fibers, because of the infant enterprise of growing these fibers in the United States; and the practicability of raising them has already been fully demonstrated in the Mississippi Valley as well as in the Southeast. The only need is machinery for decorticating purposes. Already nine different inventions have been produced for this purpose, and the result of decorticating jute by machinery, so as to successfully compete with the cheap India labor, will unquestionably be reached in the near future. This achieved, the industry of raising jute, ramie, and other fibers would be of larger value than the cotton crop itself, and give to America the market of the world for her manifold textiles. The small revenues derivative from the present tariff are wholly unimportant as compared with the great interests involved in these possibilities.

We respectfully urge that you will vote against these two clauses in the bill, or have the duty merely reduced to the point mentioned above.

Yours, respectfully,

WARREN, JONES & GRATZ.

Before the reading of the foregoing was concluded the hammer fell, when

Mr. MCMILLIN said: This is a raw material used in the manufacture of oil-cloth, and also for the purpose of packing furniture, and for various other uses. It yields $978,035 of revenue, which the Government does not need.

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman will allow me, I shall get through what I have to say in a very few minutes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman will confine his remarks to the question under discussion, I have no objection to his proceeding.

Mr. WARNER. The communication which the Clerk was reading treats of both questions.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman's time was taken up in discussing zinc, a question not involved in the amendment.

Mr. WARNER. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to show that my colleagues from Missouri should come to the rescue of the cotton-bagging industry of their State in the same manner as the distinguished Senator whose remarks I have been reading came to the rescue of zinc and lead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the document already given.

Mr. WARNER. I submit also, Mr. Chairman, and ask to have read in the same connection, a letter from the Standard Mills Bagging Company, of the city of St. Louis.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, March 9, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We beg leave to call your attention to and ask your assistance in aiding us to change two of the provisions of the Mills tariff bill. Those we refer to are "bagging for covering cotton" and "burlaps." As the Mills bill is published, these two items are placed on the free-list, and if the bill is passed as it is, it will absolutely ruin every bagging manufactory in the United States. The competition among the bagging manufacturers had already forced prices down to the point that there is but little profit in the business.

We have understood that the aim of tariff legislation was to reduce the revenue. If this be the case, would say that the Government derives no revenue on the importations of "bagging for covering cotton," as all of it is made in this country. We are now paying $5 per ton duty on the raw material (jute butts) that we use, being equivalent to 12½ per cent., and are protected by a duty on the finished product ("bagging for covering cotton" and "burlaps") of 1¼ cents per pound, or the equivalent of 50 per cent. This protection is needed because of the very much higher wages we pay our employés than the foreign manufacturers do, amounting in all departments to two and one-half to three times as much. Take our weavers, for instance; they earn from $8 to $9 per week (and they consider they work for low enough wages), whereas in Scotland the pay for the same class of work is only from $3 to $4 per week.

The bagging corporations of the State of Missouri manufacture almost one-half of all the bagging used in the United States, and employ a great many operatives, all of whom would be thrown out of employment should the bill become a law, and as they have learned the business as their trade, and is their means of making a living, it would cause great distress among them.

"Burlaps," though of somewhat better quality than "bagging for covering cotton," can be used for that purpose, and you can readily see that if it was placed on the free-list and the price thus materially reduced it would be used that way.

We would most respectfully urge that you use all your influence with the members of the Committee of Ways and Means to have "bagging for covering cotton" and "burlaps" taken off of the free-list, and if "jute butts" are to be left on the free-list, then insist that the duty on "bagging for covering cotton" and "burlaps" be reduced in a proportionate ratio, and made 1¼ cents per pound, where it is 1¼ cents now. If you can not get the matter righted in the committee, then we ask you to vote against the clauses when the bill is acted upon by the House.

Very respectfully, STANDARD MILLS BAGGING COMPANY.

Hon. WILLIAM WARNER,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. WARNER. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, a feeling of gratitude to the great city whose hospitality you received but a few days since should at least lead my Democratic brethren on the other side to do justice to this great manufacturing industry of the city of St. Louis.

Mr. DOCKERY. Would the gentleman advise legislation merely on the ground of hospitality?

Mr. WARNER. No, I would not advise legislation upon the mere ground of hospitality; but when gentlemen on the other side of the House have been appealed to in the name of the laboring man, and when they have been appealed to in the name of justice, and when they have been appealed to in the name of the injury they were about to inflict, I thought, as a last appeal, they should be appealed to upon the ground of gratitude. [Laughter and applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I presume, like the sinners of old, "they are joined to their idols," and are determined to vote for this bill, whatever may be in it—in the language of my distinguished colleague the other day, when he said if lead was on the free-list in the bill, he would vote for free lead. Greater faith than this, Mr. Chairman, hath no man. He is prepared to vote for free lead, free anything, if in the bill. His faith is sublime. It is only equaled by the old preacher who, upon opening his hymn book, found there for the first time what had been pasted in it—no doubt by some mischievous boy—the words:

Old Grimes is dead, that good old man,
We ne'er shall see him more.

[Great laughter.]

The good old man took off his spectacles, wiped them with his red "bandana," readjusted them on his venerable nose, and started in to line the hymn again—

Old Grimes is dead, that good old man,
We ne'er shall see him more;
He used to wear a long, black coat
All buttoned down before.

"Brethren and sisteren," he meekly said, "I have read this hymn book nie unto thirty years. I never in all my life saw that song before, but God helping us, being in the book, we will sing it." [Laughter and applause.]

My colleague, to use his language, "is in a combine" to take the duty from anything and everything, even to the tearing down the industries of the great city of his State (St. Louis), while other members of the "combine" are protecting the industries of their States. [Applause.]

As I said, there should be on the part of the Democratic party some feeling of gratitude towards the city of St. Louis. Let me call their attention to the words of wisdom coming from the St. Louis Republican, coming down from 1808, and more lately the St. Louis Republic.

RAW MATERIAL REDUCTION FIRST.

The Democratic promise not to destroy any established industry in correcting the injustices and inequalities of the tariff has been carefully kept in view in the Mills bill. The bill aims to make clothing cheap for the people, and raw material, as far as possible, free to the manufacturer. There are one or two instances in which the bill in incidental detail can be advantageously conformed more closely to this, its leading idea. We called attention to this when, in the bill as reported by Mr. Mills to the committee, cotton bagging was put on the free-list. In the bill as reported by the committee to the House the duty is made 15 per cent. ad valorem and burlaps are made free. This is one of the very cases in which a minor detail of the bill is not in conformity to its leading idea, and in this instance there is a possibility of resultant injustice unless the reform element of the House guards against it.

The high tax on bagging for wrapping the cotton crop shut our planters off from the Indian market and forced bagging factories into existence. The demand for them in the United States was an unnatural one, forced by the Government. But for the Government they never would have existed. The climate of India gives it an advantage over the United States in raising jute, the raw material for bagging, that we can never hope to overcome. The same climate makes existence possible and pleasant through the expenditure of little labor and less money. The conditions enable the Calcutta syndicate to control the markets of the world in jute products. We can compete successfully with Europe in every line of manufactures or which the United States are fitted, but we can not compete with Asia in a line which is natural to Asia and artificially forced in the United States.

Forced into existence by a high Government tax on India's jute products, our factories are in operation with machinery on which they have paid 45 per cent. import tax to the Government; they pay $1.50 a day for the work which the Calcutta syndicate gets at 12 cents a day. Under these conditions an ad valorem duty of 15 per cent. on bagging, with burlap substitutes for bagging free, will give them no time to adjust themselves to the return to natural conditions. Whereas, if their raw material is put on the free-list, and they are given time, a reduction in the price to the planter will follow without catastrophe to the manufacturer.

I ask the committee to consider the evidence I have presented. Let us build up and not tear down. Let us protect and not burden labor. Let us elevate and not degrade labor.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin. I send up to be read a letter I have received from the Millers' National Association, of the city of Milwaukee, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILLERS' NATIONAL ASSOCIATION, SECRETARY'S OFFICE.
Milwaukee, Wis., May 24, 1888.

FRIEND SMITH: I notice a strong disposition in various quarters to tinker with the tariff, and undoubtedly every one of the tinkerers has a little ax to grind. My ax, however, needs no grinding, but I wish to call your attention to an article now on the list paying duty, for which the Government receives little or no benefit, at the same time becomes an expense, and, what is still worse, a source of great annoyance, principally to the exporters of the agricultural products of this country.

I think it needs no argument to satisfy every novice that every aid and encouragement that can possibly be given to increase the exportation of our manufactured and agricultural products should receive the earnest attention of Congress.

The article I refer to is jute cloth, manufactured principally in England and India. This cloth is not made in this country, except to a very limited extent, and is used principally in the manufacture of flour and grain bags, in which at least 95 per cent. of all the flour manufactured in this country for export is packed. A large percentage also of the California wheat crop is, I understand, shipped in this kind of bags; and all cotton exported is baled in jute cloth. Consequently every dollar paid out for duty, and all the annoyance connected with the collection of rebate, is so much tax upon the agricultural industry of the country.

A little explanation will show you how little benefit the Government can possibly receive by collecting a duty on the imported cloth. My impression is now that it pays an ad valorem duty of 30 per cent. It is manufactured into bags principally in the five great cities of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Chicago, and St. Louis. When any of this material goes abroad with grain, flour, or cotton the Government rebates to the exporter 90 per cent. of the duty paid at importation; but to collect this duty it is necessary (in the case of the miller) for him to secure a custom-house bill of lading, make out his affidavit, send it to the broker, who makes out the necessary papers, and after anywhere from sixty to ninety days receives the rebate. After taking out his expenses the balance is returned to the miller (providing the broker is honest), which expenses, to say nothing of the annoyance, is about 25 per cent. of the sum rebated by the Government.

The Government, in order to keep track of the different grades of jute (as different grades have different valuations), must keep an army of men at each of the different exporting ports to examine each lot of bags shipped, taking samples to compare with the import invoices in order that a greater rebate may not be collected for the bags exported than the duty collected upon the cloth from which they claim to be made.

The rebate usually received by the miller averages about 1 cent on every 140-pound bag. In fact this duty is a direct tax. Not only a direct tax, but a serious annoyance to the miller in trying to secure the return of the rebate to which he is entitled under the law.

Every bushel of wheat manufactured into flour in this country and exported is a benefit to the agriculturist, gives employment to the laborer, and retains so much money in the country, and nothing should be done to encourage the export of wheat in preference to flour, to be manufactured by the cheaper labor of foreign countries.

Now, here is an opportunity for you to make a "ten strike." In bringing about this change you would have the support and backing of the entire milling industry of the country, and to the extent that you would not only receive their approval, but the approval of all persons directly or indirectly connected with the growing and turning of wheat into flour. I believe if you take hold of it in earnest, and push it for all there is in it, you will succeed in having this article admitted free of duty.

The statistics governing the export of flour, cotton, and grain in bags or bales, I presume is more readily obtained with you than with me. My impression is, from what I have investigated the matter, the expense and labor to the Government in collecting this revenue, together with the rebates returned to the exporter, is greater than the original import duty collected by the Government.

Yours truly,

S. H. SEAMANS, Secretary.

Hon. HENRY SMITH, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move in line 38 to strike out "flax," and in line 39 to strike out "or hemp, or of which flax or hemp or either of them shall be the component material of chief value."

Mr. Chairman, burlaps are not bagging, but are used largely for the covering of furniture when that furniture is prepared for transportation from the place of manufacture to the place of sale. I understand the object, as announced by the Committee on Ways and Means in placing burlaps on the free-list, is to aid the furniture manufacture of this country; but these words are capable of going much further than that.

As the provision stands it is capable of grave abuse at the custom-houses. It is capable of allowing the importation of fine manufactures of flax when they are less than 60 inches in width. My amendment is to cut out from the paragraph manufactures of flax and hemp.

I offer it for the reasons already stated, and for this additional reason: Flax and hemp are American agricultural products, and we should preserve the American market for the American farmer for his products as far as practicable. We should preserve the mills which make up the flax and hemp into burlaps, and not allow the foreign manufacturers of flax and hemp to bring in, duty free, foreign products, for the reason, first, that we want the American article used, and, second, that we want to protect the labor employed in making up the American article.

Now I think I am justified in saying that some misapprehension exists in the minds of the committee on this subject, because, in looking up this matter from this document which has been furnished to us from the Treasury Department through the committee, I find this document says that burlaps not exceeding 60 inches in width pay a duty of 30 per cent. But on turning to the existing tariff act I find no classification of burlaps of not exceeding 60 inches in width at all. This document further states that there has been an importation of burlaps, not exceeding 60 inches in width, of three and one-quarter millions of dollars in the last fiscal year; but on turning to the other official report, showing the importations for each month, I find that this refers to burlaps of all widths, and not to burlaps of not exceeding 60 inches in width alone. It seems to me, also, that if the Committee on Ways and Means desire simplification of the law with regard to this class of importations, the language which they use is extremely unfortunate, as being liable to grave abuses in importation.

Burlaps are not raw material; they are the finished product of the mills; they are a finished manufacture; and there is not one of all the reasons adduced during the general debate on the other side for revising the tariff and adding to the free-list that applies to burlaps not exceeding 60 inches in width, except, perhaps, the reason assigned by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL], who wants permission to buy where he can buy cheapest; in other words, unrestricted free trade. There is no reason under the sun that will justify the American Congress in placing these manufactures upon the free-list, except the reason, and that is the only one that can be given, that free trade is the best system for the United States. Believing that to be an utter heresy, I shall vote against it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a great deal of stress laid, and very properly, on the effect that legislation upon the tariff will have with regard to the laboring interests of this country, and I think there can be no doubt about the proposition that we all unite in desiring liberal wages to the laboring men, especially when the wages do not come out of their own individual pockets.

Now, the best evidence on this subject as to the effect of legislation on this question, and upon the wages of labor and its interest, comes from the laborers themselves. I have a grave suspicion that there are interests here contending for high-tariff duties and putting it on the distinct ground of the increase of wages to laboring men, that from year to year, having secured these subsidies or this bonus, cheat the laboring men out of their proportion of the profits they thus acquire in their business by reason of this high-tariff legislation.

I have in my hand a copy of the Chicago Tribune, one of the great journals of this country—a Republican journal, one of the leading Republican newspapers of this Government—which contains an article bearing upon this question, as to what the laboring men think of high-tariff legislation, as well as upon the question of what the laboring men themselves think when they are called upon to act directly upon the question, and when their action is capable of producing the very greatest possible effect. I ask permission to send to the Clerk's desk, and have read in my time, an editorial from the paper in question touching upon the effect that this tariff has upon labor as the laboring men themselves understand it.

What I wish to call attention to particularly is the fact that this discussion in the interest of labor awakens great sympathy among the farmers, that class of people outside of the distinctive class of labor that is represented here on the floor as especially interested in high-tariff dutics; that it does awaken the interest of the generous, warm-hearted farmers of the country, who are willing to come to the aid of all other classes of labor with a view to securing better wages for them, and have been induced in that manner to favor high-lariff legislation which seemed to be in their interest, while the laboring men in the shops in the great centers of the country, and, as this paper says, within cannon shot of the court-house within the city of New York, have invariably, as illustrated in the table given in this editorial, cast their votes against even moderate tariff duties and emphatically against a high-tariff system. The laborers know best about this matter. They know that most of the tariff is going into the pockets of their bosses, and they do not ask their farmer friends to burden themselves any further on their account. And this is good Republican authority.

I ask the Clerk to read this article.

The Clerk read as follows:

IS ULTRA-PROTECTIONISM A WINNING ISSUE?

The Presidential election four years ago was determined by the vote cast within cannon shot of the city hall in New York. Many think the result this year will again depend on the poll of New York City. Beyond all doubt the votes cast in New York City, Brooklyn, Jersey City, and New Haven will turn one way or the other the doubtful States of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. With the issue thus focused and localized the Republican party should be able to determine without difficulty just what policies will give it the greatest certainty of victory.

The strip of territory about New York Bay, including New York City, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Queens and Richmond Counties, comprises the greatest hive of tariff-protected industry in the United States. Armies of protected workmen and hundreds of millions of protected capital are found within this district. Accordingly the Republican party is assured that high protection alone is the winning issue for it in this campaign. What is the record? The following table gives the vote cast in the district indicated (including also New Haven) for Garfield, moderate protectionist, with that for Blaine, high protectionist, against Hancock and Cleveland, low-tariff men:

District.	Blaine, high protection.	Cleveland, low tariff.	Majority, Cleveland.	Garfield, moderate protection.	Hancock, low tariff.	Majority, Hancock.
New York City	90,093	133,157	43,064	81,730	123,015	41,285
Brooklyn (Kings County)	53,514	69,243	15,729	51,751	61,096	9,345
Queens County	8,367	10,415	2,078	8,151	10,391	2,240
Richmond County	3,164	5,184	2,020	3,291	4,815	1,624
Total			62,891			54,494
Jersey City (Hudson County)	16,312	21,637	5,325	14,632	19,586	4,954
New Haven	16,326	19,342	3,016	15,713	17,893	2,180

New York State gave Garfield 21,033 majority and Cleveland 1,047. Connecticut gave Garfield 2,656 majority and Cleveland 1,276. New Jersey gave 2,010 majority against Garfield and 4,412 against Blaine. And the protected corner of the State within a half a dozen miles of the city hall rolled up 63,000 low tariff, anti-high protection majority, and increased its anti-high protection majority against Blaine by 84,400 votes over that against Garfield. From these figures it appears that the "tin-bucket brigade" swarming out of the factories, mills, forges, and shops of the great tariff-protected district about New York carried New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut against high protection, and the majority increased just as the Republican party, in the person of its candidate in 1884, emphasized the high-tariff doctrine. The farmers of the three States, voting faithfully for high protection with the benevolent purpose of securing high wages to the city trades-union workingmen of New York and Brooklyn, were met and overwhelmed by the workmen themselves, who rejected the proffered boon. Is it possible these workmen can not comprehend what is good for them? The farmers insisted that they should have rich milk, but the workmen replied that it was skimmed before it reached them, and that others got all the cream, and they would have nothing to do with it. If they had really believed that a perpetuation of high war duties was to their interest they would have rolled up their 63,000 majority for the other ticket.

Surely, if workmen in protected industries can be won by the high-tariff doctrine such a result should have appeared four years ago, and the States of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut been saved to the Republican party. Mr. Blaine was a genial, gifted, attractive, inspiring leader. No advocate could urge high protectionism on workmen with greater vigor and plausibility than he. Nevertheless they rejected his doctrine, increased their majorities against the Republican ticket 8,400 votes, and left the unprotected farmers to champion high protectionism. Is it good policy to nominate a candidate with extreme protectionist views or make a platform calling for a tariff higher than the average sentiment of the party favors? Will not such policies make defeat certain in the doubtful Eastern States? The election returns show that when the Republican party has been defeated in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut it was owing to the vote of the manufacturing centers, and that just as high-protection doctrines are emphasized the majority against the Republican party in these centers is increased. How much ultra tariffism, then, will be needed in the platform or in the person of the candidate to insure defeat and make certain the loss of the doubtful Eastern States?

During the reading of the foregoing the hammer fell.

Mr. TOWNSHEND was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, during which time the reading was concluded as above.

Mr. BRUMM. I wish to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment in the second degree already. No other amendment is in order until this amendment is disposed of. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like a vote upon my amendment. It was offered in good faith and for substantial reasons.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey desires a vote upon his amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

A vote having been taken, the Chair was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 67.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask for tellers.

Mr. BAYNE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will order tellers, and will appoint the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], who will please act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 84.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to offer an amendment to come in at the end of this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

"Bags of jute, for grain."

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I desire——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] does not desire to speak in favor of the amendment, the Chair will recognize any gentleman opposed to it. The gentleman who offers the amendment is entitled to speak if he desires.

Mr. MCMILLIN. This is an immense industry, one that gets little benefit from the tariff, and is taxed much by it. The effect of the amendment is to put on the free-list jute bags, used for grain.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, I came in just as my friend from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] was about finishing his remarks and I heard him say the protectionists are constantly asserting that protection resulted in high wages, when, in fact, as to the industries that were protected, the employer received alone the benefit of the protection. It has been time and again proven here, and we assert positively and acknowledge that the protectionists are not any more the friends of the laboring men by reason of being employers than other men are, and that they will get their employés to work as cheap as the free-traders will get theirs; that it is not a matter of love, but it is a matter of square business; it is a matter of dollars and cents. We only claim that by protection we make a demand for labor, and that makes a demand for higher wages. If you will give us a chance to make our own articles the labor will be in demand and the laboring man himself will see to it that his employer gives him his just dues for his work. But it was also stated in the article from the Chicago Tribune that within gunshot of the city of New York the election proved Mr. Cleveland received more votes than Mr. Blaine and more votes than Mr. Garfield. Do the gentlemen forget that when Mr. Cleveland was voted for, the Democratic party had their straddle of 1884, and that they had to send to Pennsylvania for Mr. RANDALL and other Democratic protectionists for the purpose of pulling the wool over the eyes of the men in New York and getting them to believe that when they said free trade they meant protection; for the purpose of hoodwinking voters in New York and around that vicinity?

Mr. COX. We never said "free trade."

Mr. BRUMM. Oh, you may call it by any other name. It smells just as sweet—or otherwise.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRUMM. I have not time. I have promised to yield a portion of my five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING].

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk and ask to have read some resolutions passed by a meeting of workingmen held at the Cooper Union, New York, on May 8, in regard to the bill under consideration. These resolutions are an answer to the newspaper editorial which has been read here at the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

The Clerk read as follows:

WORKINGMEN'S MASS MEETING AT COOPER UNION, MAY 8.

It is significant of the intelligence of the workingmen of New York that they comprehend even better than many who read the Post and Times the bearing of the present tariff agitation upon the labor and industries of the country.

The speeches of the chairman, Breslin, and the others who followed were to the point. Alluding to the cry for the markets of the world, Mr. Breslin said: "It is said that if we will remove the tariff we will have control of the markets of the world—whatever that may mean. How is it that we are to govern the markets of the world? No free-trader will deny that the country in which the remuneration of labor is lowest is the country that will control the markets of the world. Labor is the great point, in comparison with which the cost of raw material and transportation is insignificant. If the country paying the lowest wages is to control the markets of the world, do we want to enter the race?"

Hugh Greenan, of the Cooper Union, said: "The only people who would benefit by free trade are those with fixed salaries. This Mills tariff bill will simply tend to reduce the United States to the condition of a British province. It will be interesting to know just how much of the secret-service money of the British Empire has been used to aid its passage."

Richard Norris, master workman of the Lithographers' National Assembly of the Knights of Labor, said: "The only remedy for American workingmen is to strike at the polls. Trades-union methods are all bosh. You can not squeeze high wages from employers who are not able to pay them. You may force them for a while, but there is bound to be a reaction."

Several other prominent workingmen addressed the meeting, and the following resolutions were then adopted:

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NUTTING. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. NUTTING. I ask unanimous consent that I have five minutes more.

Mr. BLAND. If we are going to debate the pending question on its merits I will not object, but we have had enough politics on this floor, and I do object.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WHITE] is recognized.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. NUTTING].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can yield his time only by unanimous consent.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BLAND. I will not object, Mr. Chairman, but I hope we shall have a vote after the gentleman gets through.

Mr. SPINOLA. What paper is that article from?

Mr. NUTTING. These are resolutions passed by a workingmen's meeting held at the hall of the Cooper Union, New York City, on the 8th of May, 1888.

Mr. SPINOLA. I understand it now.

Mr. NUTTING. I ask that the resolutions be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the so-called Mills tariff bill, now under discussion in the House of Representatives, by placing on the free-list many articles that come into competition with the products of American labor, and by sweeping reductions in the duties upon others, menaces the ruin of many of our industries, and would, if enacted into a law, entail great loss of employment and widespread suffering among working people; and

Whereas the workingmen of this country have been contemptuously denied a hearing by the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, which framed the bill; and

Whereas it is now apparent to every workingman that the prevailing agitation of the tariff question and the proposed reduction of duties are destroying confidence in business, reducing wages in some occupations, and stopping altogether the wages in others:

Therefore, we, the workingmen of the city of New York, in mass meeting assembled, earnestly protest against the passage of the Mills tariff bill, and against any and all measures of a similar character which threaten the labor and industry of our country and propose to lower the American standard of wages, and do hereby declare and proclaim the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we demand of the Representatives in Congress from this city that they not only vote against this most recent attack on the prosperity of American labor, but that they use their utmost endeavors to secure its defeat.

Resolved, That we protest against a bill which puts raw material on the free-list when that so-called raw material is the product of American labor.

Resolved, That we protest against a bill which would break down the barrier which defends American labor from competition with the pauper labor of Europe and Asia, and aims to reduce our families to the foreign level of cheapness and poverty.

Resolved, That we demand that the internal-revenue war taxes be repealed, and that protection to American labor be maintained and made more effective.

Resolved, That we call upon our fellow-workingmen in all parts of the land to rise up and denounce the Mills tariff bill as a menace to our welfare and to our rights as citizens, which threatens to deprive us of the opportunities of education afforded by the American system of high wages; and we denounce as a fraud the free-trade argument that the cost of living in this country is increased in proportion to the rates of duty on imports, except as we choose and are able to live better here than our unfortunate rivals in foreign countries.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President and to every member of Congress.

Mr. NUTTING. Mr. Chairman, the article which was read a while ago at the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] referred to the 1,000 or 1,200 majority which Grover Cleveland obtained over Mr. Blaine in the State of New York in the last Presidential election. The gentleman had forgotten, and probably the man who wrote that article had forgotten, that two years before that election Grover Cleveland ran for governor of the State of New York on the Democratic ticket and received a majority of 192,000. That was at a time when only State issues were in the balance; but when the Presidential election came on and the mere rumor existed—the mere rumor—that possibly the industries of the country might be injured or endangered by the election of Cleveland, because he was not sound on the tariff issue, his majority was cut down from 192,000 to less than 1,200; and I tell gentlemen here that when the next Presidential election comes on, these very people that they call the "tin-pail brigade" will cut down his majority not only in the State of New York but throughout the country, so that he will have no majority in the United States, and that result will come about because of the votes of the laboring classes of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The laboring men in the State of New York, six hundred thousand or more in number, and the farmers in the State of New York, four hundred thousand in number, are not in favor of the Mills bill, and they will be heard on election day this fall in a way that will emphasize this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move to strike out the last word. In answer to my colleague from New York [Mr. NUTTING], and the reference he has made to the overwhelming majority which Mr. Cleveland received when he was a candidate for governor of that State, I wish to say that that was owing to trouble in the Republican party, whereby two hundred thousand Republicans refrained from going to the polls to vote at that election. I will state further to the gentleman from New York, and to one or two others who have this morning made reference to the city of New York and its politics, that the majority for Grover Cleveland in the city of New York in the election which made him President of the United States was reduced because the Republican party came out to a man in that election and voted, and also because Jay Gould contributed $100,000 to the corruption fund three days before the election took place. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] A clean hundred thousand dollars was distributed through Johnny O'Brien, Bob McCord, and the other Republican leaders of that city for the purpose of corrupting the ballot-box, and to a certain extent it had that effect.

Mr. BRUMM. Why did not your governor sign a bill to prevent corruption?

Mr. SPINOLA. I will answer that, too. I want to tell you right here that there is no place in the United States where elections are as fairly conducted as they are in the city of New York. The bill about which the gentleman has asked me was a bill brought from Van Dieman's Land by a few disgruntled Republicans, one of them being the man whom I defeated as a candidate for a seat in this House.

Mr. WEBER. And it was indorsed by the United Labor party of New York.

Mr. SPINOLA. The "United Labor party" was the same kind of men that passed the resolutions which have been read—"bogus" laboring men and workingmen.

Mr. WEBER. It had Henry George at the head of it.

Mr. SPINOLA. Henry George was one of the men who opposed my election; he and all his so-called "labor" elements were brought to bear against me and in favor of Thorndyke Rice. And Thorndyke Rice is the father of the bill which Governor Hill vetoed a day or two ago.

Mr. WEBER. Well, it is a good bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I am glad you think so, but it will never become a law in that State.

Mr. WEBER. It will become a law after we elect a Republican governor this fall.

Several MEMBERS on the Democratic side. You will not do that.

Mr. SPINOLA. Let me tell you right there that you have not a man in the Republican party who can defeat David B. Hill for governor of that State; neither can you nominate for the presidency any man of the Republican party who can carry the election over Grover Cleveland in November next.

Mr. WEBER. We will try it.

Mr. NUTTING. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. SPINOLA. Certainly; I presume it is on politics; and that is my religion to some extent. [Laughter.]

Mr. NUTTING. Will the gentleman tell me whether he does not know there are 600,000 workingmen in the State of New York—men who live by their labor—400,000 of them in the cities of New York and Brooklyn?

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes; and they vote the Democratic ticket (applause on the Democratic side), and are going to continue to vote it. I want to make a prediction—not a prophecy, but an absolute prediction. The city of New York, in November next, will roll up 60,000 majority for the Democratic ticket, not 40,000 as it did four years ago.

Mr. NUTTING. You said you would answer my question. Now do so. I want to put you on the record.

Mr. SPINOLA. What do you want me to answer?

Mr. NUTTING. Do you give it as your opinion on the floor of this House that those 600,000 workingmen, who last year were paid more than $200,000,000 by the industries of that State, are in favor of the Mills bill?

Mr. SPINOLA. Let me answer that question——

Mr. NUTTING. Do you say they are?

Mr. SPINOLA. Let me answer; do not answer for me. Those workingmen who earned the $200,000,000 that you talk about, know their business better than you do, and know how to vote better than you can tell them.

Mr. NUTTING. Do you say that they are to-day in favor of the Mills bill?

Mr. SPINOLA. Representatives on this floor of the labor organizations of the country are voting for the Mills bill, as you term it.

Mr. NUTTING. But those workingmen, as they declare in their resolution, do not approve those votes.

Mr. SPINOLA. A pretty sort of workingmen they are! I was at that meeting. You could almost count those in attendance on the fingers of your two hands. About twenty men assembled there, sent there by the Republican committee and nobody else.

Mr. NUTTING. Now answer my question, so that you will be on record. Do you say it is your opinion that the laboring men in the State of New York—the 600,000 to whom I have referred—are in favor of the provisions of the Mills bill?

Mr. SPINOLA. How many of those men are protected——

Mr. NUTTING. Answer the question.

Mr. SPINOLA. Now ask your question over again, if you please. [Laughter.]

Mr. NUTTING. Do you say it is your opinion and belief that the 600,000 people in the State of New York who work for wages in the industries to which I have referred are, as a whole or as a majority, in favor of the passage of the Mills bill?

Mr. SPINOLA. A majority of them are in favor of reducing taxation, and will vote the Democratic ticket. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. NUTTING. Answer my question, if you can.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, I claim to be as familiar with the workingmen as my friend is, and a great deal more so. I know what their views are, and my friend does not. That is the difference between him and me.

Mr. BRUMM. Then it ought to be so much easier for you to answer the question.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have answered it.

Mr. BRUMM. No, you have not.

Mr. SPINOLA. I say that those workingmen to whom the gentleman has referred will vote the Democratic ticket this fall, so as to reduce taxation. That is an answer to his question.

Mr. BRUMM. No, sir; his question is whether those workingmen are in favor of the provisions of the Mills bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes, yes——

Mr. BRUMM. Now we have got the answer at last.

Mr. SPINOLA. A majority of them——

Mr. BRUMM. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.

Mr. SPINOLA. I trust so; I have not commenced yet. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRUMM. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended.

Mr. BLAND. I ask by unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that we may have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] moved by unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] be allowed to proceed with his remarks for five minutes longer, if he so desired.

Mr. BLAND. I do not wish to interfere with anybody on this floor who desires to address remarks pertinent to the amendment under consideration, but we should have some votes and some progress in the consideration of the pending bill. We have been engaged in discussions day after day, and it is about time we should vote.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a few remarks on the subject now before the committee, because it is one of exceeding importance. Thus far it has been proclaimed, by those who favor this bill, to be their purpose to place materials of manufacture on the free-list, but at the same time to give some protection to the manufactured product. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], in behalf of the Committee on Ways and Means, now proposes to place a complete manufactured product on the free-list, to wit: Grain bags made of jute. But bags may be made not only of jute, but of cotton, and it makes no difference of which material they are made so far as the consumer is concerned. So, if grain bags made of jute are to be made free of duty, then you would practically open to free importation into this country all bags which may be entered for consumption. When bags made of jute can be imported free of duty, inasmuch as jute bags may be used instead of cotton bags, the practical effect is the same as though bags made of either jute or cotton should be admitted free of duty. It will be impossible to manufacture bags out of cotton in this country, and this large industry will be practically destroyed, for our people can not go on making bags which may be brought into free competition with those imported free of duty. These bags made in foreign countries are produced by the use of the cheapest labor. In India they are manufactured by cooly labor at the very low price of a few cents a day.

There are to-day large manufacturing establishments producing bagging made of jute as well as of cotton, and the proposition, I repeat, is to admit similar bags free of duty, to come immediately into competition with bags made by our higher paid labor. The inevitable effect of this will be to destroy this industry in the first place, and, secondly, to prevent the use of cotton waste and cotton of inferior grades now used in the production of these bags.

I ask gentlemen who propose to place upon the free-list a complete manufactured product, where this thing is to end when once begun? I call their attention to the fact that in presenting this bill they proclaimed they did not intend to destroy or even to injure any manufacturing industry, but to leave a sufficient duty to cover the difference in cost of labor here and in foreign countries. But here we have a proposition to place a complete product on the free-list without any protection for the labor which may be used in its manufacture.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. DINGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has not the gentleman from Maine been in favo of putting sugar upon the free-list?

Mr. DINGLEY. Only with a bounty to go with it. Sugar to-day has 82 per cent. of protection and the gentleman's bill proposes to give 68 per cent. I favor a proposition to reduce the duty to 40 per cent., which is the average protection given to manufacturers, or free sugar with a bounty to the producer. But here is a provision to compel those laborers who work in bagging mills to pay this 68 per cent. duty on sugar to use as food and to compel them to labor in the manufacture of these bags in free competition with the coolies of Calcutta.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, whether a proposition of this kind is worthy of the support of this House. I ask gentlemen who have said all along they did not propose to destroy any industry if this is in accordance with their promises.

If these bags are to be allowed to be imported free of duty when the importer represents that they are to be used for grain, the custom-houses would be unable to follow up the imports and see that they are used for that object, and the practical effect would be to allow the import free of duty of bags for all uses.

The bill also proposes to place imported lime on the free-list, notwithstanding lime is the completed product of a manufacturing industry which in 1880 gave employment to 6,000 men, paid $1,579,313 in wages, and produced lime valued in the markets at $5,772,318. The duty on lime is only 10 per cent. ad valorem, which was intended to give a protection of at least 10 cents per cask, but which, by a ruling of the Treasury Department which excludes the cost of the cask from the estimate of the value, and by systematic undervaluation, has been so reduced that the importation of Canadian lime is rapidly increasing—increasing from the fact that the labor employed in this industry in Maine, for example, receives $2 per day, in Canada receives only $1.25 per day, and from the further fact that the duty has practically been reduced in the way which I have indicated.

Now, in this situation, when in 1886 82,855 casks of Canadian lime were imported, and in 1887, 132,239 casks imported—and the present year will rise to a much larger volume—it is proposed by this bill to place lime on the free-list. Can there be any doubt that such action would do one of two things, either destroy lime manufacturing in this country, or compel the reduction of wages in the industry to the Canadian standard?

The injustice of this proposition to place lime on the free-list is made manifest when it is borne in mind that this bill retains a duty of 26 per cent. on bituminous coal, which is used in the burning of lime; a duty of 68 per cent. on the sugar and 100 per cent. on the rice which the laborers in this industry are compelled to buy for food. Will gentlemen give any explanation of such discrimination?

Instead of striking down the lime-manufacturing industry by placing imported Canadian lime on the free-list, a due regard for the men engaged in this industry demands that the small ad valorem duty, which nas been largely lost by the causes to which I adverted, should give place to a specific duty of 15 cents, or at least 10 cents per cask.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment, and if there is no objection the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the manufacture of bags out of burlaps may be in its infancy, but the manufacture of bags out of cotton is not in its infancy. It has grown into great proportions in this country. Those bags are used for the purpose of shipping flour, instead of bags made of burlaps, and this industry has been established in many of our States, and, as I have said, has grown into large proportions.

Now what will be the effect of permitting these goods to come in free? The effect will simply be this: that our millers in this country, instead of buying home-made cotton sacks, will buy these foreign jute sacks to ship their grain in, and in consequence of that fact it will be the death-blow to this industry in the United States. There is no excuse for putting this on the free-list whatever, not even the same excuse that was alleged in favor of lumber and salt, and certainly there was not much for doing that. But the bad effect here is much greater than in the case of lumber and salt; for in those commodities it was neutralized to a considerable extent in consequence of the great bulk and cost of transportation. They will not bear shipment to any considerable distance in consequence of their bulk, weight, and the necessary transportation charges. But that is not the case with jute bagging. That can be landed in New York City from England, or from Scotland, or from India, and shipped clear through to Chicago for one-eighth or one-fourth of a cent a pound. Again, in consequence of the cheap labor of Europe, and more particularly of India, this industry in the United States will be crushed out of existence, and can not be pursued longer. You might just as well take the duty off of calico and permit it to come in free and expect to find a thriving industry.

This, Mr. Chairman, is a manufactured article. It is not a free raw material in any sense of the word, but is a manufactured product; and besides there is no use in admitting it on the ground that the duties collected on it are large, and therefore that this reduction will help to decrease the revenues.

The amount imported is of little consequence, and the duties collected are inconsiderable. That excuse, then, does not have any weight, and hence this provision should be abandoned by the committee if they have any regard at all for the wages of those engaged in this industry. It will not help the people of this country at all. It will, I admit, help the millers to some extent. In place of being, as now, compelled to pay at the rate of about 20 cents a barrel for their bagging, they would probably get it from India or European manufacturers at 15 cents a barrel, and they are the only people who would be benefited. The great body of the public in place of being benefited would be injured by destroying this industry, the destruction of which would afford relief to nobody except a few favored individuals if the bill goes into effect. I hope this committee will, therefore, withdraw the proposed insertion here as a part of this bill, and permit it to go through without the incorporation of such a useless modification as that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that my colleague [Mr. MCKINNEY], who is a Democrat, is absent from the city at this time, for, notwithstanding some Democrats on this floor have told me that he has expressed himself in favor of this amendment, I feel sure that were he present he would esteem it not only a privilege but a duty to oppose it, as it threatens to destroy an important industry in the district which he represents. Incomprehensible as it is to me, I am free to say that my colleague is in favor of the Mills bill as a whole, for he has so stated on this floor, but of course he could not have anticipated that an amendment of this character would be offered to the bill in his absence, and while he is paired with a gentleman who would vote against it—an amendment which so greatly changes the bill to the detriment of his own district.

In my own district there is, so far as I know, no industry that this amendment, if adopted, will harm, but in the district represented by my colleague there is a very large industry that in my judgment will be greatly injured by the proposed legislation. A very large amount of capital has been invested in the city of Manchester in the manufacture of jute bagging, employing many people. The capitalists who have gone into the business have invested their money, in the reasonable expectation that the tariff duty would be permitted to remain as it is.

I submit, therefore, that if this amendment be adopted it will work a great hardship, not only to the manufacturers, but also to a large class of industrious persons employed in the industry. If the duty be taken off, the manufacture of this commodity will be placed in the hands of foreign manufacturers, and will especially be passed over to the tender mercies of the pauper labor of Calcutta, where the industry thrives to-day notwithstanding our existing tariff laws. Therefore, in the interest of the manufacturers as well as of the laboring men of my State who are employed in this business, in the interest of a very large industry that has a right to ask protection at the hands of the gentlemen who compose the Fiftieth Congress, I enter my protest against the adoption of the amendment, and trust that our Democratic friends, who compose a majority of this House, will see that it is not good legislation, that it is not a wise or just policy to bring in an amendment at this time which has had no consideration before the present hour, and the adoption of which will strike a death-blow to a large and increasing interest in New England and other of the great States of this Union.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to unnecessarily take up the time of the committee, and will therefore content myself with the expression of the hope that the amendment may be voted down, and that we may have some help from the Democratic side of the House in so doing, although the progress of this debate gives little encouragement for hope in that direction. It is another blow aimed at Northern industries, another Democratic attack upon New England capital and thrift, and whether my colleague, if here, should vote for or against the amendment, I certainly shall cast my vote in a way that will tend to protect the industries of his district from the despoiling hand of the free-trade Democracy who control the present Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. BIGGS. I renew it.

I am very much surprised at the range that this discussion has taken. Gentlemen have discussed the jute clause of the bill as if they were thoroughly posted upon the subject, and I am satisfied that if the truth were known they do not know what a jute grain-bag is. [Laughter.] I make the assertion here now that gentlemen here on this floor, who preceded me in this discussion, can not tell me what constitutes a jute grain-sack, and I pause in my time for any one of them to tell me what a regular jute grain-sack is.

Mr. DINGLEY. I can tell the gentleman that I have seen these sacks manufactured in my own district and pretend to know something about them.

Mr. BIGGS. What are the dimensions of a jute grain-sack?

Mr. DINGLEY. They are made of different dimensions, just the same as the cotton grain-sacks are.

Mr. BIGGS. Then give me the dimensions of the jute grain-sack that comes here and pays a high duty. I can tell the gentleman that he does not know.

Mr. DINGLEY. They are of the ordinary dimensions that grain-bags are made in this country.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Two-bushel sacks.

Mr. BIGGS. No, sir. They are 22 by 36 inches, and that constitutes a regular jute grain-sack, and the bran-sack is 36 by 44.

Mr. DINGLEY. They are the size of the ordinary grain-sacks manufactured throughout the country.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. And I sell them right along.

Mr. BIGGS. Tell me it will destroy a great industry! There is no jute grown in the United States to amount to anything.

Mr. DINGLEY. But it is manufactured.

Mr. BIGGS. It is manufactured in the penitentiary at San Quentin, in my State. More is manufactured in that penitentiary than anywhere else on the Pacific Slope. I am perfectly astonished that men who say they want to protect the poor tenants yet propose to put this burden upon them. Gentlemen, I thought you were more liberal toward the working classes. I am a workingman myself. I have rented ground for years and years, and have had to use and pay for these sacks. What do I get for the sacks? About a cent and a quarter. There is not a pound of grain; there is not a pound of oats; there is not a pound of barley, corn, wheat, nor vegetables but what has to be put into these sacks before marketing on the Pacific coast.

Gentlemen, I do hope you will not strike this blow at us. There is my friend from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], elected by one of the largest majorities ever given in his State. They want free grain-sacks, and all the voters came in and supported him to a man, irrespective of party. He is a friend of the laboring man. He is a laboring man himself. I hope you will not take this action. I say without fear of successful contradiction that if this amendment is defeated it will be the worst blow ever struck against the laboring classes of the Pacific Slope. There is no question about it. I do hope my friends on the other side will vote with me. Vote with me as I did the other day with you, when you brought in an amendment on the Chinese question. Come and vote with me on this question, and it will do you good.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand this amendment is offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN]. I would like to inquire whether it is in order to permit a committee that has voted for the Mills bill to amend it after the St. Louis convention has indorsed the bill? Whether it will not necessitate the calling of a new convention to indorse the bill after it is amended by the Democratic majority?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman can answer the question himself.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us answer it by voting on the question.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to read a little extract from high political authority:

The necessary reduction in taxation must be effected without depriving

American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country.

That was the enunciation of the Democratic convention which assembled four years ago.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And we enunciate it again.

Mr. ROWELL. That was the enunciation of the Democratic convention which assembled a few days ago, modified, however, by appointing an interpreter, so that black may mean white and white may mean black, according to the necessities of the occasion.

Nevertheless a bill is presented here and amendments are presented here to place upon the free-list articles manufactured both in this country and abroad, manufactured here by high-priced labor and abroad by the very lowest of low-priced labor; and according to the interpretation of the language which recognizes the fact that a tariff affects the wage-earner we are to have this sort of manufacturing industry blotted out of existence. I only read this to call the attention of my friend from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON] to the fact that the Democratic party went before those laborers of New York four years ago and declared that in all revision of taxing legislation the laborer should be protected to the full extent of the difference between wages in this country and wages abroad. He is publicly rewarded for the vote he gave upon that pledge by a blow all along the line, not alone to manufacturing industries, but to the farmers as well.

Mr. Chairman, it is a favorite charge of gentlemen on the other side of this House that the Republican party is the defender of trusts and the money power; and yet for twenty years every Democratic candidate for the Presidency has been selected from the State of New York with express reference to securing the influence of the money power. The present Administration in every distinctive executive act or recommendation has abandoned to its fate the great West in the interest of monopolies, trusts, and the money power. In the construction of the Cabinet two of the Cabinet ministers were taken from this same great home of trusts and money influence.

Within 20 miles of Tammany Hall resides the vote upon which the Democracy depends for success. It is a vote more notoriously controlled by moneyed influences than any other vote anywhere in the United States. Every distinctive act of this Administration has been in the interest of that moneyed power and for the purpose of securing its influence. In the attempt to demonetize silver, in the attempt to blot out of existence our greenback currency, in withholding for more than ten months the call for bonds and allowing the money to accumulate in the Treasury, in finding some objection to a law which nobody else ever disputed and thereby preventing the purchase of bonds, in depositing sixty millions of currency in the national banks——

Mr. ROWELL. I would like a little more——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I object.

Mr. BLAND. I hope no objection will be made, but I hope that after the gentleman gets through we shall have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the formal amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment. I desire, in the interest of the great grain-producing States of the Pacific coast, Oregon and California especially, to advocate the adoption of this amendment. The amendment as it reads is "bags of jute for grain." Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that bags made of jute for grain will come in competition with any of the manufacturers of the East. They do not make bags for grain here. These jute grain-bags are imported from Calcutta. Our farmers can not afford to buy them here and ship them. This amendment is in the interest of the grain-producing people of the Pacific coast, and I hope that it will be adopted, and, as I have said, I do not believe it will interfere with the cotton-bag manufacturers of the East. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in reply to what the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMPSON] has just said, I wish to say that I think he is under a misapprehension with regard to the manufacture of grain-bags in the Eastern portion of the country. In connection with his statement I wish to read a brief extract from a letter which I have received from Messrs. John T. Bailey & Co., of Philadelphia. These gentlemen write:

Burlaps are woven or manufactured from jute in Dundee, Scotland, and Calcutta, imported in large quantities to this country and manufactured into bags for all known purposes—fertilizers, wheat, corn, bran, peanuts, flour, meal, ice, rice, wool, hair, ore, etc.—paying a duty of 30 per cent. ad valorem. Foreign-made bags from the same material coming into this country pay a duty of 40 per cent. This difference of 10 per cent. is what enables the industry to be carried on in this country. Take away this difference and the bags for all the products just enumerated would be made in Dundee and Calcutta, where labor is much cheaper; Dundee wages for such work being about two-thirds less than ours, while labor in Calcuttais a mere trifle.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to be very clear that this amendment will affect this important industry, which, of course, like all other legitimate American industries, ought to be properly protected.

Mr. DINGLEY. After the bags are imported they may be used for any purpose. You can not trace them.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman from Maine says, after the bags are imported they may be used for grain or any other purpose. Now, if these foreign-made bags are put upon the free-list this American industry will be put in competition with the low labor of Scotland and of Calcutta, the cost of labor in the latter place being so low as to be almost inappreciable. I rose simply for the purpose of saying that in my judgment the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMPSON] was laboring under a misapprehension when he said that jute was not manufactured into bags for grain in this country. The gentlemen from whose letter I have read an extract have a very extensive plant, which has cost a large amount of money, and they employ some six hundred hands. There is also another establishment in Baltimore, in which they are joint owners, employing a large number of hands. I am satisfied that the statements contained in their letter to me are correct, and I am glad to lay them before this committee and thereby to correct the statement of the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMPSON, of California. Mr. Chairman, from the best information that I have been able to obtain, the bags which are used by the wheat-growers of California are not made in this country. They are brought from Calcutta, and about two-thirds of the importations are through the San Francisco custom-house. We are manufacturing bags in the State prison, to what extent I do not know exactly. Free jute may encourage the manufacture of bags on the Pacific coast—I do not know whether it will or not, but if it does, it will be for the benefit of the wheat-growers of that coast.

Mr. MORROW. Can my colleague tell how many bags are manufactured at the State prison?

Mr. BIGGS. Fifteen thousand a day is the largest number.

Mr. MORROW. How many are manufactured at the Oakland factory?

Mr. BIGGS. Not many now.

Mr. MORROW. They manufacture a good many, I think.

Mr. BIGGS. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the formal amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The other day when my colleague [Mr. BIGGS] asked me whether I was in favor of free bags, I replied that if they could be manufactured in this country I was not, but if they could not be manufactured here I was. I further said that I did not mean by "manufactured in this country" manufactured in the State prisons, for on that proposition I have very definite ideas. I do not think that anything should be manufactured in the prisons which can be or is made out of them. Penal institutions should be supported by the States and not put into competition with the labor of the country. As to the amendment of the committee, I believe with my colleagues [Mr. BIGGS and Mr. THOMPSON] that free grain-sacks may be an advantage to the farmers of California, but I think only a temporary advantage.

But, sir, I am a protectionist. I am a protectionist everywhere that the principle of protection applies. I believe as Edmund Burke said about liberty: that protection is the clear right of all industries or of none. My doctrine, sir, now comes to face me. A vote on this proposition—a vote against the amendment of the committee may be unpopular. If it have all the effect my colleague predicted, the effect to reverse the majority in my district, I could not hesitate.

Sir, I should be ashamed of myself, I could hardly get back my self-respect, if I should stand here and vote for this principle as applicable to other industries and other States, and not vote for it as applicable to my own State; therefore I shall not vote for the amendment. The farmers of my district, if they are protectionists, will take the fat and the lean of protection; they will take it in its fullest extent, as it operates generally through the country, whether in particular instances its effect be good or bad. If it should be evil for them particularly, they will endure that evil in view of the greater benefit which comes to the country generally and to them as citizens of the country—a prosperous country. But there can come no evil to the farmers by or through protection universally applied; besides, it is disputable if free sacks will lessen the price to the farmer.

I have thought it necessary to make these few remarks to explain the vote which I shall cast on this proposition, so that my constituents may know distinctly how I stand on protection as a principle, and that I do not shirk from applying it wherever I think it is properly applicable.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the formal amendment. The substantial amendment pending is to insert on the free-list the words "bagging of jute for grain." Now, sir, jute bags, if allowed to come in free, will come in competition with bags for grain made of other materials by American manufacturers and American workmen. The manufacture of jute bags is carried on in three ways: first, by the convict labor of California and perhaps other States; second, by the cooly labor of Calcutta and the cheaper-than-American labor of Dundee; and third, by the manufacturers of the Eastern States. Now, we have already our competition with convict labor; we have our competition with cooly labor, offset to some extent by protection; but by this amendment you propose to remove that. There is one thing in connection with this cooly labor which the Committee of the Whole ought to know before voting on this amendment: These manufacturers of the East Indies are in a combination to maintain prices. Yet it is coolly proposed, after all we have heard on this floor against these combinations and trusts, to throw wide open the doors of the American market to the combination or trust of Calcutta. I do not like a trust anywhere; and I do not like it any better in India than in the United States.

I have here a letter and a memorial which state the exact facts with reference to this question of bagging. As will be seen by these documents, the manufacturers propose, if jute itself be placed upon the free-list, to acquiesce in a reduced rate of duty for the manufactured article; but if this bagging is to be put upon the free-list, I know one manufactory at least in my State that will be unable to continue its business. The facts and the figures as to why this result will be necessitated are contained in these papers, which I incorporate in my remarks:

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 10, 1888.

DEAR SIR: The existing duties on raw jute and the product known as bagging for cotton baling has enabled American manufacturers to produce the supply necessary for the American market. The tariff on jute butts is about one-fourth of 1 cent per pound, and on manufactured bagging 3 cents per yard, or 1½ cents per pound on 2-pound bagging. The requirements of the average American cotton crop are 45,000,000 yards maximum. The capacity of the American factories is about 75,000,000 yards, and as the product is not used for any other purpose, the excess of productive capacity over the possible consumptive demand is about 25,000,000 yards. Every yard of excess is, therefore, an active competitor in the market with every other yard of this product.

Although the present tariff on bagging is practically prohibitive of importation from England, Scotland, and India, yet the home competitions have become sufficiently sharp to reduce the manufacturer's price from 11 cents per yard for 2-pound bagging in 1883 and prior thereto down to 7 cents in 1887, and as low as 6¼ cents in 1888, delivered at points 1,000 miles distant from factories. The reductions in the manufacturer's prices have been constant each year for the last fifteen years until the percentage of profit has reached an extreme low limit, and, indeed, nil at the present time.

It is therefore conclusively apparent that in this industry a tariff which has enabled American manufacturers to establish and perfect bagging plants has largely and permanently diminished instead of increasing the cost to the consumers, precisely the same result as in the case of plate-glass and other noble American industries.

The bagging manufacturers of the State of Missouri and the city of St. Louis have established five factories, at a cost of about $1,000,000. The three factories in St. Louis employ nearly one thousand operatives, who with their families constitute nearly four thousand people dependent upon them in the main for support. This is a sort of professional labor. It requires skill and long practice. The people thus employed generally make it a life pursuit. They are paid liberal wages and are contented and happy. In cases of sickness or accident they are cared for by the best of professional skill, and every endeavor is used to create and maintain the relations of mutual regard. We have never had a strike or disturbance in our establishment. I believe that the St. Louis factories are a fair sample of those in South Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, New York, Illinois, and Indiana, and others.

The wages paid to American bagging operatives are more than twice those which are paid to similar operatives in Dundee, and more than five times those paid to similar operatives in Calcutta, India. For example: English batchers receive $3.40 per week and less; American batchers, $9. English spinners $2.50 and less; American spinners, $6. English weavers $3.50 and less; American weavers, $9. English adults, superior grades, skilled, $9; American, $22. English average of all hands, young and old, $2.85; American, $7.50. The low level of East Indian labor at Calcutta is unworthy of even a comparison with the American wage scale. A large percentage of American employés are young girls and boys who are compelled from the necessities of life to work for a living and aid in the support of their families. They are surrounded by a clean moral atmosphere. The employment is light and agreeable. They learn a trade which makes them independent, and in seven years we have never learned of but one case of a going "to the bad."

The relations of the consumers of bagging to the tariff are simply a matter of experience. The fact is, that the diminution of price to consumers is largely in excess of the diminution of the cost of raw material. The relations of American manufacturers of bagging to the tariff are simply a matter of mathematics. A comparison of the elements which enter into the cost of foreign and home bagging shows that if the discount interest current in American cities could be reduced to foreign rates, and if the wages of American labor could be lowered to the level of Dundee or Calcutta, American manufacturers would have but little need of a protective tariff. Of course the former is impossible in the nature of things, and as to the latter I am of opinion that American wage-workers will never submit to a depression down to the levels of foreign labor. Nor would any intelligent American employer ever desire such a thing to come to pass in this country, even if it were possible. Whether regarded in an economic, social, or moral view, it would be an infinite evil to our beloved country.

I submit that this provision would in no wise diminish the cost of bagging to consumers. Past experience has shown that every imported staple not made in this country has been subjected to monopoly control, either at the points of shipment or consignment, under which control the selling price has been fixed with reference to excessive profit and not at all to beneficence. There exists at this time a combination among the East Indian manufacturers by which prices in different foreign countries are raised or lowered, not with reference to the cost of the product, but solely with reference to the conditions at the points of consignment, thus making one country pay any margins of loss or lessened profit accruing in another. If the tariff is taken off raw jute, bagging can stand a reduction from the present duty of 3 cents down to 2 cents per yard. If lowered below that limit the capital invested would have no encouragement to remain in the business, for the reason that this country would become the dumping ground of foreign surplus stocks, creating uncertainties alike injurious to producers and consumers. Any reduction below 1½ cents per yard is actual free trade so far as we are concerned, destructive to us without any corresponding benefit to consumers. Why destroy an American industry, with its American capital and American labor? The Treasury surplus receives no enlargement from it, nor is the cost of the product increased to consumers by reason of its existence. In proportion to its magnitude it increases the public wealth and prosperity, and it constitutes one of the many diversified industries which have followed upon a wise public policy.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant, CHAS. E. PEARCE,
Secretary Standard Mills Bagging Company.

Hon. J. BUCHANAN.

Memorial of the manufacturers of bagging in the United States.

The present tariff on bagging for covering cotton is 1½ cents per pound, equal to 3 cents per yard on 2-pound bagging.

Under this protection about 25 mills have been established in this country, situated in the following States: Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Missouri, Kentucky, Virginia, Georgia, South Carolina, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas.

The machinery used in this industry is made in England, especially for bagging manufacture, and has paid an average duty of 40 per cent.

The cloth manufactured by these mills is used exclusively for the covering of the American cotton crop, and can not be sold for any other purpose, nor can the machinery be made available in any other way.

No cotton bagging is imported, therefore no revenue has been received by the Government from this source, and the surplus is in no way decreased by reducing the duty on bagging.

A large proportion of the 50,000,000 yards of bagging needed to cover the cotton crop each year has to be made and carried by the manufacturer from six to eight months before it is required by the planter for actual use, the period of distribution being confined to about three months in the year when the cotton crop is being gathered.

Although there is no bagging of like quality made anywhere else at present, there are large jute mills, both in Dundee and Calcutta, whose machinery could easily be adapted to make this cloth.

Calcutta has extra advantages in the fact that her mill-owners are not only supplied with the latest improved machinery, but run their factories with cooly labor, which is notoriously the cheapest in the world, and the raw material used (jute butts) grows at their very doors. Moreover they all belong to one of the strongest combinations in the world, and control by their united action the price of their product and the amount of production.

The Calcutta mills have an annual capacity of more than 350,000,000 yards, and by order of their association are now running but five days in the week in order to reduce their production to the actual requirements of the countries to which their cloth is at present exported, thus enabling them to obtain high prices.

Their machinery if operated one-half day more in the week would produce enough cloth to cover the American cotton crop, and were this market thrown open to them, the bagging required in this country would doubtless be sold at very low prices until all American competition was destroyed, when prices could be rearranged to suit the views of the Indian Jute Manufacturers' Association.

Without a reasonable protection no American manufacturer could afford to make bagging so long in advance as is necessary, for without such protection he would be subject to large importations of bagging from abroad just at the time of year his sales should take place and the distribution of his bagging commence.

Previous to the establishment of this industry in America, the covering for the cotton crop was imported from the East Indies and was known as gunny cloth. This sold at not less than 12 cents per yard, and sometimes as high as 18 and 20 cents.

Notwithstanding the protection which the mills in this country have received, and which has excluded foreign-made cloth from our market, competition between the home mills has reduced the price of bagging to about one-half of the price formerly paid for the imported cloth.

The President in his message and the Democratic party in all the announcements of their principles have stated distinctly that the policy of their party would be not to destroy any industry already established under the existing tariff laws, but in placing the raw material on the free-list to make a corresponding reduction in the manufactured article, thereby lowering the price to the consumer while leaving the manufacturers uninjured.

In view of these facts the manufacturers of bagging would respectfully ask that they be treated with the same consideration extended to other manufacturing industries in the United States.

In placing jute butts on the free-list, as provided in the present bill, a reduction will be made in the cost of the raw material used by us of $5 per ton, or a little less than one-fourth of a cent per pound.

The present duty on the manufactured article is 1½ cents per pound, equal to 3 cents per yard for 2-pound bagging, which is the average weight used, and if this duty were made 1 cent per pound, equal to 2 cents per yard, it would be a reduction of ¼ cent per pound, or more than double the reduction effected in the raw material, and would enable the home manufacturers to maintain this industry as against foreign capital and cooly labor.

For reasons given above the manufacturers of bagging in the United States would respectfully ask that the following be adopted as an amendment to the clause in the present bill relating to the duty on bagging for covering cotton:

"Bagging for cotton or other manufactures suitable to the uses for which cotton bagging is applied, composed in whole or in part of hemp, jute, jute butts, flax, gunny bags, gunny cloth, or other material suitable for covering cotton, 2 cents per yard."

Ludlow Manufacturing Company, Ludlow, Mass.; Nevins & Co., Salem, Mass.; New York Bagging Company, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Eagle Mills, Brooklyn, N. Y.; the Hart Bagging Company, Brooklyn, N. Y.; E. S. Stevens, Quinnebaug, Conn.; Horicon Mills, Manchester, N. J.; J. C. Todd, Patterson, N. J.; Charleston Bagging Manufacturing Company, Charleston, S. C.; Hinde, Preer & Iliges, Columbus, Ga.; James Sherry, Eufaula, Ala.; Crescent Jute Manufacturing Company, New Orleans, La.; Galveston Baggage and Cordage Company, Galveston, Tex.; Louisville Bagging Manufacturing Company, Louisville, Ky.; Southern Mills Bagging Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Standard Mills Bagging Company, St. Louis, Mo.; St. Louis Bagging Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Empire Bagging Company, Champaign, Ill.; Muncie Bagging Manufacturing Company, Muncie, Ind.; W. H. Hessin & Co., Huntington, Ind.; Peru Bagging Company, Peru, Ind.; Troy Bagging Company, Troy, Ohio.

Now, I ask, whence does the demand for this amendment come, except from a small portion of our country? If California does not use the Eastern-made bags, why can she not draught her amendment in such a way as not to apply to the whole country, depriving the Eastern manufacturers and Eastern laboring men employed in this manufacture of their market?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be regarded as withdrawn. The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move, pro forma, to amend by striking out the last word. I have refrained thus far from saying anything on this subject, because I differ, perhaps, from some gentlemen for whose opinion I have a very high regard. I have been all the time, and am now, in favor of placing jute butts, sunn, sisal-grass, and other similar vegetable fibers on the free-list.

If I am correctly advised, jute is not an American product and can not be. At least every experiment we have made in that direction has signally failed; and whatever quantity of jute or jute butts is now used by American manufacturers is imported, and necessarily must be. It is grown almost exclusively in British India and in China.

I have in my district at least one very large manufactory engaged in producing bagging for cotton-baling and for bagging grain. I can very easily see why the California farmer may desire free bags, if it be true that if by having them free he obtains them in the market more cheaply than they can be had if subject to duty. There, if I understand correctly, the farmer sells the bagging with the grain; he exports both and receives per pound for the bagging what he receives per pound for its contents, and as the bagging costs him more per pound than he obtains for the grain, he loses the difference. In my section of the country the farmer sends his grain to the elevator in bags belonging to those who make the purchase, and when the contents are sold the bags are returned to their owners. The farmers in Indiana own very few grain sacks, for the reason I have stated.

Now, it seems to me that we do all that those who may be interested in the purchase of the grain sacks can demand if we place on the free-list the material out of which they are made. The manufacturers in my part of the country, I may say, favor this, although they are to some extent indifferent about it. They believe in protection; they are protectionists; they vote for me and the Republican ticket, and against the Mills bill and all other iniquities of that kind.

There is a difference between imposing a duty upon jute and jute butts and imposing a duty upon a product manufactured from them. Every gentleman can see the difference without my pointing it out. In the language of an extensive manufacturer, whose letter I hold in my hand, jute and jute butts compete with no American product. It is not raised here. But if the jute comes in and is put in a manufactured product, then by this manufacture it becomes an American product. And if this should come into competition with the cheap jute abroad—I mean the cheap labor used in the production abroad, for there is no lower rate of wages paid anywhere than is paid to the industry engaged in raising jute and jute butts—if that material produced by this cheap labor comes into competition with the American product it must necessarily also come into competition with the manufactured article, and therefore the manufactured article should be kept on the dutiable list.

Mr. FELTON. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in California the greatest manufacture of jute sacks is in the State's prison; this arrangement for their manufacture was made by the State authority, as it was thought it could in no wise interfere with the free labor of the country.

The effect of this manufacture of bags in the State's prison has been to prevent what had always existed, and in my opinion would exist whether the duty is kept on or their importation is made free, that is a combine by the foreign importers to increase prices. I refer to the importation of sacks into the State of California, where they are largely used in the transportation of grain. These grain-sacks are made at present in few foreign countries and factories, thus rendering combines of importers easy. But while the manufacture continues at the State's prison it renders a monopoly of this article more difficult and less secure. The result has been that it has not interfered with the free labor of the State, yet at the same time the product has been cheapened in price by furnishing an additional supply to compete with a foreign importation, and as their sale has wisely been restricted in amount to individual purchasers.

I have already, as far as I could, emphasized the free importation of the raw material by voting to put on the free-list jute and jute butts, as my colleagues also have done. But taking into consideration the existing state of facts and the fact that the taking off of this duty will, as I believe, interfere with the general industry of the making of sacks of all kinds and from all materials now used throughout this country, by resulting in bringing in the manufactured articles from India and Europe to the displacement of the home manufacture, and consequently to the disadvantage of home labor. I shall not vote for the amendment.

Mr. STEELE. I rise, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking the Clerk to read a letter which I have received in reference to the manufacture of bagging, the subject now under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

PERU, IND., March 10, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Have noticed in the newspapers that the Democratic tariff reformers intend to have burlaps and bagging for covering cotton on the free-list. If this law should go into effect it would totally ruin a very valuable American industry to the amount of several million dollars. The average cotton crop consumes about fifty million yards per annum, which is at present all manufactured in America, and one-half of it in this close vicinity—St. Louis, Mo., Louisville, Ky., and Muncie, Peru, and Huntington, Ind.

Our factory employs at present over one hundred hands, and we turn out over 3,000,000 yards per annum, and we have an investment in this business of over a hundred thousand dollars. There is not the least doubt that our and every other bagging mill in this country would be closed within six months if this law should go into effect.

Now, friend STEELE, we ask you to use all your influence to protect us against such unjust legislation. The present duty is limited enough. Only three years ago, when jute butts were three-quarters of a cent a pound higher than this present time, and American bagging manufacturers advanced the value of bagging 1¼ cents per yard, Dundee, Scotland, jute manufacturers supplied a good portion of the American bagging market. This is to show you that the margin is low enough now with the present tariff. The duty on jute butts ought to be taken off, because there is no jute raised in America, and therefore would harm no one. Thanking you in advance for a reply and early attention,

Am truly yours,

A. LEHMAN,
President Peru Bagging Company.

Hon. GEORGE W. STEELE,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEELE. Without occupying further time, I will merely say that I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will not be agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Merely saying that the gentleman's correspondent is wholly in error as to the effect of placing bagging on the free-list, I call for a vote.

By unanimous consent, formal amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask for the reading of the pending amendment.

Page 3, after line 43, insert bags of jute for grain.

Mr. DINGLEY. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 63.

Mr. DINGLEY made the point of no quorum, but afterwards withdrew it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I insist on the point of no quorum.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. STEELE.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 67.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Machinery designed for the conversion of jute or jute butts into cotton bagging, to wit, cards, roving frames, winding frames, and softeners.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the proposition to put on the free-list one of the most advanced forms of manufacture is not in harmony with the announced doctrine of this bill, which is that it is to give free raw materials for commodities, in order to cheapen their cost while maintaining the rate of wages for labor.

The machinery it embraces is, I am assured, largely manufactured in this country, although I have heard it said on the floor that none is manufactured. Orders can, I am assured, be given for any amount and it will be made and made of material which this bill leaves dutiable in every stage, from ore up—machinery which is to be admitted free of duty.

If it be true, as the advocates of this bill assert, that duties are taxes, then you tax the manufacturer of this machinery on all his material and make his finished product, composed of taxed materials, free. Gentlemen who manage this bill say that both coal and iron are to be dutiable. I do not find that the bill makes it free; but I think when the proper stage is reached they will redeem their assurances given to the miners and laborers of Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Alabama, that provisions necessary to accomplish these assurances will be inserted in the bill. Pig-iron is dutiable, and bar-iron is dutiable at a larger rate in proportion to the increased amount of industry involved in it.

Steel is dutiable at a still higher rate, again, in proportion to the amount of industry involved in its manufacture; and so on all the way through until, as I have said, you come to this machinery itself, which moves with greater precision than the human hand, and which seems to be instinct with human intellect of a high order—machinery which embodies some of the most wonderful inventions of the human mind in this or other countries. When labor and genius have advanced your coal and ore and pig-iron into these machines, the result of skilled labor, you say now, in order to check the manufacture of such valuable machines as these, we will leave the elements subject to duty and make the finished product free.

I say it is inconsistent with the argument indulged in by the framers of this bill. It is inconsistent with all the arguments yet made on the other side of the House. Certainly no man will venture to assert that machinery of this kind is raw material. They can not point us to the vines or trees upon which the machines grow, or point us to the caves or mines from whence they may be dug. They are, as I have said, the result of the highest order of mechanical skill and the most precise labor of our most accomplished working people.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman pardon an inquiry?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Does the gentleman know where any of this machinery is constructed in this country? and, if so, I would be obliged to him for any information on that subject.

Mr. KELLEY. I have assurances from gentlemen engaged in textile manufactures of various kinds that this machinery is made in New England, and, as they believed, at the Bridesburg works—or rather at the works of the Bridesburgh Manufacturing Company in Philadelphia it is made——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be permitted to continue his remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. I last evening interrogated a gentleman, Mr. William Whitman, the president of the Association of Woolen Manufacturers, whose home is, I believe, in Boston——

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. And who is doubtless well known to the Representatives of that State; and put the plain, blunt question to him whether the articles covered by this clause were manufactured in this country. He responded: "Oh, yes, abundantly. All the machinery in use that I know of in working textiles of all sorts is made and can be made abundantly with the machine tools and the organized labor we already have." I had appealed to other sources of information less distinguished, and had received like information, and therefore I assume it to be true that this machinery is constructed in our own country.

But it is most marvelous, Mr. Chairman, if our establishments which can produce the finest machinery required for the manufacture of delicate silks, from the narrower fringes or ribbons to the broadest fabrics, that can manufacture every degree of quality of cotton goods that are in use in France or England or the United States to-day, that can manufacture the machinery that produces all the woolen goods we produce—that with all of these things it can not make the few simple articles named in this clause and which are used in the manufacture of jute. But a serious difficulty attending the making of these goods free is that they may be used in other textile manufactures. It will become a question of the intent with which a thing was manufactured rather than the constituent elements or the uses to which it may be applied which is to determine whether it is dutiable or free under this bill.

There is no distinction, no clear, well-defined distinction between machinery to be used in spinning and weaving jute and that used in spinning and weaving cotton, wool, worsted, and other fabrics. There may be a slight difference in detail, but none in principle; and I say, therefore, that the assessor of customs would be sent for a standard, as to whether an article was free or dutiable, to the intent with which it had been manufactured, rather than the purpose to which it might be applied.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have said enough to present the whole case to the consideration of the gentlemen, and to show that at least they have thrown into connection with raw materials, as they call it, from which they have removed the duties and made free, one of the most complicated classes of manufactures.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has stated that a well-known business man had informed him that as far as he knew all the machinery used for textile manufacturing purposes was made in this country.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not say all that is used; but every kind of machinery is made and made in perfection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That includes "any" and "all," at least in part.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman says "every kind." Of course that includes any kind. He also stated "so far as he knew." Now, if the gentleman who gave the information to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] had stated that this particular machinery was of his own knowledge made in this country, I should consider it most excellent evidence——

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I have failed to make myself understood or to be understood. I said I had put the question point blank, "Are the articles described in this paragraph manufactured in this country?" and I received the affirmative assurance that they were and are now being manufactured in this country.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I understood the gentleman to say that he received the assurance that they were, so far as the gentleman knew.

Mr. KELLEY. Oh, no, no.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Very well, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KELLEY. He added, as far as he knew they were manufactured at Bridesburgh, in Philadelphia, but he knew they were manufactured in New England.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. He knew this particular class of machinery was manufactured in New England? I now understand that to be the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. We now need to balance credible testimony. I want to state to the House that this gentleman is, I believe, not engaged in this line of business. I am inclined to think he is liable to be in error, and, as a matter of fact, I think he is in error about this particular matter. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] is perhaps familiar with a communication that we have all received from the manufacturers of bagging, in which they say that their machinery can not be used for any other purpose than the manufacture of bagging. It can not be so used even, they say, for the manufacture of burlaps. That would seem to effectually cover the point the gentleman makes that this machinery can be used for other purposes. All of the gentlemen employing it say that it can not be so used. I want to add further that I have had the pleasure of conversing with gentlemen engaged in this business from Brooklyn, from Boston, from St. Louis, and from Charleston, and the testimony of all of those gentlemen is that not a particle of this machinery is made in this country. I do not question that it can be made, but I simply file this evidence before the House to help settle the question as to whether it is made here. That is the testimony those gentlemen engaged in the business have given us about where the machinery is made; and that is the testimony they have given to us as to the uses to which it can be put; and these are the two points raised by the gentleman.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. If not one particle of this machinery is manufactured in this country, it is not a subsidized industry, is it?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No; at least it is not getting a subsidy.

Mr. BAYNE. It is not a subsidized industry, to use the gentleman's own expression. Then why not make it pay duty on the same principle on which you make sugar pay duty, on the theory that the money goes into the Treasury, instead of into the pockets of the manufacturers?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think the reason is a very plain one. We are making a very great reduction on bagging, and we ought as far as possible to cheapen the articles that they consume in making bagging to enable them to stand the reduction on the finished product.

Mr. BAYNE. But none of the duty paid on these articles, according to the gentleman's own theory, goes into the hands of the manufacturers; the duty goes into the Treasury of the Government, because it is not a subsidized industry. That is the principle upon which the gentleman justifies the duty on sugar, because eight-tenths or more of it goes into the Treasury and does not go into the hands of producers or manufacturers of sugar. Now, why make an exception of this machinery, which is not a subsidized industry, and let it go in free? Your theory is in favor of making those things pay duty where the whole amount goes into the hands of the Government instead of the pockets of the manufacturer.

Mr. MORSE. We try to help the manufacturer by giving him the machinery free.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is both right and wrong. He takes hold of a piece of information and runs off into a wild generalization upon it. We do not need revenue. Even if we needed revenue, I should not favor a tax (if it could be well avoided) upon an article which, while it might not subsidize any particular industry, would yet very greatly discriminate against some industry; and that would be the case in this instance. Having determined to fix a given rate upon the finished product, it is certainly sound policy to reduce as far as possible the tax upon those things which go into the production of that product. It becomes, of course, an industrial question of force and moment which must be carefully considered in connection with the question of revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "roving frames" in line 42. I make this motion not because I know what "roving frames" are, but because I wish to find out. It is so inconceivable that machinery can not be made in this country that it occurs to me more information ought to be given to us from the Committee on Ways and Means than we have yet received.

If it be true that this machinery not only is not now made in this country but can not be made in this country, then of course this tariff duty is not a protective duty but a revenue duty, and the question is whether this particular revenue duty ought under the present circumstances of the country to be reduced. But as I said before, the statement that machinery of any kind can not be produced in the United States is so extraordinary to me that I think it fair that we should have more explicit information than we have yet had upon that point.

Mr. ROGERS. I think the gentleman misapprehended the statement of my colleague [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]. My colleague did not say that the machinery could not be made in this country; he simply laid before the House the evidences of the fact that that which is now used was not made in this country.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me ask my friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] what "roving frames" are. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROGERS. I was only correcting you in regard to my colleague's statement. I do not know anything about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman's colleague [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] tell me what "roving frames" are?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will say to the gentleman that it is entirely immaterial what roving frames are. The question is, are they made in this country, and are they a source of expense to the manufacturers of bagging? I can tell the gentleman what roving frames are, but it is wholly unnecessary that gentlemen who are considering the economic side of this question should have all the technical information of those who are engaged in the particular pursuit. Gentlemen make a mistake when they hold that only those who are engaged in a pursuit should undertake to discuss the question from its economic side.

Mr. ADAMS. I repudiate that statement; I never have said one word which would justify my friend from Arkansas in making that suggestion.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I speak of your side of the House. I do not pretend to quote your statements; but that is the general attitude of gentlemen on your side of the House, and logically so.

Mr. ADAMS. The general principle which I adhere to and which I believe the gentleman, whetever his theories in regard to protection may be, ought to accept, is that whenever any gentleman proposes a change in the law he ought to be able to give a reason for that change; he ought to be able to show that the change will be ultimately beneficial to the country. Now let us assume that a revenue tariff is the proper tariff. The gentleman will admit—the gentleman is compelled to admit by many provisions of this bill—that there should be discrimination in the industries the products of which are to be put on the free-list, and I maintain that it is the duty of the Committee on Ways and Means to give this House a certain amount of information, even technical information, so that we may be aided in determining what our duty is. Now, I ask any member of the Committee on Ways and Means to inform this House what sort of machinery this is, in order that we may come to a conclusion upon the question whether it is not a fit subject for protection, or whether it is not a fit subject for the postponement of a change in the duty—which is another equally important consideration. I repeat, that I ask these questions simply because I believe in good faith that the burden of proof is upon the Committee on Ways and Means to give us the reason for the conclusion to which they wish us to subscribe.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think that the burden of proof has been borne very fairly, and, in my humble judgment, very satisfactorily. Whenever the gentleman can show the slightest connection between what he wants to know and the economic question presented here, I have no doubt that the committee will be able to satisfy him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BAYNE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize a gentleman in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, I will oppose the striking out of "roving frames." I am told that there are no such things as roving frames, so it is not strange that the committee could not answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.] It shows the knowledge they have of the matters with which they are proposing to deal in this bill.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Ask the minority of the committee what "roving frames" are.

Mr. BAYNE. The minority are not responsible for this bill. Wait until our bill comes in. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MORSE. You have got to wait until your convention is over. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. You say you do not know what roving frames are. Do you know what "cards" are?

Mr. BAYNE. This case is in keeping with the general scheme of this bill. The gentlemen who framed it do not understand the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. BYNUM. What machinery is the gentleman inquiring about?

Mr. BAYNE. Roving frames. I want to know what they are.

Mr. BYNUM. Do you know what "roving" means?

Mr. BAYNE. Yes; I know what it means.

Mr. BYNUM. What does it mean?

Mr. BAYNE. It means moving, perambulating around, as the Democratic party is doing these days, hunting for a platform. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYNUM. As used in connection with machinery it means to draw through an aperture. Also, a rove of wool is only partially twisted. Consequently I presume this machine in the manufacture of jute is used for a similar purpose as in the manufacture of wool.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is a difference between a carding-machine and a roving-machine.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rose more particularly to call attention to the attitude of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and who, as I do not see him in his seat, is probably at this moment consulting a dictionary to find out what roving frames are. [Laughter.] The position of the gentleman from Arkansas has been all along that where a thing not made in this country was subject to a duty the whole duty went into the Treasury, but that in so far as an article paying duty was made in this country, the duty was in the nature of a subsidy. It was on that principle that the gentleman justified the high rate of duty maintained on sugar. We produce one-eighth, one-tenth, or one-eleventh—there is a difference of opinion as to the exact amount—of the sugar consumed in this country, and the gentleman from Arkansas, in reply to the suggestion that sugar should come in free because it did not fall within the legitimate range of protection, said, no, it ought not to come in free because it was not a subsidized industry. How not subsidized? Why, not subsidized to the extent of the sugar that is imported in addition to our own production, but subsidized to the extent of our production. That is the logic of the gentleman's position. Now, if it be good logic to fasten a duty on a thing we do not produce, for the reason that the whole amount of the duty goes into the Treasury, and bad logic to put a duty on things which we do produce because the money goes into the pockets of the manufacturers, why not make this machinery mentioned in this paragraph pay a duty? It is not a subsidized industry on the theory that we do not make any of it. Gentlemen, that is not the explanation. These things are wanted in the South.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Oh, no; they are wanted in my district.

Mr. BAYNE. They want them in the South, as they want cottonties, as they want many other things down there; and because they are wanted in the South gentlemen on the other side propose to make them free; yet they say this bill is not sectional. [Derisive cries on the Democratic side.] When I say the bill is sectional, gentlemen may regard it as empty talk; but noise and truth sometimes go together. The eruption of a volcano has sometimes a terrible effect on the surrounding country. What I say is the truth about this matter; and you can read it in every line of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] moved to strike out the words "roving frames" because, he said, he did not know what "roving frames" were.

Mr. ADAMS. No; because I wanted to find out.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I move to strike out the word "cards;" perhaps gentlemen do not know what they are.

Mr. BAYNE. As the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] has returned to his seat, he can, perhaps, inform us what "roving frames" are.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I hold in my hand a book containing a representation of one of these machines, and as the best means of conveying the matter to the gentleman's mind I ask him to come and look at this picture.

Mr. ADAMS. Does it look as if it could be made in America?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have no doubt that anything which can be constructed by human ingenuity can be made in America. But the only question in this debate is, is this machinery made in this country?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This book gives a representation of a "roving frame," such as is used in the woolen business; and, as I am informed, the same kind of frame is used in the bagging business. Of course I never used one myself. It is a machine used in putting a fiber through what is called the drawing process. It is brought into a loose continuous roll prior to being made into yarn fit for spinning. This, I am told by bagging manufacturers, is the character of the machine.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I desire to bring this debate back to the business question on which we are engaged. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] to close his remarks by saying in effect that "machinery designed for the conversion of jute or jute butts into cotton bagging, to wit, cards, roving frames, winding frames, and softeners," are in this bill put on the free-list for the benefit of the South. I say that putting this machinery upon the free-list is a measure largely for the benefit of the people who make cotton bagging in my own State and in other parts of New England, and incidentally for the benefit of the people who raise cotton and are compelled to buy the covering of their bales.

Mr. BAYNE. Have they asked for this?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. They have.

Mr. BAYNE. By petition?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. They have asked for it in the usual manner, so that the knowledge of it is brought to this House through myself or any other member who chooses to give information of their desire.

Mr. BAYNE rose.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I will not yield to you any further.

Mr. BAYNE. I was going to ask you one question.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. You can ask it later. I do not want to be drawn away from the point I am discussing. The bill proposes to put this machinery on the free-list. Why? Because not a single roving frame or any other part of the machinery for manufacturing cotton bagging is made in the United States; and the reason why such machinery is not made here is because the demand for it has not been up to the present time, as it probably will not be in the near future, sufficient to induce machinists to undertake the work of making this enormously heavy machinery.

The manufacturers who are now provided with this machinery are compelled to send to England for duplicate parts necessary from time to time in the making of repairs. This machinery should be as cheap as possible, because it is used for only one purpose, that is, for the making of all the cotton bagging that covers the six or seven million bales of cotton produced annually in the South, the bagging for which is made almost entirely in the Eastern States. It is in the interest of production, in the interest of the manufacturers of the East that we ask to have this machinery put on the free-list, and in saying this I represent a district very largely engaged in the manufacture of textile machinery.

Mr. WEBER. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. When I get through you can have the floor.

The looms in which cotton and woolen manufactures are made, the "roving frames" of woolen and cotton machinery are made largely in the manufacturing districts of my State. And the works thus employed do not attempt to make this class of work, nor will they raise any objection to a removal of the present duties.

We ask this change in the interest of production, and to assist in cheapening one of the necessities of agriculture, the covering of cotton bales. I withdraw my amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LIND. I desire to send up and have read a proposition which I offer as a substitute for the pending amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

And also the machinery required for, or used in, the manufacture of twines of hemp, jute, jute butts, sunn or sisal-grass.

Mr. LIND. I move it as a substitute for the pending amendments to lines 41, 42, and 43, and to come in at the end of line 43.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair). That is not in the nature of a substitute, but is an amendment.

Mr. LIND. Is it not in order to move it as a substitute for the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] moved to strike out the paragraph, and to that an amendment was made to strike out some of the words of that paragraph.

Mr. NELSON. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota takes precedence of the motion to strike out. It has always been ruled that a motion to perfect the paragraph takes precedence of the motion to strike out. I think the gentleman's substitute, therefore, takes precedence.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer his amendment, and the Chair will hold the matter under advisement.

Mr. LIND. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that the committee has already voted to place jute sacks for the use of the California farmer upon the free-list. The vote on this paragraph will result, in all probability, in placing machinery for the manufacture of cotton bagging on the free-list, because every proposition offered by the other side has carried. Hence I assume that will also carry.

Now, if it is right in the view of the majority of this House to place grain bagging used by the farmer of California on the free-list, if it is right to place machinery for the manufacture of cotton bagging for the planter of the South on the free-list, I ask you why in reason and fairness is it not equally just and equally proper that you should place the machinery used in the manufacture of binding twine, used by the Northwestern farmer, also upon the free-list?

There are much stronger reasons in favor of the latter than in the case of the others. The cotton farmer of the South sells his bagging with his cotton and gets the same price for it that he gets for the cotton; the farmer of the Pacific coast sells his bagging and gets as much for it as he does for his wheat; but the farmer of the Northwest loses his twine, because it is burned with the straw, and he gets no rebate. The farmer of the South gets a rebate on the sacks used by him of 90 per cent.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Is the gentleman from Minnesota sure of what he has said?

Mr. LIND. Such is my understanding.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. In fact no rebate is allowed.

Mr. LIND. I was arguing upon the construction of the law as made by this Administration, which allows a rebate on jute bagging when used by the farmers of the South and of the Pacific coast. There is no good reason why the same measure of relief should not be afforded to the farmers of the Northwest in reference to binding twine.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Perhaps the gentleman from Minnesota is referring to some construction in the past.

Mr. LIND. Do past errors justify present grievances?

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. An effort has been made by lawyers to make up a case for court, but it has never been done, as the Treasury Department has always refused to allow any drawback on cotton bagging exported with the cotton which it covers.

Mr. LIND. As this Administration has allowed and is allowing rebates on the jute bags used in the export of flour I can see no possible reason why the same law does not entitle the planter of the South and the California farmer to the like rebate on the jute bagging employed by them to cover their export products. As a matter of law they are entitled to it and should have it, and while they enjoy that privilege this committee has extended further relief to them. It has given free jute sacks to the one and free machinery for the manufacture of the cotton bagging used by the other. Now why not do something for the Minnesota farmer? He uses the same jute material, pays the same tariff, and has not even a show of asking for a rebate. Now, if it is fair and just to give to the Southern planter the benefit of free machinery, why not give the same benefit to the Northwestern farmer, who uses this twine to bind his grain?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume the pro forma amendment to be withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will not renew the pro forma amendment; let us have a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LIND, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARNER. I move to strike out the last word, and simply for the purpose, not of taking up the time of the committee, but to say that I think it makes little difference what you do with reference to the machinery recommended in this paragraph of the bill, whether it be adopted or not, because the jute industry and its manufacture in the United States under the provisions of the bill already adopted will be destroyed beyond redemption. I therefore send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a statement signed by all of the leading jute manufacturers in the country with reference to the effect upon the business in the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

Calcutta has extra advantages in the fact that her mill-owners are not only supplied with the largest improved machinery, but run their factories with cooly labor, which is notoriously the cheapest in the world, and the raw material used (jute butts) grows at their very doors.

Moreover they all belong to one of the strongest combinations of capital as against labor in the world, and control by their united action the price of their product and amount of productions.

The Calcutta mills have an annual capacity of more than 200,000,000 yards, and by order of their association they are now running but five days in the week, in order to reduce their productions to the actual requirements of the countries to which their cloth is at present exported, thus enabling them to obtain high prices.

Their machinery if operated one more day in the week would produce enough cloth to cover the American cotton crop, and were this market thrown open to them, the bagging required in this country would doubtless be sold at very low prices until all American competition were destroyed, when prices could be rearranged to suit the views of the Indian Jute Manufacture Association, and the cotton planter of the United States would be left at the mercy of an East Indian trust.

Without a reasonable protection no American manufacturer could afford to make bagging so long in advance as is necessary, for without such protection he would be subject to large importations of bagging from abroad just at the time of year his sales should take place and the distribution of his bagging commence.

Previous to the establishment of this industry in America, the covering for the cotton crop was imported from the East Indies, and was known as gunny cloth. This was sold at not less than 12 cents per yard, and sometimes as high as 18 and 20 cents.

Notwithstanding the protection which the mills in this country have received, and which excluded foreign-made cloth from our market, the price of bagging has been reduced about one-half of the price formerly paid for the imported cloth.

Mr. WARNER. I have had this extract read, signed, as I have stated, by all of the leading manufacturers, if their testimony is worth anything, before the committee, to show the effect of the legislation proposed here. There seems to be no evidence to establish the fact that this legislation is in the interest of our own people, whereas, on the contrary, it is shown by the extract quoted that it is in the interest of the cooly labor of Calcutta and in the interest of trusts in Calcutta that control her manufactures. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] nods his head approvingly, and I presume the gentlemen on the other side of the House are also saying "down with the American labor and up with the Calcutta cooly labor."

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is hardly necessary to respond to an assertion of that sort in view of the position that gentlemen assume over there, who stand up and fortify these organizations known as trusts, and by their votes prevent any encroachments upon their powers to harm the people.

Mr. WARNER. I have fortified no trust, but have voted to break down all of them.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Why, the gentleman's very vote on these questions, sustaining these high rates of protection, is fortifying the trusts.

Mr. WARNER. Well, that is a mere assertion.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It is a fact, at all events.

Mr. WARNER. A mere assertion, which has no foundation in fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume the pro forma amendment to be withdrawn.

Mr. WARNER. I withdraw it.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. KELLEY to strike out the paragraph, it was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron or steel sheets, or plates, or taggers iron, coated with tin or lead, or with a mixture of which these metals is a component part, by the dipping or any other process, and commercially known as tin-plates, terne plates, and taggers tin.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 44, 45, 46, 47, and 48, and I make the motion not simply for the purpose of securing the opportunity to address myself to this paragraph, but because I believe that if we were debating this subject in a House the members of which were open to conviction on a fair consideration of this subject of tin-plates and the relation that it bears to our American industries, and to a tariff bill constructed upon a proper theory, every fair-minded man would come to the conclusion that instead of putting tin-plates upon the free-list the present duty ought to be increased.

Tin-plates are now dutiable at a rate of 1 cent a pound, and they constituted last year 33½ per cent. of the total importations of iron and steel into this country. There are no tin-plates made in the United States to-day, and the effect amongst other things of putting them upon the free-list will be to prevent the possibility for all time to come of creating and maintaining an industry as natural as are a great many others which belong to America. Not only that, but another necessary result of putting tin-plates upon the free-list will be, as I think I shall be able to show the committee, to strike down utterly and ruin forever the sheet-iron industry in this country.

Now, what are tin-plates? They are, I answer, accurately described by this paragraph of the bill:

Tin-plates, terne plates, and taggers tin.

Found in the last line of the paragraph are the products described in the first two lines of the paragraph, to wit:

Iron or steel sheets, or plates, or taggers iron coated with tin or lead, or with the mixture in which these metals are a component part.

That is to say, an iron or tin sheet coated with tin is a tin-plate. Taggers iron coated with tin constitutes what is known as "taggers tin," and an iron or steel sheet or plate coated with a mixture of tin and lead constitutes a terne plate. These plates therefore are not tin products, but are iron and steel products, from 95 to 97 per cent. of iron or steel and from 3 to 5 per cent. of tin. The conclusion is manifest, as will be apparent to those who have followed me, that we are to have on the free-list one of the very highest and most perfect of steel manufactures.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that my friend from Pennsylvania be permitted to occupy such time——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed five minutes longer.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that ten minutes be allowed. This is a most important matter.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think that we should at this point endeavor, if possible, to arrive at some conclusion as to the time which gentlemen desire to occupy in the discussion of this branch of the bill.

What time does my friend suggest?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. This is one of those cases in which one of the incongruities occur to which my colleague [Mr. MCKINLEY] referred in his remarks the other day, where they really tax the base of the article far beyond the finished product; and as my friend from Pennsylvania is apparently familiar with the subject, I would like to have him occupy such time as he may desire to explain it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. With a view to enable the gentleman from Pennsylvania to do that, I was suggesting that the time be now fixed when we may have a vote.

Mr. REED. We can not tell possibly how much time will be required until we have gone on with the discussion, at least for a while.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not want to cut off the time or interrupt the gentleman. It was with a view of preventing such action that I suggested we might agree upon the time. What time will the gentleman suggest?

Mr. REED. We will agree later. There will be no unnecessary time taken.

Mr. BAYNE. This is a technical and mechanical discussion. There is no possibility that gentlemen will waste time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What time would you suggest?

Mr. BAYNE. I want to hear the subject properly discussed.

Mr. REED. As soon as the debate has been opened and we know what its extent ought to be we can tell.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] be permitted to proceed for twenty minutes.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection, if we can come to some understanding when the discussion is to end.

Mr. MCKINLEY. That we can not do on this proposition. It is very important. If this controversy goes on it will necessitate the occupying of still more time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY]?

Mr. TRACEY. Unless we can come to some agreement, I object.

Mr. BYNUM. I object, also.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me make a single suggestion to our friends on the other side. There are several parties here whose constituents are immediately interested in this industry. They desire briefly to call attention to their relation to the industry. By common consent the gentleman from Pittsburgh——

Mr. MCMILLIN. What suggestion do you make?

Mr. REED. I submit to the gentleman from Tennessee that a proposition to close the debate before we have opened it can not be acted upon.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It has been commenced.

Mr. REED. It is impossible for the House to know what is a fair time for any debate until the subject has been opened. Our rules recognize that distinction, and will not permit debate to be closed before it is entirely opened.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman knows the rules have been complied with as to this discussion.

Mr. REED. The principle on which the rule is founded is that it is utterly impossible for the House to know how much time will be needed until the subject has been opened.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I was desirous of disposing of the matter in such a way that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] could go on uninterrupted; but if that can not be done we will go along in the ordinary way.

Mr. REED. No time will be lost by allowing a fair opening of this very important question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is now a quarter to 3. How will it do to agree to close the debate at 5 o'clock?

Mr. REED. I do not know that it will take that length of time. I do not know how long it will take. This subject not only concerns tin-plates, but it concerns cognate industries, which must be explained. Of course we can proceed by adhering strictly to the five-minute rule. It is optional with gentlemen on the other side to hamper us in that way.

Mr. MCMILLIN. There is no disposition to hamper gentlemen to an unreasonable extent, but I thought the suggestion I made would enable the gentlemen to get along in a way that would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. REED. It is not possible for us to tell how much time will be required. I have not myself sufficient familiarity with the subject to know how much time ought to be taken. I can only say the debate will take no short time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Would it not be satisfactory to the gentleman to have the debate close at 5 o'clock?

Mr. REED. It would not be satisfactory.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Very well, then.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Suppose we let the debate run on until 5 o'clock this afternoon and continue it for half an hour to-morrow morning.

Mr. REED. I do not think there is any use in trying to come to any arrangement about it. I can only say to gentlemen on the other side that no effort will be made to prolong the debate, nor has there been any such effort up to this time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If we can not come to any agreement we will have the five-minute discussion. We will do the best we can.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW], and he may proceed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make this particular item an exception to our ordinary progress upon the bill. I desire to make the case of my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] an exception to the ordinary rules in this debate, because I know he is familiar with this subject and will speak to it without rambling to other points. I therefore ask that by unanimous consent he be allowed a quarter of an hour.

Mr. BLAND. Where favors are asked favors ought to be granted. If we can not have——

Mr. REED. It is not any favor to this House to limit a discussion which is being properly carried on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. DALZELL] be allowed to occupy fifteen minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DALZELL. I think I have shown, what indeed is very apparent, that tin-plates are an iron and steel product, and not a tin product; and it therefore follows that this bill in putting them upon the free-list creates this anomaly: from the ore, through the pig-iron and its product, clear up to the steel rail, there is not a single item that does not pay a tariff duty and that will not pay a tariff duty under the Mills bill except the very highest finished product of steel, tin-plates—not one.

I therefore suggest that that is an anomaly which ought not to be introduced into our legislation. The fact is that the failure to understand the character of the tin-plate industry is what has ruined the industry in this country. In the tariff act of 1864 there was this provision:

And on tin-plates, and iron galvanized or coated with any metal by electric batteries or otherwise, two cents and a half per pound.

In other words, there was a tariff duty commensurate with the demands of the industry—such a tariff as we ought to have now. But that legislation was rendered useless by a decision of the Secretary of the Treasury, made in utter ignorance of the subject. Mr. Fessenden held that the comma that occurred in the paragraph I have just read after the word "tin-plates" had been put in by mistake, and that the paragraph ought to read:

On tin-plates and iron galvanized or coated with any metal by electric batteries or otherwise, two cents and a half per pound.

In other words, he ruled that there was no duty on tin-plate, unless it was galvanized. Now, to galvanize a tin-plate would be like pewterizing a gold watch, and the consequence of this decision was that tin-plates came into this country under another provision of the act of 1864:

Tin in sheets or plates, terne, and taggers tin, at 15 per cent. ad valorem.

So the law remained until 1875, when a specific duty of $1\frac{1}{10}$ cents per pound was put upon tin-plates. Following that, at three places in this country, certain Welshmen who had understood the business at home undertook the inauguration of the tin-plate industry, at Wellsville, in the State of Ohio, at Leachburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania, and at Demmler, also in Pennsylvania, immediately adjoining my district.

The result of this was that whereas in 1873 the best quality of tin-plates commanded $14.75 a box, after the starting of this industry by these Welshmen the best quality of tin-plates could be bought in 1878 for $6.25 a box; and whereas in 1873 the second quality of tin-plates brought $14.50 a box, in 1878 they were found upon the market at $5.18 a box. In other words, the moment British tin-plate manufacturers—and we take two-thirds of all Britain's product of tin-plates—the very moment the British tin-plate manufacturers found themselves in competition with these three infant establishments in America, that moment their prices went down, and they went down to such an extent that under the existing tariff it was found absolutely impossible to continue the industry in this country and therefore it died; so that to-day there is not a tin-plate made anywhere in the United States.

Now, if that be so, if it be a fact that there are no tin-plates made in the United States, and if it be also a fact that our revenues last year from imported tin-plates amounted to $5,706,434, I ask you gentlemen on the other side of the House upon what theory you strike down this tariff, which is tariff for revenue only, purely so, a tariff laid upon the theory on which you say our tariff bills ought to be constructed and maintained?

Now I go a step farther. I understand it to be one of your maxims also that raw materials should come in free, or at least that if we have a tariff duty it should be so regulated as to put a lower duty upon the lower grade of article and higher duties as you go up toward the finished product. I understand also that the bill we are discussing is a bill to simplify and reduce inequalities in the existing tariff. I beg now to call your attention to some of the existing inequalities, and then to point out how it is that instead of getting rid of them by this bill you propose to exaggerate them.

Under the present tariff the duties upon sheet-iron vary from 1.1 to 1.5 cents a pound, according to the gauge of the iron. But according to the present tariff sheet-steel comes in at 45 per cent. ad valorem. This, I am told by a gentleman who has made the calculation, is equivalent to sixty-three one-hundredths of a cent per pound duty. So that you will observe thus far that sheet-iron, which is a much less finished and less valuable product than sheet-steel, comes in at from 1.1 cents to 1.5 cents a pound, while the sheet-steel comes in at sixty-three one-hundredths of a cent a pound, and taggers iron, which is the very highest, the best finished kind of sheet-iron, comes in at 30 per cent. ad valorem, or seven-tenths of a cent per pound; and tin-plates, which are the acme of the whole business, which represent more skill, more labor, more cost than even a steel rail, come in at 1 cent a pound.

What do you propose now to do? You propose by your present bill that sheet-iron shall still pay from one cent and a tenth to $1\frac{1}{4}$ cents a pound; that steel shall still pay its present duty; that taggers iron shall still pay its present duty, and that this highly-finished product, tin-plate, shall come in free.

I ask you, gentlemen, upon what theory or by what reason you can justify an exaggeration in that way of the existing inequality of the tariff? The necessary result of the exaggeration of which I speak will be apparent to any thinking man in a moment. It must necessarily be to destroy all the industries in this country with which tin-plate may be brought into competition.

If, as is the fact, the sheet-iron industry of this country has languished because taggers iron and tin and terne plates could be brought in at 1 cent a pound specific duty, I ask you to tell me what shall become of that industry when tin-plate shall come in for nothing? On this point I call your attention to some figures. The importations under the present conditions for 1887 were as follows: Sheet-iron and steel (except galvanized), 25,094,096 pounds; taggers iron, black, 6,241,437 pounds; taggers iron, pickled or charred, 495,021 pounds; tin and terne plates and taggers iron, 570,643,389 pounds.

I repeat my question: if that was the situation under the present tariff, what will be the situation under a tariff which admits free of duty tin-plates, the highest finished product?

These tin-plates, I ought to say, can be used and are used for roofing, siding, stovepipes, coal-hods, pans, powder-kegs, gasoline oil-stove ovens, ash-pans, tea-trays, and innumerable other articles which are to be found in the market.

In this same connection let me call attention to a letter published in the Chicago Journal of Commerce:

WHY TIN-PLATE SHOULD NOT BE PLACED ON THE FREE-LIST.

Mr. Wilkins Trick writes to the Chicago Journal of Commerce a very interesting letter showing how seriously the manufacture of ordinary black sheet-iron and sheet-steel would be injured if tin-plates should be placed on the free-list. He says:

"If our makers can not now successfully compete with the importation of foreign sheets, how are they likely to hold their own when confronted with tin-plates at even a lesser price and which may be used for the various purposes to which black sheets are at present applied? There is another factor in the affair that is worthy of reiteration, so that it may not be lost sight of, and that is, the opening which will be afforded by the entry of free tin-plates for obtaining black sheets of the finest grade for uses to which tin-plates may not be so well adapted.

"This can be done simply by the importation of sheets of any sizes required, covered with a film of tin or terne mixture, applied in the roughest manner, costing but a few cents a pound, and which can be readily removed, the labor of so doing being recouped in the value of the metal recovered, so that, with free tin-plates, we may get black sheets of the finest grade revived at the cost of such tin plate, or at $3\frac{2}{5}$ cents per pound."

Or, as I was told to-day by a gentleman thoroughly familiar with the business, at a cost of 3 cents a pound.

"Further, sheets may be coated in their rough condition from the mills, only requiring to be pickled to receive the diaphanous covering of metal for conversion into malafide tin or terne plate, for the purpose of a free duty; and, consequently, such may be purchased at a much cheaper rate than plates which have undergone the processes of cold rolling and annealing. These coated sheets, upon transmutation into black sheets, can therefore be placed upon the market in usurpation of the commoner grades of home-made products."

Mr. W. C. Cronemeyer, chairman of the United States Iron and Tin Plate Company, at Demmler, Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, in a recent interview adds his testimony on the same subject, as follows:

"If the tariff bill as now submitted by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, with tin and terne plates, or rather with iron or steel sheets or plates or taggers iron coated with tin or lead, should become a law, it would mean the almost total suspension of the entire light sheet-iron industry, for no sheet-iron manufacturer in this country could any longer afford to pay the wages to sheet-mill workers which are now being paid. The rates would have to be reduced at least 50 per cent., and that such reduction could not be effected without serious labor troubles, strikes, etc., is evident. Imported tin and terne plates have all along been the keenest competitors of fine sheet-iron, and, while the yearly importations of tin-plates have almost been doubled during the last ten years, the home production of sheet-iron has not increased more than 20 per cent. Such has been the case under and on account of the anomalous provision of the present law, which admits sheet-iron in the most advanced stage of manufacture at very much less duty than the article from which it is made.

"In our American sheet mills the workmen are paid $1 for about every shilling or mark that workmen get for the same class of work in England or Germany; in Belgium the workmen get still less, and, in consequence, the manufacturers on the other side of the water could finish the sheet-iron into tin-plate and still sell it with profit at less price than would cover our cost of production on sheet-iron. I believe that 50 per cent. of the sheet-iron which is now used could be substituted by sheets coated with tin or lead, and probably more than that."

I do not propose to enlarge further upon this branch of the subject. I state as my first proposition that the introduction of tin-plates free means destruction of the sheet-iron industries of the country. I say in the next place that putting tin-plates on the free-list renders impossible the creation of an industry which belongs naturally to this country, and in the inauguration and development of which American capital and labor might receive immense advantages. We have the iron ore; we have the coal; we have the limestone. Or, to start with, we have the sheets. So far as tin is concerned we are in a better condition to-day than England. England makes all the tin-plates of the world, or nearly all; yet she imports the larger part—two-thirds, I believe—of her tin. If we were in exactly the same situation as England, we could, of course, meet her upon common ground as to everything except one—labor. But we are in a much better situation, so far as this industry is concerned, than England, for the reason that we have the tin. I read from a "Treatise upon the Tin-Plate Manufacture in the United States," by John Jarrett, secretary of the American Tinned-Plate Association.

Mr. Jarrett says:

But a very important question just here is the fact that tin ore is known to exist in this country. We do not know that any mines have as yet been developed. The mere discovery of tin, however, in paying quantities will add new interest to the tin-plate question. The reports, if accurate, show the tin ore discovered to be exceedingly rich and much more valuable than the English and Australian ores. The Cornwall tin ore of England yields about 2½ per cent. of metallic tin. According to the testimony of E. N. Robinson, E. E., the tin ore of the Cajalco mines, in California, has yielded as high as 13 per cent. of metallic tin. The prospectus of the Virginia Tin Mining and Manufacturing Company shows that tin ore abounds very extensively in Rockbridge County, Virginia. The character of the ore is very rich, being from 14 to 65 per cent. metallic tin. These samples of the ore were assayed and analyzed by Professor Frank A. Massie, of the University of Virginia, Professor A. S. McCreath and Franklin Platt, of the Pennsylvania Geological Survey, and Professor H. D. Campbell, of Washington and Lee University, Virginia.

Another very important discovery of tin ore is that of the Black Hills, Dak. This ore, upon analysis, has yielded from 3 to 4 per cent. metallic tin. Professor William P. Blake says that there are now three well-defined districts of tin-bearing lodes in the Dakota portion of the Black Hills:

1. On the east side of the Harney range, at the Etta, Ingerson, Monarch, Peerless, and other claims.

2. Near the summit of Bismark's rancho, where cassiterite occurs in several narrow veins of quartz.

3. At Hill City, on the western side of the Harney range, where there are both granitic veins and quartz veins bearing tin ore.

To these we may add mention of a tin district in the Wyoming portion of the Black Hills, about 20 miles west of Deadwood, where a considerable amount of stream tin has been washed out of the bed of Sand Creek, and the discovery of the ore in places in granitic veins is reported.

These reports are certainly interesting, and would indicate that we are about developing another great resource, and adding a valuable and important industry to those already existing. It is sincerely to be hoped that such may be the case, but well to remember that it is not essential that tin-mining should be fully developed before the tin-plate industry can be established here. The development of tin-mining in this country will depend principally upon the establishment of the tin-plate industry here.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has made an admission which I think is fatal to his argument. He admits that there is not a pound of tin-plate made in the United States, and that it all has to be imported. The only argument he has made for a duty on tin-plate is that by increasing the present rate of duty we might make our own tin-plates. That is the substance of his argument.

Now, when we undertake to revise the rates on an article made here we have a clamor from the gentleman from Pennsylvania and those associated with him against the reduction of the rates of duty, because it will interfere with American labor; and when we undertake to take off the duty on an article not made here, and which does not interfere with American labor, he rushes with equal zeal and equal pertinacity to the rescue and says the duty should not be reduced because it is a revenue article! [Laughter and applause.]

It is proposed we shall be placed on one or the other horn of the dilemma all the time; when we produce an article then it will injure American labor to take off the duty, and when the article is not produced here we are met with the statement it is a revenue article. Tin-plate is a revenue article; I admit that to be true. It has produced a revenue of $5,706,733 during the last year, and a sufficient answer to the whole argument the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made is that the Government does not need the money, and it does not injure a single American laborer to take off the duty.

It not only does not injure the American laborer, but benefits every one of them. How universal is the use of tin-plates? Every man who covers his house with a tin roof; every man who has a cooking-stove, with the vessels and appurtenances belonging to it; every man who buys a single article of canned goods, whether meat, fish, vegetables, or whatever it may be, is benefited by the proposed legislation. When you reduce this tax you reduce the cost of the article to the purchaser. There is not a man living in any corner of the country who will not be benefited by it.

One reason given by the gentleman why we should not reduce this duty is that it will induce people thereby to use tin-plate when they might otherwise be compelled to use sheet-iron. It is in effect that we are to keep up a high rate of duty—ay, increase the present rate—to force our people to use products not as well adapted to their uses as those they are now consuming.

But I wish to say another thing. On the tin used in canned goods exported a drawback is allowed. It is paid to those who use tin-plate in canning and for other purposes. Last year it reached $1,108,822.

Mr. RANDALL. Why do you not mention that the Standard Oil Company is a consumer and exporter of tin-plates?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not know what is the fact, but I presume it is as the gentleman states it. It is a fact that the rebate last year was $1,108,822. If you double the duty you would double the amount of rebate paid to the Standard Oil people.

Sir, is it not just to the laboring man, whose interest gentlemen on the other side are always pretending to clamor for, to provide for the removal of this duty on tin-plate, so he too may be benefited thereby?

To-day by reason of this tax and the rebate given on exported goods the American manufacturer charges the American consumer more for the tin vessel incasing his canned goods than he charges the British subject. Is this the kind of justice you propose to give the American citizen? Is this the protection you give the American laborer? Why not meet this issue like men, and say, as we do not need the tax we will not wrest it from the people?

Sir, if you do not reduce the surplus by repealing this tax, what will you repeal. Do you propose to make no reduction? Give no relief? That is too trifling a suggestion for this grave situation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] was unfortunate in answering my colleague [Mr. DALZELL]. My colleague showed that when the duty was 2½ cents a pound upon this article of tin-plate, the industry flourished and the price was brought down from $12 to $5 a box.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is it now?

Mr. RANDALL. We are at the mercy of the British producer.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman said they could not attempt to make it at the present rate of duty.

Mr. BAYNE. If you will extend my time I will yield to the gentleman for whatever question he desires to ask me.

Now, if the rate of duty be put up to the figure indicated by my colleague, we shall be able to manufacture all the tin-plates that are wanted in this country, and they will be sold at a cheaper rate than they are to-day.

I wish, however, to call attention to another fact. We have heard attack after attack upon "trusts." That side of the House seems to have a terrible horror of "trusts" except when they are foreign "trusts." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

A MEMBER. Yes, because they are foreign trusts.

Mr. BAYNE. Except the foreign trusts, yes. Now, the biggest trust in this country to-day is the Standard Oil trust——

Mr. MCMILLIN rose.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, just let me proceed. If you will extend my time I shall submit to any number of interruptions.

I say the biggest trust, the leading trust in this country, and the one that has endured the longest, is the Standard Oil trust, and the next biggest is the sugar trust. These are the two immense trusts. On the theory of gentlemen on the other side they protect the sugar trust, because they keep the duty on sugar up to the equivalent of 68 per cent. ad valorem. Now, these antagonists of trusts propose to emancipate the Standard Oil trust from the only obligation it is under to pay a tax by relieving it from the duties it is obliged to pay on the tin-plate it uses.

Mr. MCMILLIN. It gets the rebate on its tin.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, it gets a rebate of $800,000 out of the $1,180,000 of total rebate that is paid on tin-plates.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But it gets it right now and under the present law.

Mr. BAYNE. Of course it does on the tin-plate it buys and exports; that is just what I say; but you propose to give it the benefit of the 10 per cent. now retained by the Government, and take away the burden imposed upon it of paying anything into the Treasury of the Government at all. If it gets a rebate of $800,000 it is still out of pocket $80,000 by the retention of the 10 per cent. by the Government. The tin-plate which it buys and does not export it pays the full duty on. What proportion that is I am unable to say, but it is doubtless a considerable proportion. This is the only tax the Standard Oil trust pays, and now you propose to relieve it from the payment of that.

Why, gentlemen, in view of these facts, should you denounce trusts? Why assail trusts on that side of the House with such vigor, when by the very action of your own committee and by the very wording of your own bill you promote and help these trusts? You maintain the sugar trust upon a firm foundation, according to your line of argument, and give it all the assistance it requires, and then you go further and relieve the Standard Oil trust from the payment of the tax which it pays now into the Treasury of the United States.

Gentlemen have told us of the tin that is used for preserved fruits and other things that are canned. These are insignificant, so far as exports are concerned, when compared with the tin used by the Standard Oil trust.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I hope that by unanimous consent the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAYNE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said that out of the $1,180,000 of rebates paid, the Standard Oil Company gets about $800,000 of it, and the canned-fruit men and others who export their products to foreign countries in tin packages get about $300,000. If you put a duty of $2\frac{2}{10}$ cents a pound on tin-plates you will enable the people of this country to produce all we want, and you will get it lower, in my judgment, than you do now.

Mr. RYAN. Can the gentleman give the value of our own consumption of tin?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not know the exact value, but it is immense. We had, some years ago, an establishment at McKeesport and one at Leechburgh, in Pennsylvania, and one in Missouri, and perhaps one at another point. All are now gone.

Now, you propose not only to eliminate out of our system the possibility of manufacturing tin-plates in this country, but you go even farther than that. You propose to admit them free and put them into competition with all other classes of sheet-iron. Do gentlemen of the committee know what they are dealing with? What is tin-plate? Why, only about 5 per cent. of it is tin, and that percentage runs down even as low as 2 per cent. Under that provision of your bill, which does not designate the dimensions of the sheet, its weight or its thickness, or anything else, all the sheet-iron that comes into this country can be dipped in lead, or lead tinctured with a little tin, if you please, and then, under this bill, it will come in free.

You do not know, gentlemen, what you are doing. I am satisfied of that fact. That simple process would be possible with all the sheet-iron imported into this country, and the cost could probably be made so trifling that it would not compare with the duties now levied on sheet-iron and on sheet-steel. How easy it would be to take all the sheet-iron of every form or in any form and dip it into a conglomerate of tin and lead.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Oil and lead.

Mr. BAYNE. And then bring it into this country, and thus escape duty under your bill? You open up that door to the foreign importers to send their materials into this country free of duty. You do it unconsciously I am satisfied. Unconsciously, because you do not understand the question, and you would not take the advice of those gentlemen who were informed upon the subject. I say to you, gentlemen, it is time to call a halt. It is time to stop and consider what you are doing before passing a bill, and especially under a limitation of debate, which involves possibilities so dangerous to the industries of the country, and even dangerous to the very revenues of the Government; and I propose now, before I take my seat, to withdraw the pro forma amendment, and move a further amendment, to add, in line 48, "two and two-tenths cents per pound," fixing that as the duty on tin-plate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How much tribute does that give to the Standard Oil Company?

Mr. BAYNE. Under the present arrangement I presume it would about double it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But you were complaining a moment ago of the amount that was given to them.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes, complaining of the amount that your bill would give them.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But you now admit that your proposition would double that tribute.

Mr. BAYNE. Not at all. It would not give them a dollar, and why? Because if that duty was imposed, then with manufacture of tin in this country no drawback would be allowed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That would be just shifting the drawback from them and giving it to the manufacturer.

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir; that would transfer it to the manufacturers of this country, and through them to the workingmen of this country, and give employment to ten to fifteen thousand men who would be glad to get work.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania again state his amendment?

Mr. BAYNE. In line 48 to insert "two and two-tenths cents per pound" as the duty upon the articles mentioned in the paragraph.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this question of tin-plate materially affects my district. I represent here, sir, an oil-producing district; and if removing the duty from tin-plate will relieve my people of undue taxation I feel justified in advocating such a reduction. The gentlemen on the other side of the House have been endeavoring to convince us that tin-plate is sheet-iron; that tin-plate as a commodity in the commercial world has no existence; it is not known to the trade; that it is nothing more than sheet-iron.

Mr. DALZELL. Nobody said that on this side of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. Please sit down and let me have my time. You were not interfered with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects to interruption.

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir; I object to interruption.

The whole line of argument has been that tin-plate was not tin-plate; that it had no existence. But let us understand the true inwardness of the efforts of the gentlemen on the other side of the House. There is a notorious character in this country named John Jarrett. He was at one time the head of the Amalgamated Association of Steel and Iron Workers of this country, and he was by that association driven out of that association. He then went into the city of Pittsburgh and started a little tin-plate manufacturing establishment, or became identified with it. As a part of his labors in the interest of the Republican party from the day he became identified with this bantling in the city of Pittsburgh this cry of protection to tin-plate has gone forth. There is the true inwardness of the efforts of the gentlemen on the other side to put a duty of a hundred per cent. on tin-plate, taxing every oil-producer in Western Pennsylvania. The gentlemen on the other side can not pretend to claim that the Standard Oil Company, and the Standard Oil Company alone, represents the product of oil in the State of Pennsylvania. The Standard Oil Company does not produce 5 per cent. and is not interested in 5 per cent. of all the oil production of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BAYNE. Will the gentleman permit me to state that I have the official papers here from the Standard Oil Company, showing the Standard Oil Company's connection with it to be $749,000?

Mr. SCOTT. I do not deny that; but there is an interest behind the Standard Oil Company of over 100,000 men, wage-workers and producers, who are interested in this question. My colleague from Pennsylvania proposes to keep this tax on them to prevent them from exporting this oil, which is to find a market abroad. I want him to go into Western Pennsylvania this fall. I would like to see him there on the stump justifying himself for putting a tax of 2½ per cent. on tin-plate. I would like to see what the producers of Western Pennsylvania would say to him.

I desire to say further that if this rebate, as he claims, is made to the Standard Oil Company, putting it on the free-list does not place them in any different position from that now occupied——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment?

Mr. BAYNE. I withdraw it in the hope that some other gentleman will renew it.

Mr. YOST. Mr. Chairman, I renew, in all good faith, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to increase the duty on tin-plates to 2.2 cents per pound.

The committee will bear me out in the statement that I have trespassed little upon its time during the consideration of this bill. As long as the theories and principles involved were under discussion I was content to be an attentive listener, well knowing that others far more capable would ably deal with the subject in all its varied phases. When it comes down, however, to the details; when it comes down to actual dollars and cents, and when I see an onslaught attempted upon the interest in which the constituency I have the honor to represent is most deeply concerned, I feel that I can not longer sit silently by and permit, without a protest, the enactment of a law which would take tens of millions of dollars from the South and prove an affective, though possibly not an effectual, impediment to the prosperity and upbuilding of a section that is just beginning to awake from the lethargy of generations.

It seems to me a singular anomaly that the people whose future well-being is so directly involved in the maintenance of a protective tariff—whose industries are all in the "infant" stages—are, with very rare exceptions, represented on this floor by gentlemen who, wittingly or unwittingly, are doing all in their power to perpetuate poverty in the South and remand her to her old condition of tribute-bearer to the North and East.

During this discussion the voice of the Southern Representatives, with one or two notable exceptions, has been raised against what I conceive to be the dearest interests of the Southern people. I could understand this demand for reduction or abolition of duties if it came from the North or the East, for it seems to me that the scepter of trade, now so vigorously contended for by the young giant of the South, may pass from the hand that has so long swayed it.

All of my life I have listened to Democratic orators in my own State inveighing against a system which they claimed made the Southern people pay an enormous annual tribute to the manufacturers of the North. If such a day there ever was, that day has passed.

To-day the new South is rearing her proud head and demanding recognition of her claim for a place in the list of manufacturing communities. And that claim will be recognized if the policy which has made the nation great shall continue to bless the land. It seems to me an inopportune moment for Southern Representatives to be advocating a change. Just as we are preparing to contend for industrial supremacy; just as we are about to demand a tithe of the great tribute we have paid; just at the time the tables are turning and Northern enterprise and capital are seeking to plant their converters in the midst of our vast fields of raw materials; just as we stand on the summit of Pisgah and see the land of promise spread out before us, just at this time Southern Representatives on this floor are working might and main to turn the tide of prosperity back to its original channel, or, ten thousand times worse, away from this nation altogether.

I do not feel at liberty to speak for other States, but I do maintain that in Virginia the sentiment is overwhelmingly against the changes proposed in this bill—especially as to the item we are now considering. Instead of placing tin-plates on the free-list, instead of abolishing the duty on "mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought," our people want an increase of those duties. Instead of wool on the free-list they want a restoration of the tariff of 1867. Instead of abolishing the duty on the products of their fields, their gardens, and their forests, they want those products protected and made to yield their fullest return.

I know, Mr. Chairman, in making this assertion I combat the views of my colleagues on the other side of the Chamber who have spoken upon this question. Yet I nevertheless maintain the truth of the statement I make. So far as the Republicans of Virginia are concerned, they are solidly against this bill. I will let the Democrats speak for themselves. In August last one of the largest representative conventions of the Democratic party ever held in Virginia met at Roanoke. There were no candidates to be nominated; no State officers to be elected. The convention was held simply and solely for the purpose of announcing Democratic faith and letting the world know where the Democracy of Virginia stood, there having arisen in the mind of the public grave doubt as to that position. The convention was composed of gentlemen selected for no other purpose than to promulgate the party creed. That was their sole mission; there the boundary of their duty.

After due deliberation a series of resolutions were unanimously adopted, the most important revenue feature of which was—

We demand the immediate repeal of the internal-revenue system, a relic of the war and no longer necessary to meet the demands of the Government, because it is oppressive, fosters monopolies, and is obnoxious to the interests of our people.

If that imperative demand were met, it would render impossible any curtailment of receipts from imports, for the internal-revenue collections exceed the annual surplus by 50 per cent. Aye, if the Democratic members of this House would only go half as far as the united Democracy of Virginia demanded they should go, the problem of the surplus would be solved.

But there was another resolution to which special emphasis was given. It was this:

Resolved, That the Democratic party will foster, encourage, and protect the agricultural interests of Virginia, believing that the success of that interest is the foundation of the State's prosperity.

Protect the farmer! Protect him by robbing him of an annual market of $60,000,000 by the transfer of farm products to the free-list, and retaining a "system obnoxious to the people!" Protect him by abolishing his home market and converting tens of thousands of consumers into so many competitors! Protect him by destroying his flocks, rendering valueless his timber, and condemning to eternal slumber the rich mineral deposits that underlie his soil! That is the feast of protection to which the farmers of Virginia and the farmers of the nation are invited.

But, sir, to come to the immediate question under discussion—the transfer of tin-plates to the free-list. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] wants to know how labor is to be affected. I think I can show him. During the year 1887 we imported from Great Britain 268,364 tons of tin-plate, or about 75 per cent. of the whole British export of that article. Do the members of this House realize what that simple statement means? It means, and I use the estimates of an expert, the digging out of 705,092 tons of iron ore, the quarrying of 536,728 tons of limestone, and the mining of 736,230 tons of coal to be converted into coke. These materials were consumed in the production of 386,445 tons of pig metal. This pig metal under the basic process was converted into 328,476 tons of basic ingots. These ingots, in turn, were rolled into blooms and sheets and bars, which, with the tin and lead used, made the 268,364 tons of tin-plate. Here, then, were nearly 2,000,000 tons of raw material, every ton of which could have been and should have been produced in this country. Besides this, our furnaces lost a trade of 386,445 tons of pig-iron, an amount equal to the output of ten 100-ton furnaces in full blast from January to January, while 328,476 tons of basic ingots were made in Europe instead of in America. But that does not represent one-half of the loss to the people at large. The railroads lost the freight on over 2,000,000 tons of material; the working people of this country lost over $15,000,000 in wages, which meant $1.50 per day taken from 33,333 Americans for 300 days of the year.

That would have given every man in the district I represent $1.50 for every working day of the year. But that is not all. The farmer and merchant lost the trade which that $15,000,000 would have given them, and so on through the whole circuit of benefits the money would have conferred.

But it may be claimed that we can not produce these tin-plates. I deny it. Upon the authority of practical men who have given thought and study to the subject, it is asserted that the South is offering to-day a fair field for the manufacture of this material. It has been charged that our Southern ores are too high in phosphorus to be used in the manufacture of Bessemer steel. I deny that also, and propose to prove later on in the discussion of this bill that Bessemer ores of the finest quality and in vast quantity are found in Virginia, North Carolina, and various States of the South. No one doubts, however, that our section possesses millions upon millions of tons of phosphoritic ores suitable to the production of steel under the basic process, and all of the tin-plate made in the world is now made from mild basic steel.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. YOST. We can produce every pound of material which enters into the manufacture of tin-plate, even down to the tin. In my district alone a large deposit of tin of fine quality is now being developed. That it exists in quantity there can be little doubt. The geological condition in which it occurs extends for miles, and the surface indications point to the probability of rich and extensive deposits.

If I were asked what, above all else, the South needs, I should reply: Basic-steel plants and a market for their product. We not only have all of the material that enters into the production of this metal; we not only have tens of thousands of idle hands eager to grasp the pick, but we need this particular industry for a double purpose. We want it to utilize our raw materials and we want it to fertilize our worn-out lands. Under the basic process the phosphorus is eliminated from the metal and converted into basic phosphate, which for fertilizing purposes is worth over $26 per ton.

It is time we were looking to the future of our fields. Year after year the South is drained of millions of dollars to meet the drafts of Northern fertilizer establishments. In many instances they send us the tailings of a conveniently located sand-bank; but despite the frauds practiced upon us we repeat the same stupidity year after year, for the simple reason that we have gotten into the habit of doing it. But it is time we were getting out of that habit; it is time we were utilizing the gifts of a bountiful Providence and proving to the world that we are worthy of such an inheritance. And here and now is a good time to make a start. Instead of putting tin-plates on the free-list, increase the duty to 2.2 cents per pound and give the South a chance.

It will mean a trade of $30,000,000 per annum thrown into the South for the next five years, and after that time you may take off the duty if you will, for the world can not touch us then. And this will be a trade not transferred from one section of the Union to another, but an absolute gain to the South and to the whole country, for it will be the introduction of a new element of wealth and prosperity. We shall not have Northern plants to compete with, for Northern skill and capital realize the inducements which our section offers for this particular manufacture and will be eager to take advantage of the opening. We welcome them to our midst, for we know that with them come profitable employment for labor, a home market for our farmers, and money and activity and life to all classes.

Gentlemen of the South, as the humblest among you, let me beg you to pause for a moment and consider the welfare of the people who sent us here. The day has passed when the South can afford to be content with theories, however eloquently they may be presented. She stands to-day naked in her poverty; not asking alms but asking simple justice. She has paid her tribute to the North. She has made rich that favored section, and now she asks that the same policy may be continued while she exacts her tribute in return. [Applause.]

And who refuses to recognize the justice of her demand? Not the men on this side of the Chamber. With one acclaim they welcome her to her new estate. Can those she has honored, to whom she has given her high places and to whose keeping she has confided her interests—can they afford to step athwart the pathway of her progress and stay her onward stride? [Applause.]

Deny it if you will, disguise it as you may, I know and you know that old things are passing away in the South, and that the new South—that South which no longer lives on sentiment; that South which is practical and is looking forward to a future big with material prosperity—is not the mere vision of an enthusiast, but is a living entity. To-day she is demanding her rights and will be satisfied with nothing less. She can get them if the men who stand as her representatives on this floor will do their simple duty. If they fail to do it, then I warn them that a day of reckoning will come. No member of this House could have been elected from Virginia had he made his canvass on the basis of the Mills bill, and, if the people are true to themselves, no member will be elected to the next Congress on any such platform.

At length and at last the intelligent business people—the men who work with their hands and work with their heads—are recognizing the fact that the future of the South is linked with industrial progress.

They see that the upbuilding of their section, the development of its wondrous latent wealth, the utilization of its splendid water-power that now runs useless to the sea, and the prosperity of all of its people is dependent upon the maintenance of a protective tariff. They see material benefits, home comforts, a richer return for their labor, and a grander destiny for their section, on the one hand; whilst on the other are the crumbling idols of a day that is gone, the reckless clinging to a name, the senseless bondage of passion and prejudice, the promises that have been broken, the faith unkept, the want and poverty and humiliation that have been the price she has paid for the advocacy of a theory that ought to have been buried ere the smoke had fairly cleared from the field of Appomattox. With the emancipation of the last slave should have disappeared the dream of free trade in the South, for the slavery of purchase, or the slavery of penury, and free trade are Siamese twins. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, in order that it may be renewed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the statement which I made in regard to the proposition advanced by the gentleman on the other side has been practically repeated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], who has just taken his seat; but he has mixed sheet-iron and tin-plate in such a way that you can not exactly tell what he is trying to get at. He puts forth the proposition that if we put tin-plate upon the free-list it is going to destroy the sheet-iron industry in this country. I understand that to be the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes; in other words——

Mr. SCOTT. That is what you said.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Let me correct my friend, for of course he does not wish to proceed upon a misunderstanding. I said that the particular industry—roofing and siding, using this particular kind of sheet-iron—would be absolutely crushed and destroyed by the removal of the duty on tin-plate.

Mr. SCOTT. Now, the gentleman has made the proposition that if tin-plate be put upon the free-list the sheet-iron industries of this country are going to be destroyed.

Mr. Chairman, for the past twenty-five years we have had high duties on tin-plate, and I state here that there are not one thousand wage-workers employed in this country to-day in producing tin-plate.

Mr. BAYNE. Not the half of that number.

Mr. SCOTT. I have put it at one thousand.

Mr. BAYNE. There is not one.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well. Now, what do you propose to do? To what uses is tin applied? Is it used for canning fruits, vegetables, condensed milk, fish, and other products, both for exportation and home consumption of these articles, and largely for roofing purposes, but not for siding? Is it not the wage-worker's silver? Can any man, poor or rich, in this country escape its use? Is there a dairy farmer or a milk-maid who does not require tin pails and all the tin utensils used in carrying on the dairy industry of the country? And, sir, what is the cost of the tin-ware to the farming interests of this country, to those farmers who are engaged in producing cheese, milk, and butter? The duty the gentleman proposes will add largely to the cost of the tin-ware to the farming class of the country, a class that suffers to a greater extent from tariff laws than any other, and who receive no relief from anything you can give them in the way of protection. He proposes to tax every farmer of this country for what he can not escape the use of, which is tin in all the vessels of his kitchen or upon his farm and in all the various industries in which the farming class is engaged. The average price received by the dairy farmer for his milk will not exceed 1½ to 2 cents per quart, and the tin-ware necessarily used upon a dairy farm is no inconsiderable portion of the expense of such farm.

Is there justice, sir; is there equity in any party pursuing a policy to build up one industry by taxing 60,000,000 people under the plea of protecting home industry when there is not a wage-worker to-day engaged in that industry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. I will ask for an extension of my time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move, by unanimous consent, the gentleman be allowed to proceed for another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. Gentlemen on the other side of the House tell us that if we take off this duty nobody will be benefited by it; that if we take off the tax of $6,000,000 the Government is now collecting yearly on tin-plate, and which money it does not need, tin-plates will advance instead of fall in price. Sir, such a proposition to a man of ordinary intelligence is not worthy of consideration. There is a law that the cheaper the cost the cheaper the article will sell for.

The argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], that if you take $6,000,000 of tax off of these people the $6,000,000 would go into the pockets of the middlemen, and the farmers and consumers would not be benefited by it, is too illogical for discussion. Let us have a chance to see whether the price will be reduced if the tax is removed; and if the price of tin-plate is advanced to the consumer by taking off the tax of $6,000,000 of duty now collected on it, then it will be an easy matter for those who come after us here to put the duty back again.

The argument of the gentleman on the other side that the removal of the duty from tin-plate is going to affect the price of sheet-iron in this country is not so. If it were going to affect the price of sheet-iron it would have affected it already. The removal of these taxes will no more affect sheet-iron wage-workers in this country than the removal of the duty on salt would affect the workers in sheet-iron industries of the country.

I say, Mr. Chairman, it is nothing more than justice to the great farming class and the wage-workers of the country that this tax should be removed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under a promise to recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR].

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a matter of little moment what the motive of John Jarrett may be in this connection, or what the interest of the Standard Oil Company may be—that stupendous "trust" which has done so much injury to the American consumers. The question is a broader and deeper one, in my judgment, than as to how far individuals or corporations are concerned. The broad and deep question in this connection is, can we produce these tin-plates in the United States for the supply of which we have now to depend upon Great Britain? I know we can, because we have in part done it, and we can do it again with proper protective duties in behalf of our own labor; and the gentlemen who discuss this matter away from its connection with labor belittle it. Tin-plates can be produced in this country and will be produced here. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] on the other side of the House has given all the facts in that relation.

How does it affect the producing interests of the country? Does it affect the labor of the country—the wage-earner? To-day there are coming to the United States $17,000,000 in value of tin-plates. If those tin-plates were produced in this country twenty-four thousand people here could be employed in this industry. The labor in Great Britain and Wales required to produce the tin-plates we consume amounts, I am advised, to $9,000,000, and it is only fair to conclude if we produced those tin-plates in this country the laborers engaged in that work would receive from it some ten or twelve millions of dollars.

It is my judgment that the price of these tin-plates, within twelve months, would follow the course of every other product that has been carefully considered in making up tariff legislation, and that there would be no increase whatever at the end of that period above the present price of tin-plates in this country, that industry being remitted to the law of competition and to the law of supply and demand. But the 1-cent duty, I admit, is revenue only, and a superficial examination of this question would encourage the taking off of that duty; but when you view it in the broader light of its effects on American production then I say we should make the effort to let the wage-earners of the United States produce that which they can produce, and derive the benefit which they would derive from this vast amount of money which is annually sent abroad.

How far-reaching is this whole matter! It has relation to an enormous production of iron ore, of limestone, coal, coke, pig-iron, and every article connected with its production, and why should not all these be encouraged and produced in the United States? I think $17,000,000 a year is too much money to go out of this country when the people of the United States, without harm to the consumer, in my judgment, and without ultimately enhancing the price of these commodities, can produce the very articles themselves. We have within six years contributed $100,000,000 to England, and have drained our country to that extent.

I hope this matter will be considered on broad business principles and without prejudice. Twenty per cent., I judge, of the tin-plates consumed in the United States is used by the Standard Oil Company, that is, as far as I can learn, and I do not believe the Standard Oil Company would in the end be injured or put to one dollar of expense beyond the present rates; because, while they would get no drawbacks, of course, on the other hand they would have no duty to pay on the tin-plates. They would get the American article instead of the British, ultimately, at about the same price.

I am not disposed to give this interest or this advantage to a foreign country in preference to my own. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as withdrawn.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I renew the pro forma amendment.

We can produce tin-plate in America, and we can grow pine-apples in Maine; but, sir, it is not in the interest of the people of this country to engage in either industry, for they can procure the commodities more cheaply by legitimate exchange.

Sixteen millions of dollars is a large amount of money to pay out for a commodity, and $5,000,000 is a large amount of tax for the people to pay into the public Treasury. But, sir, I consider that it is a hardship indeed to add iniquity to a burden by adoptinga policy that would turn that current of expenditure from the public Treasury into the pockets of a few subsidized citizens of this country.

Mr. Chairman, we now pay a drawback to those who export the commodity once imported, and it is neither a hardship nor a burden upon them; but when and how and where has any tribute or any exaction been escaped by the great body of the consumers of this country?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, we cannot hear the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. You seek to put it into the pockets of the few men who are to be subsidized in violation of the spirit of liberty and at the cost of the great body of the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Sir, where an industry has been established there may be pleaded in its behalf an equity, but there is no principle of equity, reason, or good policy which can justify an attempt to extend and to start afresh the system which subsidizes the few at the expense and in violation of the rights of the great body of the people.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a communication that represents the other side of this question from that presented by gentlemen who favor the principle of protection. It is one of those petitions that constitute a part of the archives of the Committee on Ways and Means, and which was not brought out by gentlemen on the other side. I think it fairly represents the sentiments and portrays the interests of the country in regard to this question, and I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Who is the author of it?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The name will be given.

Mr. BAYNE. John Dunlap?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman will see. It was referred by the President to the Secretary of the Treasury and by him to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUFFALO, N. Y., December 13, 1887.

Mr. PRESIDENT: Your message I have read with interest and heartily indorse the points you make therein, and as a loyal citizen and a Republican, I thank you for the good government you are giving us and our country. The inclosed clipping is from the American Grocer and was inspired by F. B. Thurber, New York's best merchant. He voices the sentiments of very many business men who are Republicans now, and will support you for a second term. I am a manufacturer and make many thousands of boxes of tin-plates in fruit cans annually. This tin-plate pays a duty of $1.10 a box into our Treasury now, to protect nobody, as not one box is made here, or likely to be.

My business would be benefited, if anything, by an increase of duty, as I could use it as an excuse to exact twice the amount from customers. But the country at large (and the manufactures also in the end) will be helped by a repeal of the duty on tin-plate. Free tin-plate means 6 cents per dozen less on all 3-pound canned goods and about 10 cents per dozen on gallon canned goods to the consumer. Having the argument "free tin, now cheaper canned goods," the consumer will obtain it.

Tin-plate in some form (cooking utensils, dinner pails, canned foods) finds its way into every household, from the humblest to the grandest, throughout the land, and being of a short life needs constant replenishing.

Your policy is certainly acceptable and pleasing to the mass of the thinking citizens of the United States.

Pardon my taking your time. I thought you would be interested to know from one of the people how you are liked by the people for whom you are toiling.

Sincerely and respectfully,

CLARENCE M. FENTON,

Mr. GROVER CLEVELAND,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I know very well that Mr. Fenton's correspondence is pretty widespread on this question. I am very well aware also of this Erie Preserving Company, which he represents as secretary. I can also vouch for him as having been a Republican.

Mr. WEBER. How long ago?

Mr. FARQUHAR. But I can not vouch, after his writing that letter, that he is a Republican now. He is a very nice, Christian gentleman, but, like a good many of that class of Christians, he has got considerable self-interest in what he says.

First of all I take issue with Mr. Fenton in the fact that he does not furnish the same figures to the President of the United States, who is a constituent of mine, as he does to me. Mr. Fenton wrote me on March 23d that at 1 cent per pound it amounts to 5 cents per dozen on tin fruit-cans holding three pounds. In the letter he sends to Mr. Cleveland he puts it at 6 cents. Whether he is exact in his figures or not, I do not know.

I have the official figures of the association, however. I answered Mr. Fenton when I received his letter, that I did not know why, as a Representative from the Buffalo district, I should contribute to the profit side of the ledger of the Erie Preserving Company unless I knew the consumers were to receive the benefits of this cheapening of tin. From that day to this Mr. Fenton has never answered my letter, but he sent a letter with a later date and with a fresher price to the President of the United States. Now the actual cost to the consumer I am ready to give to the House. On the 1-pound can, of which they use the larger number in the Erie Preserving factory, the cost is simply 2¼ mills. Now, if any business man can tell me, figuring from a single pound up to a dozen, how he can give the benefit to the consumer at that infinitesimal rate, he will do something I am not able to do, although I am used to that class of figuring in my own business. That is certainly wind. There is no business man on this floor while I am speaking—and I will give him time to answer me—that can say that that 2¼ mills on 1-pound cans of preserves can ever be given to the consumer. It goes into the pockets of the preserving company, and it will never get out of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have listened quite patiently to this discussion and I concede on this tin-plate question that the demand of this side of the House is simply for a protective duty that will encourage and will develop that industry here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to say also that in a class of industries like the tin-plate industry, the silk industry, and even the textiles, this country, from the first protection bill that was ever passed by Congress, has followed in the exact trend of the party and the people that ask the advance on tin-plate to-day. We have built up every great industry. You may call it subsidy, you may call it subvention, you may call it bonus, but where America has lacked capital the United States Government has come forward, even if it was necessary to borrow the money, and given a helping hand to raise every industry we have in this land to-day. So it will be to the end. I want to say further that as an American citizen, as a man in favor of keeping every dollar of American money for the use of America and her workingmen, I am willing to face my district, face the two and one-tenth mill men in that district with the word "subsidy" on my shoulders, and stand up for the twelve millions of money that we pay British wage-workers, and that ought to stay in our own land to-day. When we take into account the millions of money expended in this land in prospecting, in mill machinery, in analysis, and for the advancement and development of this industry, I think it is poor policy for the Fiftieth Congress to shut out for the benefit of Europeans the development of our land, in its mines, in its works, and in its labor.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a few remarks touching what was said by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], who, I see, is about leaving.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted. The Chair will consider by unanimous consent that amendment is withdrawn and renewed by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], who is always very able, very forcible, and generally very logical, argues before this committee—I think I quote him correctly—that if tin-plate were put on the free-list it would throw out of employment those men who are engaged in manufacturing sheet-iron, so far as sheet-iron is used in roofing and siding, etc. I have forgotten the number of men he stated would be thrown out of employment.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Fifteen thousand.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. In the next sentence the gentleman said that if the tax were taken off and the article were put on the free-list it would not cheapen the article except to the middle-men.

Now, as the makers of roofs and the persons who side houses with tin are not middle-men, the gentleman's position, briefly stated, is that though the removal of the tariff from tin would not lower its price, yet it would destroy the sheet-iron industry, because sheet-iron is a component part of tin.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My friend can hardly be serious, although he looks serious. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman said, as I understood him, that except to the middle-man the removal of the tariff would not reduce the price of tin, but nevertheless he said it would destroy the industry of certain men engaged in making sheet-iron for roofing and siding.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I said that taking the duty off would reduce the price of cans only to the manufacturer. I said it would reduce the cost to him, but that to the man who consumed the contents of the can it would not reduce the price, nor would it increase the price received by the man who raised the tomatoes and the peaches and the beef which would go into the cans, because the decrease in the cost of the pound can would be only about one-eighth of a cent, and that difference, I said, would never reach the consumer on the one side nor the producer on the other.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I venture to say, with the greatest deference for my friend, that he will find that his statements were hardly as he now recollects them, and that he did say that "except to the middle-man the removal of the tariff would not reduce the price." But this is not very material as to his argument. He does not pretend to say that sheet-iron and tin as roofing material necessarily come into such competition or that the preference for or use of the one rather than the other depends on the relative lowness of price of either.

With just as much logic and reason might he say that this bill would destroy the business of slate making, or the business of shingle making, or the business of clapboard making, because these products are all used for roofing as sheet-iron is, only much more.

Sheet-iron is very seldom used for roofing or siding, and when it is so used it is not because it is cheaper than the other materials, but because it is preferred for some other reason. While the gentleman has most positively asserted that the removal of tariff from tin-plates would destroy that sheet-iron industry, he has stated no fact justifying such a conclusion. This tin-plate question has been argued here by the gentleman from New York as if it only concerned the interests of those who buy a pound can of preserved fruit. But, Mr. Chairman, that is entirely too narrow a view to take of the question. There is no house in this land so poor, there is no man so poor——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

On motion of Mr. RICE, the time of Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota, was extended for five minutes.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I say, Mr. Chairman, there is hardly a family or a person in the land, especially among the common people, not interested in this question. This fact is too familiar to every one to require illustration or proof. It is unfairly belittling the question to treat it as if it merely affected the price of pound cans of preserved fruit or meat. And I do not understand what grounds the gentleman has for his prediction or prophecy that if we lower the cost of the material by the abatement of the tariff the price to the consumer will not be lessened. It is a well-known law of trade that lessened cost to the producer means lessened cost to the consumer. If this is not so, then truly the people are at the mercy of the rings.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] who opened this question said that this is merely a revenue tariff. This is correct, for I believe it is conceded on all hands that there is not a pound of tinplate manufactured in this country. But the gentleman argued, as I understood him, that this being a revenue tariff it should not be removed.

Mr. DALZELL. I said that its removal was inconsistent with your notion and the maxims that are continually laid down by gentlemen on your side of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Permit me to say that the gentleman's position is consistent with the views of gentlemen on that side, if I understand them. If I have not listened in vain to the arguments of the gentlemen on that side of the House, their position is that the masses of the people, instead of the classes, shall pay the taxes. A protective tariff is a burden on the masses, for the benefit of certain favored classes. The poor man in this case (the tariff on tin-plate) pays just as much tax as the rich man, because he ordinarily uses as much tin-plate as the rich man, and therefore, instead of paying a tax in proportion to his wealth and his ability to pay, he is compelled to pay in proportion to his needs. I am utterly opposed to that. It is, as I say, making the masses of the people instead of the wealth of the country pay the taxes; and when we have a surplus which we are seeking to lessen, I think this is one of the taxes that should be abated.

Mr. REED. Then you are in favor of a tax on wealth direct?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am in favor of taxation on wealth. I am in favor of compelling every man to bear the burdens of the Government in proportion to his ability, and not in proportion to his necessities; and when I see the wealth of the country by one subterfuge or another escaping its just share of taxation, I am ready to say that when a proposition for an income tax is brought in, you will find me voting in favor of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I am in favor of making wealth pay its part of the taxes of the country; but the course which has been pursued on these questions of taxation has tended to remove the tax from wealth and place it on the masses; the poorer the masses, the greater proportionally the tax. I am opposed to that, and will vote for anything which tends to remedy the evil.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman explain how the masses were injured when we manufactured tin-plate in this country, and the price declined from $12 to $5? How did that affect the masses injuriously?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I have heard such arguments as that at every step of the discussion of the tariff.

Mr. BURROWS. How did that hurt the masses?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. From the time this debate began until the present, gentlemen on the other side have said, "Because something is cheaper to-day than it was ten or fifteen years ago, therefore this or that follows." I say that the conclusions gentlemen undertake to draw do not follow. For years everything has been going down; and I do not understand that the wealth of this country is entitled to the benefit of all the reductions which have been made in the cost of manufacture by reason of improved machinery and improved methods; for these are the causes that have lowered products. Products have not become lower on account of the tariff, but in spite of it.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman says everything has been going down; I would remind him that the price of labor in the United States has gone up.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am speaking of the products of labor, which, as a rule, have gone down. I am opposed to the wealth of the country claiming all the benefits to be derived from improvements in machinery and from better methods of manufacture.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman said that everything had gone down. I wanted to remind him that labor had not.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Labor has gone up as much in free-trade countries as in ours. The tariff has nothing to do with that.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly satisfied that if there were any method by which a fair consideration could be given to this question, to be followed by a fair vote, there certainly would not be ten men on this floor who would favor the proposition to put tin-plate on the free-list. It is true that no tin-plate is now made in this country, or has been made for the past ten years. Prior to that time some men who now live in my district invested a large amount of money in a plant for the manufacture of tin-plate, and entered upon that industry with a zeal that deserved success. They met with foreign competition, and the price of tin-plate was put down and down and down, until they were obliged to extinguish their fires and abandon the business, and from that day to this they have never attempted to resume. They are now engaged in the manufacture of sheet-iron and sheet-steel, and if this bill becomes a law they will be compelled to abandon their present occupation and enter some other new field.

In response to the gentleman, I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, why we can not make tin-plates in this country. I have here before me a tabulated statement showing the wages paid in Great Britain in this manufacture, and also those paid in the United States for similar work. A roller in Great Britain for rolling "100 boxes I. C. tin-plate" receives $6.87, while a roller in the United States receives for the same work $26.

The wages of a doubler in England were $5.51; in this country, $11.05. This table shows that $274.90 were paid in the United States for labor which cost in England only $122.18, a difference of 125 per cent. in favor of the American laborer. This is the reason, and the only reason, why tin-plate has not been made in this country, and why it can not be made at this time.

The table in detail is as follows:

† In this country the most of this work would be done by young men and boys.

This list of wages, you will perceive, covers only that part of labor employed from bars of iron or steel to the finished plates, and shows the American rates to be 125 per cent. higher than those of Great Britain. The difference in wages in the production of bars in each country is in about the same ratio.

We have abundance of tin in this country. There are now in the city of Chicago, in the hands of Howard, Spencer & Co., blocks of tin on exhibition—as fine tin as the world ever saw—dug from our own mines in Dakota, which could be manufactured into tin-plates in this country if the industry had adequate protection. There is tin in Wyoming and other places. We have iron ore, coal, limestone, and every facility for the manufacture of tin-plates if we had a just protection.

What is the result of this omission to protect this industry? We are now importing 70 per cent. of all the tin-plate made in Great Britain.

There are now 50,000 persons employed in England and Wales in the manufacture of tin-plates for American consumption. We are feeding and clothing this great army of men under the British flag, and I want to know whether it is patriotic for Americans to strike down an industry of this kind, which ought to furnish employment to our own people. I have certificates before me showing that the tin-plate that we made in this country was as good as any that was ever imported, but the importers of foreign tin-plate put the price down from $14.75 per box to $5.18, and in this way closed out the American works, and as soon as they had completely destroyed our tin-plate works they raised the price so as to recover their former losses.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] well said a few moments since, "We are now entirely in the hands of Great Britain." This is true, and we are entirely dependent upon Great Britain for every tin pan, every tin bucket, every tin kettle, every canteen. If we should be involved in a war with Great Britain or any other country, and if our supply of tin from abroad should be cut off, we would be without canteens and without cooking utensils until we could erect the necessary plant and entered upon the manufacture of tin-plate. What are we doing to-day? We are sending across the ocean annually from sixteen to twenty millions of dollars which go to the residents of Great Britain for the tin-plate which we use.

This amount of money is annually sent out of the country, and we are in this way enriching England and impoverishing America. This much money expended in this country in the manufacture of tin-plate would not only furnish employment for 50,000 persons and support for 300,000 persons, but it would furnish an additional home market for agricultural and manufactured products, and greatly benefit the whole country.

Gentlemen on the other side entirely forget that the effect of the measure they propose is to strike down and destroy two existing industries in our own country, both of which are important industries in my own district. In the first place, the admission of tin-plate free would utterly annihilate the roofing industry, which, as my colleague [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] has well said, is furnishing employment to 30,000 people and support to 150,000 persons.

What reason can be given for putting tin-plate on the free-list for the benefit of a man who wants a tin roof, while you refuse to make sheet-iron and sheet-steel free for the benefit of a man who wants an iron or steel roof? To show the utter absurdity of putting tin-plate on the free-list, I want to give the rates of the present tariff on other metals.

Pig-iron: Average value, $15.60 per ton; specific duty, $6.72 per ton; ad valorem, 43 per cent.

Scrap-iron: Average value, $12 per ton; specific duty, $6.72 per ton; ad valorem, 56 per cent.

Galvanized iron: Average value, f. o. b. Liverpool and Glasgow, $3.75 per 100 pounds; specific duty, $2.25 per 100 pounds; ad valorem duty, 60 per cent.

Tin and terne plates: Average value, $4.50 per 100 pounds; specific duty, $1 per 100 pounds; ad valorem duty, 22 per cent.

Roofing, siding, and common sheet-iron: Average value, $2 per 100 pounds; specific duty, $1.50 per 100 pounds; ad valorem, over 75 per cent.

Cold rolled—pickled and cleaned sheet-iron, of superior quality, which is the chief and component part of tin and terne plates: Average value, $3.50 per 100 pounds; specific duty, $1.75 per 100 pounds; ad valorem, 50 per cent.

Sheet-steel, from which tin-plates are made, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Why do you propose to leave a duty of 75 per cent. on sheet-iron and make tin-plates free?

Is there any honesty or good sense in such a proposition. If a man desires a new roof on his house, why should he not be allowed as good a chance to get a cheap iron or steel roof as to get a cheap tin roof? Is it not as necessary to furnish coal-hods, stove-pipe, bread-pans, roofing, siding, etc., cheap as it is to furnish cheap tin-ware and tin roofing? If not, why not? There is 95 to 97 per cent. of iron or steel in the tin-plate and only from 3 to 5 per cent. of tin, and it is proposed to let the iron or steel coated with tin come in free, while the iron or steel which is not coated at all is to pay a high rate of duty, or, in other words, the advanced product is to pay no duty, while the less advanced product is to pay a high duty. I am in favor of protecting every American industry, but I can not comprehend this unjust discrimination against the sheet-iron and sheet-steel industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended for another five minutes.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, it must be apparent to everybody that the removal of this duty will destroy the sheet-iron and sheet-steel roofing industry in this country. There are several of these establishments in Ohio, in Cleveland and Cincinnati and Akron, and in other parts of the State. A large amount of capital is invested in this business, and yet it is seriously proposed to discriminate against this industry by this sort of legislation. It is certainly an attempt to break down an industry by unjust discrimination.

And that is not all. It is proposed to cripple at least the manufacture of sheet-iron and sheet-steel. I hold in my hand a letter written by the Standard Iron Company, of Bridgeport, Ohio, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BRIDGEPORT, OHIO, March 16, 1888.

DEAR SIR: We are aware that we can say nothing that will be new to you as to the influence the tariff on tin-plates has on the iron-roofing business, and we only ask your attention to the effect which in our opinion it will have on the business of those who are engaged in the manufacture of sheet-iron and sheet-steel.

We think you will agree with us in the belief that free plates will utterly destroy the business of those distinctively engaged as manufacturers of iron and steel roofing, but possibly you may not know how closely allied are the interests of the sheet manufacturers. From an examination of our own books and statements made by the other mills in our vicinity, we have found that considerably over half the product of light sheets made here and in Wheeling are worked up into roofing and siding, and we have no reason for supposing that mills located elsewhere are not selling an equal proportion of their product for the same purpose. When this is considered, together with the many other uses of iron and steel sheets for which tin-plates will be substituted, by free trade in them, there can be no question, it seems to us, of the disastrous effects to sheet manufacturers, stopping at least one-half their capacity and reducing even the little business left them to a condition of woeful unprofitableness.

Free trade in all iron products would offer better prospects for the future to us than the passage of the Mills bill, for the reason that we then could look forward to a time when our labor costs would be reduced to a point where we could successfully compete with the illy-paid labor of Europe, while the selection of but a few lines of iron manufacture for the free-list makes this impossible, the products still protected fixing the value of a day's work, only influenced in proportion to the number of workmen thrown out of employment.

We do not wish to be understood as favoring free trade in all rather than in a few products, or that if manufacturers of sheets and roofing are to suffer we want lots of company. If the policy of free trade is to prevail finally, and we are to be among the first victims, we shall still hope for a postponement of the day when men will be compelled to work for a mere existence.

If it should be possible to do better than have the tariff on tin-plates kept at the present rate, it of course would be a great boon to manufacturers of sheet-iron and iron roofing, and at the same time, with the recent discoveries of rich tin ores in our country, build up an immense tin-plate industry that would quicken the business of the whole land.

Such a result of the present agitation we presume is hardly to be hoped for.

Very respectfully,

THE STANDARD IRON COMPANY.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. They are now making in my district as good sheet-iron as was ever imported. They are making it of the best grades and of the highest quality. If a duty of 2½ cents a pound were imposed upon the importation of tin-plates into the country, within ninety days the tin-plate industry would spring up in our midst, and it would not be long before all the tin-plates consumed in this country would be supplied by our own manufacturers and through the means of our own labor. We would then be able to supply for home consumption all the tin-plates necessary for kitchen utensils, for dairy purposes, for canning, or for whatever purpose tin-plates are now used.

I believe that the removal of the duty on tin-plates will have the ultimate effect of increasing the price of this article to our own people. I call in question any man's patriotism, any man's loyalty to the American flag and to the welfare of the American people, who is not willing to pay whatever it costs to produce tin-plates in this country. We have everything necessary for the purpose of that manufacture. As I said before, we have the ore, we have the limestone, we have all the materials convenient and easily obtained. And as tin is on the free-list we can get it as cheap in this country as they can in England, and block tin from abroad will soon be supplanted by our own tin mines. And so far as the effect on the canning is concerned, no one need be concerned.

The duty of 1 cent per pound on tin-plate will only add 3 cents to the price of a dozen cans, about one-fourth of a cent to a can, and the same ratio of increase to all tin-ware and tin-plate used. And while the price of tin-plates will increase this much if the duty is increased, a protection which will prevent foreign competition from breaking down our American tin-works will ultimately bring down the price of tin-plates by home competition. This has always been the effect of protection, but we never want any American product cheaper than it can be made by well-paid labor.

We have the labor here, and it is only just and right that those who propose to engage in this industry should be protected by the imposition of an adequate protective duty. I appeal to gentlemen, therefore, who desire to see this industry established in the United States to vote against the removal of the duty and the placing of tin-plate on the free-list.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The formal amendments will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] sent up a letter to the Clerk's desk to be read some one on the other side suggested it was Mr. Dunlap's letter. If gentlemen would like to hear the experience of that manufacturer and dealer I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read his letter, which appears in the Pittsburgh Post, on this question. It is so full of facts concerning this question that I recommend it to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman want the letter of Dunlap read or the comment on the letter in the Pittsburgh Post, or both?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I send it up to be read. If the Clerk should read the comments of the Pittsburgh Post they will not hurt any one. They are very good.

Mr. DALZELL. I am sure they will not.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Editor of the Post:

I have been so frequently consulted in regard to the feasibility of manufacturing tin-plates in this country that I have concluded to state what I know on this subject for the benefit of such as are concerned.

The processes employed in the manufacture of tin-plates are no secret; the theoretical part can be learned in a few hours.

A bar of the proper gauge of iron is cut to the required lengths. These are heated and passed through rollers. As they lengthen out they are doubled up until they make eight sheets. They are then trimmed to the desired size. The sheets are then separated and passed to the pickling and scouring department. (This part of the work is very disagreeable and laborious.)

The plates after being thoroughly cleansed are placed in hermetically sealed iron boxes and annealed. The plates are afterward passed through polished rollers to give them the required elasticity. Then they are again scoured and passed into the tinning department, in which there are usually four oblong pots for each set of hands; first, a grease-pot, into which the plates are immersed; then the wash-pot, which is full of liquid metal; next, the finishing-pot of pure liquid tin; lastly, another grease-pot, which cuts off all unnecessary tin. The plates are then cleansed, polished, assorted and packed. Terne or roofing plates are made in the same manner, except that the coating consists of part lead and part block tin. Such is briefly the process of manufacturing tin and terne plates.

My opinion has also been asked about the feasibility of manufacturing tin-plates in this country in sufficient quantity to supply the demand at the present rate of protection—some 35 per cent. I do not believe that it would be possible to supply the demand under existing circumstances, and, if possible, it would not be desirable to do so. Much of the labor required in the manufacture of tin-plates is performed by women. The scouring of the iron previous to the tinning process is laborious and disagreeable. The floors are covered with water, necessitating the use of pattens.

When examining the process of manufacturing tin-plates in several large establishments in Monmouthshire and South Wales I felt thankful that American women were free from that kind of drudgery, and I feel satisfied that it would be a difficult task to get any practical number of them to engage in it.

I am quite aware that we have a number of paid gentlemen who are clamorous about having tin-plate made in this country. These gentlemen appear to know how many thousands the industry would give employment to, and the millions of money it would keep in our own country, provided adequate protection were given to this unborn infant industry. Said gentlemen neglect to inform the public that the hoped-for infant of the future is now protected on a revenue basis by a tariff of 35 per cent. I am willing to admit, with the advocates of the anticipated infant industry, that we return to Great Britain a score or more of millions of money each year for tin-plates; but, then, recollect in return that the same people buy of us annually hundreds of millions of our American productions.

Persons versed in the science of political economy well know that, generally speaking, nations are governed by the same business laws that individuals are; hence nations find it to their interest to produce and fabricate such productions as circumstances have placed within their control, and that by a reciprocal exchange of such productions nations are mutually benefited. Further, that no nation can long continue to purchase except on this basis of reciprocity; hence we buy of England such manufactured goods as she can produce better and cheaper than ourselves; and in lieu thereof England purchases from us such productions as we can produce to the best advantage, such as cotton, tobacco, meats, and breadstuffs, and to that extent that if we eliminate such luxurious imports as the extravagance of our people will have at any price or rate of tariff duties, then the balance of trade would be constantly in our favor.

My own experience as a business man, of now nearly fifty years, has been that the question of duties, tariffs, etc., has been a source of continual agitation. How many blatant, frothy demagogues have ridden this hack into seats in Congress, and now assist in continuing the agitation in order to continue their places? They have no desire to permanently settle the vexed question, no desire to extract the "thorn that produced the inflammation," for if it were not for these yearly turmoils what would become of the aspiring politician?

I am satisfied that in case the Mills tariff bill is passed (with some changes in relation to certain kinds of glass and iron) that all the fretting and yearly clamor about protection will be ended. The present tariff laws are unjust and unequal. Why should there be a duty of some 35 per cent. on tin-plate, a product that is not made in our country; nor is it desirable to make it; and yet how diffusively it affects so many interests, from the cans that contain our oil and meats for exportation and home use down to the tin cup found in both palace and hovel.

I sincerely trust that the Mills tariff bill may be acted on and passed during the present session of Congress. I believe that the thanks of the whole country are due to our upright and fearless President for his lucid and honest exposition of our present tariff system.

JOHN DUNLAP.

PITTSBURGH, May 22, 1888.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that there is not a single solitary thing in that letter, by way of a free-trade argument, that has not been as well or better stated on the floor of this House during the discussion of this bill; and the letter has no significance whatever by reason of its having been written by John Dunlap. I know him well, and have known him for years. He is a very nice, respectable gentleman; but he belongs to the class who want free tin-plates. He has made his fortune by importing tin-plates. In other words, he is in precisely the same category in connection with this industry that Henry Nash & Co., Bond & Parsons, Sims & Coventry, Phelps, Dodge & Co., all New York importers, and the Standard Oil Company and its defenders on the other side of the House are; so that there is not anything at all significant in the letter having been written by Mr. Dunlap. Nor is it true, as I understand, that he is a Republican. He is, as he calls himself, an Independent. He is one of the men at the head of the reform committee having charge of the reform of municipal affairs in Pittsburgh. He occupies in that letter simply a selfish position, precisely the same that every importer of tin-plate does.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated that there is no significance in the letter of Mr. Dunlap, I will ask the Clerk to read an extract from the Congressional debates in the Forty-seventh Congress, which possibly he may think may have some significance as bearing upon this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask the Senator if there is any person in this country manufacturing this article at this time?

Mr. SHERMAN. They are manufacturing it to a limited extent. There is one establishment in Pittsburgh that began to enter on the manufacture of tin-plate, but did not go into it.

Mr. LOGAN. The manufacturers of tin cans all over the country, in every city in the United States, for putting up meat, fruit, etc., have said to the committee here—I presume that they have to the committee, and probably to nearly every Senator—that they were better satisfied with the rate of duty which was imposed before, and are satisfied with the rate proposed by the committee, but they are universally opposed to increasing the duty. I have had telegrams to this effect from different parts of the country, and especially from Chicago, where they manufacture more tin cans than in any other part of the country. The idea of increasing the rate of duty for the purpose of encouraging anybody to commence a manufacture when he has not commenced it, I think is a new idea. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. INGALLS. * * * The Senator from Ohio states rather an advance opinion, I think, upon this subject. We have heard hitherto of the necessity of protecting infant industries; that it was necessary to impose additional burdens upon the people to prevent industries that were struggling for existence from being strangled. But he now assures us that the duties are essential to create industries, to institute and inaugurate manufactures here that do not exist, for the purpose of obtaining prospective profits that may be realized upon articles that are not and can not be manufactured here, and that are imported in vast quantities for the welfare of the people.

Mr. President, if any argument has been adduced or can be adduced for the extraordinary motion of the Senator from Ohio, I should be very glad to hear it. He claims that this is something that is in the interest of American industry, but the industry does not exist. It is apparent that so far as tin-plate is concerned it is actually a raw material. It is in no sense whatever competitive with any American manufacture. The only reason why a duty should be imposed upon tin-plate is for the purpose of revenue. The tariff upon this article should be fiscal merely. It can not be fiscal and protective, because there is nothing to protect, and every dollar that is imposed upon this article that is in excess of what it ought to bear as a revenue proposition is so much that is directly taken from the industry, from the wages of this country, that have burdens upon them already which they are illy able to bear.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. MCMILLIN (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

Mr. PADDOCK. I was not paying attention when the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] presented the memorial of Mr. Cowdon in relation to the Mississippi River improvement. I will state that the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River is considering the very question to which the memorial refers.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of William P. Van Aken and other citizens of Kansas, and of Platte and Clay Counties, Missouri, praying for the passage of a bill permitting the construction of a free low bridge across the Missouri River between Kansas City, Kans., and a point in Clay County, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of the New York yearly meeting of the religious Society of Friends, officially signed, and indorsed by a meeting of the Union for Philanthropic Labor, representing five yearly meetings at Baltimore and New York, and in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, for the establishment of a permanent court of international arbitration; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the New York yearly meeting of the religious Society of Friends, officially signed, and indorsed by a meeting of the Union for Philanthropic Labor, representing five yearly meetings at Baltimore and New York, and in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, praying for the discouragement and repression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors with the native races of Africa and the Western Pacific Islands; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 3034) to grant an increase of pension to William E. Prince; and

A bill (S. 3036) to grant a pension to William Lutz.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2690) granting a pension to Augustus Axmacher;

A bill (H. R. 2234) granting a pension to Henry P. Alexander;

A bill (H. R. 9184) granting a pension to William M. Campbell, jr.;

A bill (H. R. 10267) granting a pension to William P. Gordon; and
A bill (H. R. 8807) granting a pension to Harriet E. Cooper.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6233) for the relief of Jesse Coe, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8607) to increase the pension of Lucius B. Varney;
A bill (H. R. 813) granting a pension to Mrs. Lovina J. Reeves;
A bill (H. R. 8510) for the relief of Mary Command;
A bill (H. R. 367) granting a pension to Nathaniel D. Chase; and
A bill (H. R. 9347) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Buck.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2059) for the relief of John T. Sechler, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPOONER (through Mr. MANDERSON), from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2563) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Larimer for important services rendered the military authorities in 1864 at Deer Creek Station, Wyo., and for loss of property taken by Sioux Indians, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 63) making an appropriation to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government, and the Bureau of Agriculture, the Government Printing Office, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the Ohio Centennial, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, from September 4 to October 19, 1888, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 409) for the relief of Thomas W. Lord, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8391) to authorize the location of a branch home for volunteer disabled soldiers in Grant County, Indiana, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back adversely a petition of the Board of Trade of the city of Indianapolis, Ind., and petitions of many Grand Army posts in that vicinity, relating to the location of a soldiers' home in that place. I ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions.

The report was agreed to.

MEXICAN BOUNDARY SURVEY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill to enable the President to execute the arrangements of the convention between the United States and Mexico providing for an international boundary survey, and to ask that the amendment, together with the accompanying papers, a letter of the Secretary of State, and others, be printed.

I wish to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to this amendment. It has been once or twice adopted by the Senate. It is expressly required by the terms of the treaty with Mexico. The message of the President of Mexico is here, showing that Mexico has complied with the terms of the treaty, and has held its well-instructed engineer corps ready to execute the treaty, but no provision has been made by our Congress. I call special attention to the fact.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the Senator is aware that the Committee on Appropriations has reported this matter more than once, and the Senate has adopted it, but the House of Representatives has not agreed to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish also to say that the peace of both nations is somewhat involved in it. Controversies are constantly arising as to where the boundary is. The survey is provided for by the treaty, and it ought to be appropriated for, and should not be neglected. I do not blame at all the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. It is a very important matter, and it ought to have been attended to years ago. The fault does not lie with the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am glad to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to have the amendment referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; let it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

GETTYSBURGH BATTLE REUNION.

Mr. CAMERON. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 90) granting leave of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States, to report it back favorably, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution reported by him. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all persons employed in the service of the United States who were present at the battle of Gettysburgh, either in the Union or Confederate forces, be, and hereby are, granted sufficient leave of absence, without loss of pay, to attend the reunion to be held at Gettysburgh on the 3d day of July next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. CAMERON. Why?

Mr. HOAR. Because I do not think the Senate should recognize in its official action the Confederate forces.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects, and the joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will modify the joint resolution in that respect I shall make no objection to it. To the substance of the joint resolution I do not object, but I think that such a recognition had better not get into our legislation.

Mr. CAMERON. Will the Senator suggest a modification of it?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, I will. Let it lie over for the present.

Mr. CAMERON. I will withdraw the report for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. CAMERON subsequently said: I now ask leave to report back the joint resolution (S. R. 90) granting leave of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States, with amendments, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a joint resolution this morning reported. Is there objection? The joint resolution will be read at length for information as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution as proposed to be amended, as follows:

That all persons now employed in the service of the United States who were present and engaged in the battle of Gettysburgh be, and hereby are, granted sufficient leave of absence, without loss of pay, to attend the reunion to be held at Gettysburgh on the 3d day of July next, such absence not to be taken from the allowance made by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the amendments proposed by the committee?

Mr. CAMERON. They are.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendments will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, after the word "persons," it is proposed to insert the word "now;" in line 4, to strike out the word "at" and insert the words "and engaged in;" and in the same line, to strike out "either in the Union or Confederate forces."

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the clerks are mistaken in striking out the word "at." I think it is merely a blot. "Who were present at and engaged in," it should read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word "at" will be inserted if there be no objection.

Mr. HAWLEY. The word "at" should be there.

Mr. HOAR. "Engaged" is what is intended; "all persons who were present and engaged," not merely as camp-followers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first clause of the joint resolution will be read as proposed to be amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend so as to make the joint resolution read:

That all persons now employed in the service of the United States who were present at and engaged in the battle of Gettysburgh be, and hereby are, granted sufficient leave of absence, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, to add to the joint resolution the following words:

Such absence not to be taken from the allowance made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to inquire of the Senator who offers these amendments wherein the joint resolution differs as amended from what it was originally.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. It leaves out the word "Confederate."

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to understand just what is the effect of these amendments, if anybody knows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the original joint resolution and the amendments proposed by the committee, if the Senator from New Hampshire desires.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution as reported and as proposed to be amended.

Mr. BLAIR. Do I understand that the amendments have been adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They have been adopted.

Mr. BLAIR. If either the Senator who reported the joint resolution or the one who offered the amendments will explain to me the difference between the joint resolution as it now is and as it was originally offered I should be glad to have him do so. Are we to understand from the joint resolution as it now is that there are no persons in the employ of the Government who were engaged against the Union Army in the battle of Gettysburgh, or that all persons in the employ of the Government at the present time who were in that battle were upon the Union side?

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not report the joint resolution, but the amendments are a mixed lot proposed by various persons here, and I would just as leave answer the question as not. To any person present and engaged in that battle on whichever side—and there are men right around us and engaged in the service of the Chamber who were some on the one and some on the other side—this says, "You may go and attend the reunion; we shall not take the time out of your pay." That is the whole thing.

Mr. BLAIR. That is just right. I do not see why you do not say so instead of amending it and not saying so.

Mr. HAWLEY. It does say so exactly. The Senator from New Hampshire knows perfectly well the object of the resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. I think it is a most admirable case of sticking in the bark, and therefore Senators who do this should have some reason for it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will observe the rules of order and address the Chair one at a time.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me, with great respect to my friend from New Hampshire, that this is not "sticking in the bark," but barking at the stick. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator may find his own term for it.

Mr. HOAR. The difficulty with the original joint resolution is that it expresses in terms and selects in a legislative phrase persons who were engaged in the Confederate service as the objects of a particular indulgence by name. I do not think that is good legislative precedent. I do not think it is a good plan to put into our statute-book the memories of the rebellion except where we are obliged to perform the constitutional function of relieving disabilities. But that is a very different thing from making a general law or rule that applies to all citizens alike without distinction. If we were to create a new office at this moment the President of the United States would be perfectly at liberty to appoint a person who was in the Confederate service to that office, if he thought him a fit and proper person and if the Senate thought him a fit and proper person; otherwise they would confirm him without any regard to that fact; but I should certainly object to passing a law in which we should say that the President may appoint any citizen of the United States, whether he was in the Confederate or the Union service. I do not think it is in good taste. I do not think it is good legislative style. I do not think it is a good plan to set that example or precedent.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3164) granting an increase of pension to Henry Potter; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3165) granting an increase of pension to Isaac M. Fletcher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3166) granting a pension to William F. Pike; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 3167) to amend section 4965 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

AMENDMENTS TO CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. BERRY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2952) for the allowance of certain claims for stores and supplies taken and used by the United States Army, as reported by the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

FISHERIES CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the President be requested to send to the Senate, if it is not incompatible with the public service—

1. A copy of the entire letter of Edward Everett, minister to Great Britain, addressed to John C. Calhoun, Secretary of State (No. 130), dated London, May 26, 1844, with its inclosures; and a copy of the entire letter from Mr. Everett to Mr. Calhoun, with its inclosures (No. 278), dated London, March 25, 1845, extracts from which letters are published in Senate Executive Document 100, first session of Thirty-second Congress on pages 122, 134, and 135.

And, also, any other correspondence with the State Department on the subject of the fisheries on the Atlantic coasts and waters, not heretofore published.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to be referred.

Mr. HOAR. I do not rise to object; but there is a very interesting letter of Mr. Everett's which was published by the Senate some years ago at my request, but I suppose that edition was exhausted. I was able to find but a single copy anywhere in the country. Mr. Everett's family had none, and there was but one at the Department of State. It was a letter which he wrote after going out of office in reply to a letter of Lord John Russell to our State Department, and which I believe reviews the fishery discussion, in which Mr. Everett was engaged somewhat while he was minister to England, as well as some other questions in our foreign relations. I should like very much to have that letter published with the document which the Senator from Alabama asks for. It would be very convenient to all of us to have a copy of it.

Mr. MORGAN. The third branch of the resolution I think would cover that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And also any other correspondence with the State Department on the subject of the fisheries on the Atlantic coast and waters not heretofore published.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will see that that does not cover it. After Mr. Everett went out of office, after his return home, Lord John Russell addressed either to the English minister here or to the American minister in London, I have forgotten which, a reply to a previous letter, a very elaborate one, of Mr. Everett. Mr. Everett being then in a private station (I think president of Harvard College, but I am not quite sure; at any rate, he had laid down the office of minister to England), made a very elaborate, able, and interesting reply to Lord John Russell's letter. So that would not be a correspondence with the State Department.

Mr. MORGAN. No. I am quite willing that letter should go in if the Senator will furnish a description of it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the letter printed with the others, which, if I remember aright, has some discussion of the fisheries.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Massachusetts will identify the letter for the direction of the clerks, and it will be included with the other documents mentioned in the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will let the resolution lie until I can hunt that up, I will do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am about to make a motion which will, if agreed to, dispense with adjusting the resolution into the form desired at the moment, and that is that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The motion to refer would be consideration. The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I think that committee ought to inquire into the nature of this correspondence, so that the Senate, on the report of its committee, may have the advantage of some knowledge in respect of the nature of what is to be communicated. The Senate is just as much responsible for the public interests as the President of the United States is, so far as it regards questions of this kind, and it ought not to ask the President (who of course always strains a point to give everything that the Senate asks in regard to such matters) to send correspondence which the Presidents heretofore have thought it proper should be kept private, until the appropriate committee of the Senate shall have some knowledge of the nature of it.

Then, again, in the line of what the Senator from Massachusetts has said, I am under the impression that if we are to explore the private documents in the State Department bearing upon our relations with Her Majesty's Government upon this subject and others related to it, there may be something additional that will be of interest to the Senate in the consideration of these matters besides what is named.

I hope, therefore, that my friend will not object to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration and inquiry.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to change a word in the resolution from "service" to "interest." I notice that I wrote "public service."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will report the first clause of the resolution as proposed to be modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the President be requested to send to the Senate, if it is not incompatible with the public interests.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no objection, Mr. President, to having this matter referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. They will have plenty of time to consider it before the debate comes up again on the treaty.

I will say, however, that my purpose in offering the resolution was to supply certain parts of two letters which were unpublished, and which are marked in asterisks in Executive Document 100, which the President sent to the Senate in the Thirty-second Congress. I suppose that those parts of the letter were omitted because Mr. Everett made some statement about the British contention, the value and importance of it, and its weight, by way of argument as well as statement, which our Government did not see proper to bring within reach of the British public.

I at first hesitated whether I would submit this resolution in executive session, but I thought I could safely qualify the matter of sending in any subject-matter here that might be improper by giving it, as we have always done, to the President of the United States to determine in his discretion as to what papers ought to come before the Senate. But of late of course the Senate have assumed a sort of guardianship or overseership over the President of the United States about matters of this kind, and I think are not willing to admit that he has any discretion that has reference to the public welfare, and I therefore willingly concede to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations the guardianship that is now sought.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It is so referred. Shall the resolution be printed? It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

POST-OFFICE EXPENSES.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas the Postmaster-General, in his annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, makes the following statement in relation to the distribution of the appropriation for clerk-hire and other expenses of post-offices, aggregating about $6,000,000, namely:

"I have been unable to find that there has ever been a regulation or order fixing system or principles upon which this vast sum of money is to be annually scattered. The First Assistant directs the entry of the necessary orders prepared in the division and brought up by its chief after such examination as he finds it possible to give in the mass of duties crowding upon him. The chief of the division makes his best effort to guess the proper sum for each importunate postmaster to expend, and the postmaster adjusts, subject to the same approval, the salaries of his force in accordance with his judgment of their merits.

"But the condition presented is sufficiently repulsive to any sense of administrative order or justice. To bring it as fully as possible to your consideration, and enable its free submission to the Congress, there are appended to this report tables showing the circumstances of all the first, second, and third class offices, their receipts and allowances of divers kinds, ranged in the grades of their salaries. The differences between them, in the proportion of allowances to receipts, are startling in every grade; and a more minute inquiry will not furnish thoroughly satisfactory reasons for them, although they will explain and excuse their existence in great degree."

Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be directed to inquire into and report upon the methods and practice which obtain in the Post-Office Department in the matter of allowances to postmasters for office expenses, and what changes, if any, should be made respecting the same.

HARRISON FLORA.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent at this time to bring a matter before the Senate. On the 3d day of May last there was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs adversely Senate bill 2608 by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BATE]. I believe there is testimony which will induce the committee to view the bill with more favor than is indicated by the report, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely may be reconsidered.

Mr. BATE. I do not see any objection to that. The committee would like very much to have the additional testimony so as to correct its action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2608) for the relief of Harrison Flora, late first lieutenant of Company D, One hundred and seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered if there be no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, with the additional evidence to be submitted.

Mr. PLUMB. The additional testimony will be submitted to the committee.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I reported yesterday a resolution from the Committee on Foreign Relations which I should like to call up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That went to the Calendar, like any other report of a committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a concurrent resolution, and not a joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It went to the Calendar as the report of a committee. The Senator can move to take it up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that it be taken up. It is very short, and I think the reading of it will be sufficient to explain it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a resolution reported by him yesterday from the Committee on Foreign Relations. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution to invite international arbitration as to differences between nations.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be, and is hereby, requested to invite, from time to time as fit occasions may arise, negotiations with any government with which the United States has or may have diplomatic relations, to the end that any differences or disputes arising between the two governments which can not be adjusted by diplomatic agency may be referred to arbitration, and be peaceably adjusted by such means.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to call up at this time for action the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1241.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1241) to prevent obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City, by dumping or otherwise, and to punish and prevent such offenses, and making other provisions in connection therewith.

Mr. DOLPH. Let all the amendments be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read through at length, and the question taken at once on concurring in all the amendments together, if there be no objection.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "waters," insert the words "or in those of Long Island Sound."

Page 1, line 16, after the word "decide," add the following: "One half of said fine to be paid to the person or persons giving information which shall lead to conviction of this misdemeanor."

Page 1, line 22, after the word "New York," insert the words "or in its adjacent or tributary waters, or in those of Long Island Sound."

Page 3, line 11, after the word "section," add the following: "Any boat or vessel used or employed in violating any provision of this act shall be liable to the pecuniary penalties imposed thereby, and may be proceeded against summarily by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof."

Page 3, strike out lines 12, 13, and 14, change "section 6" to "section 5," and "section 7" to "section 6."

Page 3, line 23, after the word "dollars," insert the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Commerce, from which the bill was reported, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania to let that motion go over for the present, because it is very desirable that two appropriation bills now on the Calendar should be passed this week. They may be passed to-day; I hope they will, but if not it will be very desirable for the Senate to be in session to-morrow, in order that that business may be concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. I withdraw the motion for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn for the present.

KANSAS RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the documents sent to the Senate in response to a resolution of mine of date of 17th of January last, concerning certain public lands in Kansas, be printed, except the map.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business——

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10233.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of morning business is closed, and the Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

BUST OF THE LATE CHIEF-JUSTICE.

Mr. EVARTS. I ask the Senator from Kansas to allow me to call up the bill (S. 3133) providing for a bust of the late Chief-Justice Morrison Remick Waite, to be placed in the room of the Supreme Court of the United States, in order that it may now be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the pending order may be informally laid aside to enable him to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3133) providing for a bust of the late Chief-Justice Morrison Remick Waite, to be placed in the room of the Supreme Court of the United States. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Office of Commissioner," in line 16, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

One assistant disbursing officer, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 26, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of "one librarian" from $1,800 to $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 31, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of "superintendent of folding-room" from $1,400 to $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 36, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for compensation of the Commissioner of Agriculture and the clerks and employés in his office from $74,160 to $72,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Botanical division," in line 41, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

One assistant botanist, $1,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 46, to reduce the total amount of the appropriations for "botanical division" from $9,840 to $8,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Pomological division," in line 49, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one artist, $1,200; one assistant pomologist (or clerk)," and insert "one clerk;" and in line 52, after the word "division," to strike out "four thousand two hundred" and insert "three thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

One pomologist, $2,000; one clerk, $1,000; in all, for pomological division, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 63.

Mr. BATE. Under the head of "Chemical division," I move, in line 59——

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that it is usual to wait until the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. BATE. All right.

Mr. HARRIS. Unless the amendment is to an amendment of the committee. I do not know whether it is an amendment to an amendment or not.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not an amendment to an amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Seed division," in line 87, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of "one chief of seed division" from $2,000 to $1,800; and in line 91, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for "seed division" from $8,440 to $8,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Forestry division," after the word "dollars," in line 102, to strike out "one assistant, $1,200; one clerk, $900; in all, $4,100;" so as to read:

One chief of forestry division, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous," in line 110, after the word "plants," to insert "including the establishment and maintenance of experimental grass stations;" and in line 116, after the word "engraving," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "twenty-five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Botanical investigations and experiments.—Botanical division: For purchasing specimens, paper, and all necessary materials for the herbarium, and for labor in preparing same; for investigations and experiments with grasses and forage plants, including the establishment and maintenance of experimental grass stations, and of other economic and medicinal plants, and for traveling and other necessary expenses connected therewith; and for employing local botanists for exploration and collection of plants in little-known districts, and for special work for the improvement of the herbarium, and for artists for drawing and engraving, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 127, after the word "traveling," to insert "within the United States;" and in line 129, after the word "information," to strike out "for artists' materials and other apparatus necessary in the work of the division; for preparation of papers upon subjects of a pomological nature, and expenses incurred in making investigations for the same; and for colored illustrations of fruits to be used in the special publications of the division;" so as to read:

Pomological information.—Pomological division: For traveling within the United States and other necessary expenses in investigating, collecting, and disseminating pomological information, $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 155, at the end of the clause making appropriations for "Laboratory," to add:

And the accounting officers of the Treasury are authorized and directed to allow the suspended account of George B. Loring, late Commissioner of Agriculture, the several sums which were expended by him in the purchase of sorghum-seed and beet-seed, and for labor in the distribution of the same, from October 1, 1884, to September 30, 1885, inclusive, which expenditures were made from the laboratory fund, so called, and which the First Comptroller of the Treasury has decided not to be properly chargeable to said fund, said allowance not to exceed the sum of $20,807.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 174, after the word "traveling," to insert "within the United States;" so as to make the clause read:

Investigating the history and habits of insects.—Entomological division: For the promotion of economic entomology, investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, arboriculture, and horticulture; experiments in ascertaining the best means of destroying them; for publishing reports thereon; and for illustrations, chemicals, traveling within the United States, and other expenses in the practical work of the entomological division, $20,000,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 183, after the word "cocoons," to insert "and for expenses of stations in connection therewith;" and in line 184, after the words "traveling expenses," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to read:

For collecting and disseminating information relating to silk culture; for purchasing and distributing silk-worm eggs, and for conducting at some point in the District of Columbia experiments with automatic machinery for reeling silk from the cocoon, and for expenses incurred in collecting, purchasing, preparing for transportation, and transporting cocoons, and for expenses of stations in connection therewith, and for necessary traveling expenses, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the close of the clause providing for the distribution of seeds, in line 274.

Mr. PLUMB. Before passing finally from the consideration of the appropriation for distributing seeds, I wish to say that it is anticipated that this provision will be largely diminished hereafter, the necessity for it disappearing by the establishment of agricultural experimental stations in different States in connection with the agricultural colleges, and which will undoubtedly as part of their work propagate and distribute seeds in the different localities in which they are located, thereby obviating the necessity for the great distribution by the Department of Agriculture.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 315, after the word "another," to strike out "$100,000 of this sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available;" so as to read:

Salaries and expenses Bureau of Animal Industry: For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the Bureau of Animal Industry, $500,000; and the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best, to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, and for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals and the quarantine of the same whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia from one State into another.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. The provision found between lines 315 and 317 providing for making "$100,000 of this sum or so much thereof as may be necessary to be immediately available" was inserted with the understanding that this bill would become a law long before the present time. In view of the fact that the appropriation of last year has been measurably exhausted, so much so that it has become necessary to discharge some of the employés in New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, as the entire appropriation of $500,000 will be available on the 1st day of July, and it may be that the bill will not become a law before that date, certainly not until very close to that date at all events, the committee recommend the striking out of the provision in order that it may go into conference, with the expectation that the conferees will insert whatever amount may be necessary in view of the time to elapse between the date of the signing of the bill and the 1st day of July, when the regular appropriation takes effect.

In connection with this subject generally, I will ask that a letter addressed to the chairman of the subcommittee having charge of the bill by Professor Salmon be read, and also that the tables accompanying the letter may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY,
Washington, D. C., June 12, 1888.

SIR: In accordance with your request of yesterday I have the honor to submit herewith a statement of the work and expenditures of the Bureau of Animal Industry for the eradication of contagious pleuro-pneumonia since January 1, 1888.

The increased expenses of the last four months of the year have been caused by enlarging the force in the States of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania to a sufficient extent to enable the bureau to inspect, number, and record all the cattle in the infected districts; to maintain quarantine regulations, and to examine all the animals slaughtered, or which are moved from such districts, or which die in them. This method has been found necessary to discover all of the diseased herds, and to prevent the spread of the malady.

In applying this method in New York it was found necessary to employ over one hundred men (106 on May 1), and the expenses increased from $6,213 in January to $43,501 in April, and $32,598 in May. This increase of force resulted in the discovery of many more diseased cattle, the number paid for in January being but 32, while in April it reached 1,414 and in May 761. The amount paid for cattle in New York was but $762 in January and reached $29,349 in April.

The expenses in New Jersey also increased for the same reason from $1,750 in January to $17,903 in May.

The work for the suppression of pleuro-pneumonia was not begun in Pennsylvania until about April 1, 1888, as the State authorities did not co-operate previous to that time. The expenses in that State will reach between $15,000 and $20,000 to June 30.

A word is needed in explanation of the tables of expenses. The expenses appear, as they are found on the books of the disbursing office, under the month during which the vouchers are paid. As a rule they were incurred during the preceding month. Hence there are to be paid after the month of May the greater part of the expenditures for May and also those for June.

After paying all vouchers received to June 1 there was an unexpended balance of $65,516.49.

This is clearly insufficient to continue the work. To reduce expenses there have been suspended about seventy men, forty-three of whom were employed in New York. It will be necessary to suspend nearly one-half of the remaining force to bring the expenses within the balance of the appropriation.

This will reduce the number of employés so much that the quarantines can not be held, and much damage is likely to follow. It is, therefore, very desirable that the immediately available clause should be allowed to remain in the appropriation bill and that the bill become a law at as early a date as possible. With this clause in the bill the work could be started up as soon as the act is signed, and every day saved would be of the greatest importance to the success and economy of the work.

This Department does not ask that the sum made immediately available should be so large as $100,000, since $20,000 would be more than could possibly be used before July 1. This amount was probably fixed by the House of Representatives because a like sum was made immediately available in the last appropriation bill.

Referring to remarks made in the committee on yesterday, permit me to say that I have labored conscientiously to carry on this work economically and successfully, and I believe the same is true of the Commissioner of Agriculture, who unfortunately is absent and can not appear before your committee. The qualifications of the professional men employed have all been examined by myself, and I feel sure that no more competent force could be organized. The non-professional men have been employed guarding and tagging cattle, serving quarantine notices, and doing other work of this nature, which could be done by any one of ordinary intelligence who could read and write. I believe this non-professional force would compare favorably with any force of similar size, and for the same kind of work, got together in the same length of time in any private undertaking. Indeed I have been astonished to find that these positions were sought and accepted by some of the best citizens in the localities where the work is being done—men who are intelligent, educated, and well-to-do.

I inclose copies of correspondence of interest in this connection. With the hope that this statement will be found sufficient for your purpose, and with the belief that your honorable committee will do what is best for the country under the circumstances, I am,

Very respectfully. D. E. SALMON, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. P. B. PLUMB,
Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

The records show that more work was done during the five months from January 1 to May 31, 1888, than during the whole year 1887.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that the table showing the disbursements of the Bureau of Animal Industry for five months, and also the table showing in detail the work of the Bureau, be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be inserted in the RECORD.

The papers are as follows:

Work closed up in Illinois in April 1, and quarantine removed in Cook County. Work commenced in Philadelphia, Pa., April 10, 1888.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the proviso to the same clause, line 318, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen;" in line 319, after the word "necessary," to strike out "shall be used and" and insert "may be;" and in line 320, after the word "experiments," to insert "to be conducted within the United States;" so as to read:

Provided, That $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in continuation of the investigations and experiments, to be conducted within the United States, into the nature, causes, and remedies for the prevention and cure of hog cholera and swine plague.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 328, after the words "division of forestry," to strike out:

For investigations into the structural differences of important timbers and the factors that influence their quality, their biology; miscellaneous reports; expense of experimental grounds, collection, purchase, and distribution of forest-tree seeds and seedlings in aid of forest culture; and for ascertaining the area, amount, and condition of the remaining white-pine supplies in the Northwestern States; and for working collection and apparatus, traveling and other expenses, $10,000.

And insert:

For the purpose of enabling the Commissioner of Agriculture to experiment and to continue an investigation and report upon the subject of forestry, and for traveling and other necessary expenses in the investigation and the collection and distribution of valuable economic forest-tree seeds and plants, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 342, to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Agriculture to continue experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum cane, including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies, $100,000: Provided, That the Commissioner is hereby required to make a separate report to Congress stating fully and accurately an itemized account of every expenditure made under this provision and the results of all experiments made, and also including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Experimental stations," in line 372, after the word "thereto," to strike out "six hundred" and insert "five hundred and ninety;" and in line 373, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

That to carry into effect the provisions of an act approved March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States, under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto," $590,000; $5,000 of which sum shall be payable upon the order of the Commissioner of Agriculture to enable him to carry out the provisions of section 3 of said act of March 2, 1887.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add at the close of the last paragraph:

And to compare, edit, and publish such of the results of the experiments made under section 2 of said act by said experimental stations as he may deem necessary, and for these purposes the Commissioner of Agriculture is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons as he may deem necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. BATE. I now move, on page 3, line 59, after the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

One assistant chemist, $1,800.

Mr. PLUMB. The amount proposed is estimated for, and I am not disposed to controvert the matter with the Senator from Tennessee, and shall make no point of order on his amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BATE. In line 60, on page 3, I move to strike out "four," after the word "thousand," and insert "six;" so as to read:

One assistant chemist, $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. That makes necessary an amendment in line 62, on page 4, to change the total amount of appropriations in that clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The change of total will be made by the Secretary, if there be no objection, by striking out "five," and inserting "nine;" so as to read:

In all, $11,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. On page 6, line 125, in the clause making appropriations for "section of vegetable pathology," I move to strike out the word "five," before the words "thousand dollars," and insert "fifteen:" and after the word "dollars," in the same line, to add: "of which $10,000 may be applied to the investigation of the disease and its remedy in peach-trees known as yellows."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to have an explanation from the Senator having charge of the bill in reference to the amendment of the committee in line 318, on page 14, which reduces the appropriation for the continuation of the investigations and experiments into the nature, causes, and remedies for the prevention and cure of hog-cholera and swine-plague from $30,000 to $15,000. This is the most important subject, in my opinion, that the Agricultural Bureau has charge of at the present time. The ravages of hog-cholera during the past year have been vastly greater than at any time during the history of the country, and I should like to know if it is advisable to reduce this appropriation? It seems to me there ought to be a very liberal appropriation for a full and careful and thorough investigation of this subject. I should like to know what the theory of the committee is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to reserve that amendment for a separate vote?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The other amendment, then, will be considered as concurred in, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. It was not a desire to minimize proper work in connection with this important subject that induced the committee to reduce the sum from $30,000 to $15,000. This is a subject which has been investigated for a century. It is not a new question by any means. The committee did not believe that the Department could spend by means of the ordinary machinery of investigation in the hands of the Department so large a sum. They believed that it might better be spent, or some portion of it at least, in stimulating investigation by private parties, and they thought they would leave that whole paragraph in such a position as to enable the committee to confer with the Commissioner of Agriculture to see if there was not some better way than to carry on the investigation by the Department, and which, judging by the results heretofore obtained, are not likely to be useful.

I believe, in the next place, that this is not, like pleuro-pneumonia, a disease which can be stamped out, and which once stamped out is not to be apprehended to reappear again for a long period; but it is a local disease, and one which exists in a portion of the United States every year more or less virulent, but still a disease that exists somewhere at some time. The committee believe that if these investigations are carried on in the Department itself they ought to be carried on by different agencies extending all over the country, the results of which should be compared..

Mr. PADDOCK. With the explanation made by the Senator from Kansas, I shall not insist on a separate vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is concurred in in the Senate.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that a statement showing the appropriations made in this bill for the different objects in comparison with the estimates and in comparison with the bill that came from the House be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move that when the Senate adjourn today it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ACCOUNTS UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 405.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for.

The question being put, the ayes were 9.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. I desire to know whether or not the Post-Office appropriation bill is the regular order now.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to move its consideration as soon as I can get the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BECK. That is what I supposed, and I think we should dispose of that first.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the motion is not debatable, but debate may proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire. I am entirely in sympathy with him and voted with him in his effort to get up the bill for consideration yesterday, but I think the scene of yesterday will be re-enacted here and probably we shall get in the same condition that we were yesterday, where we can do nothing but adjourn. As long as there is an appropriation bill ready for consideration I appeal to him to withdraw his motion.

Mr. BLAIR. It not being a debatable question, I suppose we can debate it at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish simply to ascertain by a yea-and-nay vote whether it is the sense of the Senate to take up this bill at this time; and if the Senate shall desire to take it up, I shall not ask for any proceedings in the nature of unnecessary delay. I want the bill taken up and acted on.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BERRY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE].

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], who is not in the Chamber.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but I have transferred the pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] and vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). My pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] is transferred to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. EVARTS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is absent from the Senate, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHANDLER. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A pair has been announced with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I withdraw the vote.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired generally with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I announce my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent that all proceedings under the roll-call be dispensed with.

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution to invite international arbitration as to differences between nations was passed this morning.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in the reading of the bill, if there be no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 2, to strike out the clause from line 19 to line 21, inclusive, as follows:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices for unusual business, as contemplated by Revised Statutes, section 3863, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, line 25, to reduce the appropriation "for rent, light, and fuel to post-offices of the third class" from $650,607 to $450,000.

Mr. BECK. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to unless there are substantial reasons given for it. The Postmaster-General sent to Congress a special report, in which he said, as I understand, that the $650,000 allowed by the House was the very smallest amount possible which would enable him to do anything like decent justice to the third-class postmasters. The postmasters of the third class now have to pay all the expenses in respect to rent, fuel, light, etc., and the appropriation giving relief from these burdens is cut down to the lowest possible point. Indeed, the House cut down the original estimate made by the Postmaster-General, which is $800,000.

Mr. CHACE. Will it interrupt the Senator from Kentucky if I say that I am very much interested in what he says, but I can not hear the Senator? Will he speak a little louder?

Mr. BECK. I was endeavoring to urge that the Senate should not concur in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations cutting down the House provision in line 25. I am informed by the Postmaster-General and by those who have examined the matter that the sum of $650,607 allowed by the House is the very smallest possible sum that will enable the Postmaster-General to do anything like fair justice to the postmasters of the third class, and unless there is some good reason why it should be cut down I hope it will not be done.

Mr. PLUMB. In reducing this sum and establishing a different rate of pay for this class, it was only designed to exercise what the committee believed to be a proper precaution in entering upon a new item of expenditure connected with the postal service.

It will be borne in mind that there never have been paid as yet to third-class postmasters allowances for rents or fuel or lights; and while I do not care to make the point that prior to the change of administration the postmasters, as all other officials of the Government, then mainly belonging to the Republican party, were deemed by our friends on the other side to be amply paid, and there was a constant struggle necessary to continue the salaries at the amount fixed by law, the salaries of hundreds of persons in the service in this city and elsewhere were reduced by the House of Representatives in the control of the Democratic party, and the Senate made unavailing efforts to keep those salaries up to the requirements of the law; but it happens under the present administration that every single one of those salaries has been restored, I think, and to a point higher than was permitted by a Democratic House of Representatives to Republican officials.

I do not speak of that for the purpose of making any point upon it, because, notwithstanding the political change of complexion of the Administration, the Senate has been willing at all times, I think, to pay at least reasonably adequate salaries and compensation for services rendered to the Government, no matter by whom rendered. And so in this matter the Committee on Appropriations are entirely willing that this new expenditure shall be entered upon. They only desire that during the first year of the experiment it shall be brought under such rules as will test the question as to how far this great sum of money to be granted in allowances to a large number of postmasters can be expended at the discretion of a single official, and for the purpose of measurably protecting that official himself against the very urgent demands that will be made upon him in regard to the expenditure of this sum of money.

The Postmaster-General sent to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads of the House of Representatives an exhibit in the nature of an estimate as to the amount of money that he thought would be required properly to carry out the provision for the allowance of rent, fuel, and lights to post-offices of the third class. The total number of third-class post-offices at that date was 2,452. The amount he estimated as necessary for rent was $374,767, and the amount he estimated for fuel and lights was $275,840. In making up this estimate he graded the offices according to compensation, commencing with $1,000 and ending with $1,900; that is to say, $1,000 grade, $1,100 grade, $1,200 grade, and so on up to the $1,900. He estimated in the $1,000 grade that one-third of that grade would receive rent at the rate of $50 per annum, one-third at the rate of $75 per annum, and one-third at the rate of $100 per annum and so on, until, arriving at the $1,900 grade, he estimated that one-third of the officers in that grade would receive $400 per annum, one-third $450 per annum, and one-third $600 per annum.

But the provision as it comes from the House does not limit the Postmaster-General to the payment of rents upon this sliding-scale which he proposes. He may give $600 or $1,000, or any sum he pleases to any one of these offices.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senator from Kansas if there is any statutory provision now that pays these postmasters' rent at all.

Mr. PLUMB. No.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then, is this not putting legislation on an appropriation bill?

Mr. PLUMB. That is a question which might have been asked in the House of Representatives. It came to us in the bill from the House, and we are simply dealing with it as it is in the bill.

As I said, there is no limitation made in the provision found in the House bill on the discretion of the Postmaster-General. I do not mean to say, or to intimate even, that he would do otherwise than what he deems the very best, but he would be confronted with the necessity of adjusting the relations of 2,452 postmasters to this allowance at once, an entirely new allowance, one which adds practically to the compensation of each postmaster the entire amount of the allowance; that is to say, that much more is added to what he has heretofore had. There will, as a matter of course, be a very great pressure for this allowance. It will take a very considerable period of time to adjust these allowances. He might not be able, unless he spent the money with a good deal of carelessness, to spend it this year, unless he did so by giving greater sums to some than would be necessary. He might establish a scale of expenditures therefore in regard to rents which Congress on reflection might not deem it wise to carry out.

We only wanted to put a limitation upon this expenditure this year in such a way that Congress might be advised just how the thing was working, and be able to make sure that we should not enter upon it on too extravagant a scale, leaving the question in such a way that next year, after an experiment of one year, we might come to the consideration of the question better informed than we are now.

I believe myself that there ought to be an allowance of this kind made to third-class post-offices; but, as I said before, at the time these offices were filled by Republicans no allowance of the kind could be had. We only ask now in entering on this new expenditure that it may be under limitations which will make sure of proper expenditure and will leave us at the next session of Congress disembarrassed by possibly unwise and extravagant allotments for rent, fuel, and lights by the Postmaster-General, by which to some extent, we may be bound; or at all events, the scale having been once established in practice, we can not depart from it. The Senator from Kentucky, because it goes to his own party friends, should not fail to consider that whatever we give is an increase of wages that much in the compensation of men who have heretofore not particularly complained that they were not properly paid, of men who are getting just what their predecessors got, of men who are getting offices which they tried for. We do not thrust them upon them. At least, I have not heard of anything of that kind having to be done. I think under these circumstances he and his associates will recognize the propriety of commencing on a somewhat modest basis.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, Senators will remember that there have been a great number of petitions received in and presented to the Senate asking for an increase in the compensation of fourth-class postmasters and for the relief of third-class postmasters from the expenses which they now have necessarily to incur. The recommendations made by the Postmaster-General contain deliberate references to the facts which justify the recommendation of providing by law that third-class postmasters shall be furnished with fuel and lights for their offices. By reference to his report it will be seen how the law as it now stands operates. If a postmaster's salary amounts to $1,900, he must furnish the office himself, and he loses the rent on it; he must furnish fuel; he must furnish the lights; he must hire the clerks necessary to aid him in the discharge of the duty; and the amount necessary for rent, lights, fuel, and clerks is a deduction from the amount of the salary he takes for the glory of being nominally postmaster.

These things have not for h e first time been called attention to in the present report of the Postmaster-General, but previous reports have called attention to the injustice of the existing law on that subject.

The third-class postmaster, as I said, must bear all expenses of clerk-hire, of house-rent, of fuel, and of lights, while the second-class postmasters receiving $100 more salary gets his $2,000 salary, his furniture; the rent of his office is paid; his fuel, his lights, and his clerks are paid by the United States. Any one can see the absolute injustice of such an arrangement. It requires no argument to demonstrate it.

While I favor economy in public expenditures and moderate salaries to all officers, I submit that we ought in these matters to be just. I believe we ought to try to give reasonable compensation and make that provision for third-class postmasters which is in harmony with the rate of compensation provided for first and second class postmasters.

I do not propose to consider this in the light of a party measure, nor to inquire whether justice was done the postmasters under Republican administrations. Whether we reduce salaries under this Administration or not, if we did wrong then that certainly is not a reason for doing wrong now.

I do not think it is a question of administration; I do not think it is a question of Republicanism or Democracy; but it is simply a question of justice, of what duty requires of us. The Postmaster-General has estimated the amount which, upon a careful examination, he believes to be necessary to provide rent, lights, and fuel for a large number of third-class postmasters. He makes that estimate upon a basis of calculation which is intelligible, which is practical, which is understood by the Department and those who aid in the execution of its functions. If we mean to overcome the injustice of the present law, the best way to do that is to ascertain the facts which justify an appropriation for that Department and to act in accordance with those facts. If it requires the amount of money which the Postmaster-General suggests in his report it will require to provide lights and fuel and rents for third-class post-offices, is it reasonable, is it proper, unless we can demonstrate that he is mistaken, that we shall give but two-thirds of that amount; that we shall do two-thirds justice and refuse to do entire justice?

It seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations ought not to be adopted, and I concur with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] that it would be unwise to adopt that amendment and to propose but two-thirds justice to a class of persons who by every rule of reason ought to be relieved from the burden now imposed upon them.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not know whether the third-class postmasters now are Democrats; no matter what they are. They are very much mixed politically, I suppose. Perhaps we have a majority of them; I hope we have; we have not anything like a majority of employés in the Departments at Washington, as I am advised, but that is neither here nor there.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly the Senator does not mean to say that there is any doubt about a very large majority, an overwhelming majority, of the third-class postmasters under this Administration being Democrats.

Mr. BECK. I hope they are.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator have any doubt that they are?

Mr. BECK. I do not express any doubt in regard to it. I know that there are now a good many men who are the enemies of the Administration, and who are seeking in all sorts of mean ways to undermine it, in all the Departments of this Government, who ought not to be there. No man can carry on any sort of business, much less an administration successfully, with enemies doing his work. I would not carry on a farm with plow-boys who were my enemies, nor a grocery-store with clerks trying to break me down and transfer my trade to some one else. I hope we have some Departments of the Government in which a majority of the employés are friendly to the Administration and seek to make it a success, instead of using their positions to break it down.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator ought to go to the White House to make an argument on that subject rather than here.

Mr. BECK. I am not seeking to make this a political debate. I surely have the right to reply to the Senator. But I will say to the Senator from Kansas that while he seems not to be able to do justice to third-class postmasters by allowing this comparatively small sum to pay for fuel and lights and rent needed in the public service, by cutting the total down from $650,607 to $450,000, he exhibits a strange inconsistency when he proposes, without the demand, and I may say against the will, of the Postmaster-General and without the recommendation of any official of any Department, to donate by this bill $800,000 to go to friends perhaps of his party who are begging for increased ocean mail service. The Senator proposed by an amendment to this bill to require a contract to be given at $1 a mile, or $800,000 a year, for at least five years, for pretended services that nobody supposes will be of any benefit to the mail service and that is not demanded by the Postmaster-General or by any branch of the public service. That provision is interpolated into this bill and is nothing more nor less than a subsidy to some favored steam-ship companies, while economy is sought to be practiced by striking down $650,607 to $450,000, and the proposed saving is taken from the honest pay of men who are doing honest public work. Such action will not bear criticism when the two propositions come to be examined together. I will deal with one at a time.

The committee of the other House and the House saw fit on the recommendation of the Postmaster-General to insert this provision. I know that in years gone by under former administrations allowances were made out of other appropriations for fuel and lights in many cases. They were reached by allowances out of money in the hands or under the control of the Postmaster-General. These little allowances were cut off by Executive order four or five years ago, and they can not be allowed now under the ruling.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not understand the Senator's statement.

Mr. BECK. I say many of these little items were once paid for by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. PLUMB. Never; not a dollar.

Mr. BECK. I can produce proof of it if necessary.

Mr. PLUMB. I defy the Senator to do it. I hope he will have the candor to admit that he is mistaken.

Mr. BECK. I think I will show it, and show that it was done time and again in regard to post-offices in my own State, and properly done, and the refusal to continue to do it was wrong. But returning to the proposition before us. The report of the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads makes use of this language:

In the appropriation bill for 1888 there is no appropriation for rent, light, and fuel at third-class offices. In the proposed bill there is inserted for this purpose the sum of $650,607. Heretofore the postmaster of a third-class office was compelled to pay for these items from his salary. This has caused much and just complaint from this class of officers. In the report of the Postmaster-General, on page 14, he used this language:

"Yet from the third-class postmaster, who has so much less than the others in nominal salary, is taken 'even that which he hath.' To him no allowance (except in a case which is no exception, that of the separating office) for rent, fuel, clerical service, stationery, or other outgo whatever is made, but all must be defrayed from his miscalled salary, which thus proves too often, instead of the apparently promised reward of labor, but the weak residuum of a well-nigh exhausted cup. The consequences are, first, injustice, more or less, to all postmasters of the third class, and frequent instances of grotesque inequality and unfairness in the proportion of labor and responsibility to net compensation; and, secondly, a resulting tendency to poorer provision and service in such offices, only counterbalanced by the pride and sense of duty of the officer.

"Salaries of the third class vary from $1,000, where gross receipts are $1,900 and not exceeding $2,100, to $1,900, where gross receipts reach $7,000 but not over $8,000; and immediately following, salaries of the second class rise from $2,000, for gross receipts of $8,000 and not over $9,000, to $2,900 for gross receipts of $35,000 or more and not exceeding $40,000. Thus, if the business of an office be between $7,900 and $8,000, the postmaster must bear the entire charges of it and have for himself only what shall be left of $1,900; while if the business be but $100 more the postmaster may take $2,000 net for his services, and these often more of mere easy supervision than actual office work. Instances have come to my attention where third-class postmasters with salaries of but $1,600 to $1,700 have been compelled, in order to provide such service as to satisfy their sense of personal honor in performance of public duty, to make an annual outlay of from $1,000 to $1,300, besides giving continuing personal labor. It is obvious, indeed, that so great is the difference between the decent provision of an office for the transaction of postal business yielding annually $7,000 or more and one yielding but from $1,900 to $2,100, it may be almost affirmed that as a third-class postmaster's business and salary increase his compensation diminishes; and it is to be safely asserted that, in a large majority of cases at least, his proportionable compensation (to labor and responsibility) will surely diminish if he fairly discharges his obligations to the service. Such a condition is neither creditable to the justice of the Government nor wisely conducive to the finished service which should be exacted of postmasters to the public."

The committee of the House add:

The justness of these observations is recognized, and the correction is sought to be accomplished in this bill.

And a table is attached on page 22 of the report, showing that after the most careful revision of all that class of offices this sum of $650,607 is the least that can be used to advantage. The Postmaster-General says that it is the lowest estimate he can possibly make to do justice to that class of postmasters. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have cut it down without any sort of reason so far as I am advised. They should rather to have stricken it out altogether; they might have been justifiable in that, standing on the ground that they will do nothing in that direction; but there was no reason and there is no authority shown why $450,000 should be given. If $650,607 ought not to be, and the Postmaster-General says that unless he has this sum, which is the lowest estimate, we had better give him nothing, and let them go on and suffer as they have been doing.

I insist that the proposed amendment ought to be rejected because there is no reason for reducing the sum below $650,607 if any sum is given. I have the authority of the Postmaster-General for saying that $650,607 is the lowest sum that he can use advantageously and deal fairly with his officials.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator please state where he finds that authority?

Mr. BECK. When I saw what had been done I went to the Post-Office Department and examined into the matter. The Postmaster-General was not asked to come before the committee, and had no opportunity to appear before it, as I understand.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope this is not another case like that we had last year, where the Postmaster-General authorized the Senator from Kentucky to dispute in private what he had stated in his previous annual report.

Mr. BECK. I do not remember what was done last year, but I know this: I was necessarily absent from the committee—no, not perhaps necessarily absent, but, while I was absent, though a member of the subcommittee, this bill was acted upon and the Postmaster-General was not before the committee, and I had to get information as best I could, since the matter was acted on in my absence. I am not generally absent, though I confess I was last week; therefore I sought information from the persons I thought could best give it, and I received it so as to satisfy me that the provision made in the bill by the House ought not to be cut down. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I am not in favor of placing limitations on the administration of the executive officers of the Government. I think that a liberal discretion should be allowed to them, and they should be held responsible to Congress for the manner in which they perform their executive duties.

In this matter of third-class post-offices and postmasters, there can be no question whatever that the public interests require that a reasonable compensation should be paid to these public servants. Of all public functions performed by the Government the mail service is the most essential and the most esteemed by the people, and there is no kind of reason why this class of officers should be discriminated against unfairly, as they are in the existing methods of compensation and allowances. Practically they perform these duties with little or no compensation, and comparatively with other officers in the same service there is the greatest inequality and injustice.

Now, how is that to be remedied? There is but one person in connection with this performance of duty that has the knowledge of the facts which will enable him to give the compensation to each postmaster in each case adequate and not excessive. The amounts must differ. We can not classify them. While this provides a very imperfect method, yet it is some progress in the direction of giving reasonable compensation to each postmaster according to the value of his services and the amount of business he transacts.

It is true that there is a consideration that in many cases the post-office is desirable to the incumbent; the location of it is in connection with some private business in which he is engaged; but this is a very intangible consideration and can not be measured, and the only proper measure is to give each postmaster a compensation according to the duties which he performs, and to provide an office or place of business, with the necessary light and fuel.

In this case I should think that the suggestion which has been made of giving a smaller amount in order that we may see how this executive officer, the Postmaster-General, who is charged with the administration and disbursement of this large sum of money, shall proceed with it before a larger amount is intrusted to him, is not a reasonable suggestion. The present Postmaster-General is a man of character and of ability, and we have no reason to doubt that his administrative efforts will be such as will be approved by Congress and by the people. It is not necessary to assume in reference to him or to any other head of a Department who has been nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and therefore approved as a man of ability and of integrity—it is not, I think, desirable in any appropriation to proceed upon the hypothesis of testing his administrative ability.

For these reasons I think, with the Senator from Kentucky, my colleague upon the Appropriations Committee, that we had better not adopt the suggestion of the majority of the committee and limit this amount. On the contrary, I should prefer to give to the present incumbent of the Post-Office Department, the Postmaster-General, an adequate sum of money, and to hold him accountable, and I have no doubt he would perform that duty with eminent satisfaction. Hold him accountable for the administration of that sum of money in such manner as will promote the interests of the public service and secure the postmasters a just and reasonable compensation, and the results will be more satisfactory to the country and more conducive to the best interests of the public service than to seek to limit and stint him with insufficient means and precise and unbending limitations and prohibitions, and this is equally true of all the other heads of Departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall ask for the yeas and nays in due time, and I want to say a word or two about the matter.

The Senator from Kentucky and I do not differ about the propriety of paying something, but the Senator from Kentucky thinks if the Postmaster-General recommends anything it is an act of temerity on the part of any Senator to suggest that the amount should not be allowed or should be cut down. I do not know when heretofore he has been willing to subordinate his judgment to that of any executive officer. He has had the courage to say here that the President has not acted as he should have done in a certain respect. I do not know whether he has said that to the President or not. And if the judgment of the head of the Administration be imperfect in regard to one question, why may it not be imperfect in regard to some other matters as well? I know as well as the Senator from Kentucky does that until this Administration came in the other Chamber dwelt with great emphasis on the unreliability of Department estimates, dwelt with great emphasis on the large appropriations that were being made for the expenses of the Government, and characterized the allowances for salaries as being extravagant to the last degree. It was said we never reduced one. Since this Administration came in its friends in the other House have never touched one unless to increase it, and there has been constant begging from the beginning of the Administration to the present time to the Republican side of the Senate to put up salaries. That is the fact certainly. Now, because in starting in upon what is undoubtedly to be a great item of expenditure, when it is proposed to increase by a single blow the salary of every third-class postmaster in the United States without any question, without any reference to whether there is any special merit in the case or not, we suggest a limitation in the first year of its operation only, not by a continuing provision of law, we are held up as proposing to deny to these people their inalienable rights!

The Postmaster-General does not say anywhere anything that can be construed as meaning that he could not get along with any other sum of money than that stated by him. He does not state anything of that kind in his report, and I prefer to believe what he has put into a written report rather than a private statement he has made to the Senator from Kentucky.

This law can not be put in operation for the whole twelve months of the next fiscal year. If the Postmaster-General does his duty and investigates each particular case to ascertain what should be allowed, it will take him three or four months before he can make any allowance, and then if he is to spend money it is because he gives a higher rate than he has named in his schedule as the rate which he regarded as the maximum to be allowed.

In addition to that, the present Postmaster-General in his schedule proceeds upon the theory that every single third-class postmaster must have rent, fuel, and lights allowed. The Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] knows very well that there are many third-class post-offices in his State kept in stores, because it is an advantage to the man keeping the store in the way of trade. So it is all over the United States. There are places where allowance for rent would be entirely gratuitous on the part of the Government. The Postmaster-General does not take any account of that, but the immense estimate presented by him is based on an allowance to every third-class office in the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I know that other classes of post-offices are sometimes kept in stores; but I am not aware of any third-class post-office that is kept in a store.

Mr. PLUMB. I mean places where some other business is carried on, and where the post-office is a business inducement to the man keeping it. That is so all over the United States. It is so in Kansas and in Texas and in other States. There are other questions that come into the consideration of the case, and probably there might be an abuse of power.

The question, as I said, does not depend on difference of opinion in regard to the propriety of having any expenditure, but only as to the rate and amount of allowance.

The Senator from Kentucky says that there has been put in the appropriation bill an item which may benefit some friends of the Republican party for increased mail pay, a provision that authorizes a Democratic Postmaster-General to spend the money or not as he pleases, and at such rates within a proper limit as he pleases, which is based on a recommendation of the Postmaster-General, not the present incumbent, but the one who had the honor of making the last report from that Department. In his report of 1887 he argued at length, covering three or four pages of his report, in favor of extra pay to ships carrying the mails of the United States between ports of the United States and the ports of South America, and he comes back to it, not so emphatically it is true, not so much at length, in his last report.

The Senator from Kentucky is much more familiar, no doubt, with the personnel of the steam-ship companies than I am. So far as I am aware, I do not know a single person in any line of steamers running from a United States port anywhere, and I do not know what the politics of these men are. All I do know is that, as I think, there is no reason why the agencies by which the United States mails are transported upon the water should not be paid as well as upon the land. There is no necessary connection, as I think, between these two subjects.

It is true this bill was considered in subcommittee during the absence of the Senator from Kentucky. If he accuses me therefore of any discourtesy, I of course must submit, though I am not aware of any guilt on my part. He was present in the committee, I think, when the bill was considered there; but if there is any lack of authority on this subject of any kind whatever on account of his not having been present in the subcommittee, it seems to me he had the opportunity in full committee; but I did not know that there was any obligation resting upon the committee to wait at this late hour of the session upon the motion of any member of the committee who might for justifiable or other reasons be detained away from the city. It is near the close of the fiscal year. I should be glad, so far as I could, to have this bill go over now for two weeks. It might have gone over in committee, because it came along when I had much else to do, which I would have been glad to continue to do to the displacement of this work; but the Senator knows that in view of the fact that this would necessarily go to a conference, and that therefore its consideration might be protracted beyond the 1st of July, it was necessary to exercise some degree of haste in its consideration, and doing this we did what the committee has always done ever since I have been upon it, acting in a hurry when we need to do things in a hurry, in order that there may be no failure of appropriation to carry on the Government. If, however, the Senate is willing to have this bill go over with the risk of there being a failure of funds after the 1st day of July, certainly I shall not object.

Mr. BECK. I do not understand why that suggestion should be made. I neither complained of want of courtesy in not being present in the subcommittee or in the whole committee; but when I was inquired of where I got my information, and it seemed to me to be a reflection that I should go to the Postmaster-General or to other persons well advised on the subject, I gave as the reason why I did go and make the inquiry that I was not present either in the subcommittee or in the whole committee when this bill was considered, nor had I the opportunity of knowing the reasons for its action, nor was the Postmaster-General sent for as far as I am advised. I am opposed to any delay in the passage of the bill. I am not only anxious that the bill should pass, but that it should pass to-day, and pass so that the Senator from Kansas will not be compelled to remain here against his convenience. I went to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], who was pressing another bill, and urged him to let this bill come up. I do not seek any delay, nor do I reflect on the committee except to say that I think it is a mistake, if there is any allowance at all, to cut it down below what the Postmaster-General, after thorough investigation, and the House of Representatives, after a careful examination, have regarded as absolutely necessary; and therefore it is that I oppose the amendment, without reflecting on any one.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator made mention of the fact that the bill was considered while he was absent.

Mr. BECK. I gave that as my reason for calling on the Postmaster-General to obtain information. That was the only way I could obtain it.

Mr. PLUMB. No one could complain of the Senator going to the Postmaster-General for information. He said the Postmaster-General told him certain things about this matter. I asked where and when he said so, because I did not find them in his report. The Senator then said that he had them from the Postmaster-General. He has the freedom of the Department, no doubt, and the Postmaster-General will reply to any inquiry by him, or perhaps by any one else; but I do not find in the report of the Postmaster-General any evidence that a smaller sum might not be made proper use of, and in the very nature of things it can not be, because it will not do to say that because a man thinks he ought to have $600 if we give him three hundred, that is worse than nothing. We do not propose that any postmaster shall be cut off entirely unless the Postmaster-General on investigation finds that no sum is needed for him. We simply propose in entering on this character of expenditure, for the first year an experiment to some extent, as it necessarily must be in regard to its details, that it shall be conducted within certain limits, that it shall not be entered upon in an extravagant way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kansas to ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment?

Mr. PLUMB. I do.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is present, and I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but I have transferred the pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] and vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT]; but the pair of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] has been transferred, so that he and I can vote.

Mr. KENNA. I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. I am paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. MANDERSON. I have arranged with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] to transfer my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. PASCO. My pair having been transferred, I vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum being ascertained by the announcement of the state of the vote, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Upon the roll-call under the order of the Chair in the existing state of facts, will it be in order, then, to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms, without a motion for a renewed call of the Senate, to request the attendance of absent Senators?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion would be required.

Mr. HARRIS. Is it not in order to make that motion now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed.

Mr. BECK. I should like to make a suggestion, if I may be allowed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from Kentucky, by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BECK. A quorum has answered if pairs are broken. I am content that this may be considered as passed.

Mr. HARRIS. By unanimous consent it may be done, as there is evidently a quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Less than a quorum of the Senate can do nothing, even by unanimous consent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the roll be called.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Harris,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Saulsbury,

Coke,	Hale,	Reagan,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call of the roll discloses the presence of 49 Senators. A quorum being present, further proceedings under the roll-call will be dispensed with. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays and simply ask for a viva voce vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Chair have the amendment again reported?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after the word "class," at the end of line 24, the Committee on Appropriations report to strike out "six hundred and fifty thousand six hundred and seven" and insert "four hundred and fifty thousand;" so as to read:

For rent, light, and fuel to post-offices of the third class, $450,000.

Mr. COKE. I inquire if it requires unanimous consent to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I ask the Senator from Kansas to let us again consider lines 19, 20, and 21. I think perhaps there has been a mistake in striking out that clause. I was inquiring into it and I find it is authorized by statute, as will be seen by reference to section 3863 of the Revised Statutes, which reads:

SEC. 3863. Whenever unusual business accrues at any post-office the Postmaster-General shall make a special order allowing reasonable compensation for clerical service and a proportionate increase of salary to the postmaster during the time of such extraordinary business.

The provision in lines 19, 20, and 21 allows a few thousand dollars, and the provision grew up, as I am advised at the Post-Office Department and by a report which I hold in my hand, from a state of facts like this: In Southern California and in portions of Florida and at some of the watering-places there is a great demand for postal service during certain portions of the year. The business is so great that the post-office force is too small, and there is a necessity for temporary employment and for additional service in order to afford anything like accommodations at all. In the report of the Postmaster-General, he says:

I call attention also to the fact that while the law contemplates provision for extraordinary cases of such increase of population or of business as are so common in this country, and for cases where at different seasons great numbers of visitors at favorite resorts overwhelm the ordinary means and facilities of mail service, no appropriation is usually made for the purposes contemplated by that law.

And he asks that $50,000 be allowed. I do not make a point on this matter, but I state the information which I have received showing that the item is correct. I think it would be well to allow that to be done to meet cases of the sort I have mentioned.

Mr. PLUMB. There is ample authority under the preceding paragraph. There has never been any sum in gross heretofore appropriated for this special purpose.

There was an immense rush of business at one time at a post-office in Colorado, and the Department dealt with the question under the ordinary provisions of the existing law. The Senator will see the danger, I think, of entering on this class of appropriation now if he examines the paragraph carefully. The law now is:

SEC. 3863. Whenever unusual business accrues at any post-office the Postmaster-General shall make a special order allowing reasonable compensation for clerical service, and a proportionate increase of salary to the postmaster during the time of such extraordinary business.

That would open up a very wide door if this provision contemplates an increase of salary, as it does; and it will only be another step until we shall have the salaries of postmasters adjusted from day to day and from week to week and from month to month, according as there may be an accidental or temporary increase of business.

The Senator from Kentucky will understand, I think, that under the preceding paragraph the Postmaster-General can allow clerk-hire for a month or two months or three months or for an entire year.

Mr. BECK. If that is understood I will not press the matter.

Mr. PLUMB. There is no trouble about that; and if he thinks that the amount appropriated in the preceding paragraph should be larger I will not object to increasing it; but I call attention to the law which is the foundation of this provision of the Revised Statutes. Section 90 of chapter 335 of the statutes of 1872 is as follows:

That whenever, by reason of the presence of a military or naval force near any post-office, or from any other cause, unusual business accrues thereat, the Postmaster-General shall make a special order allowing reasonable compensation for clerical service, and a proportionate increase of salary to the postmaster during the time of such extraordinary business.

It was in the time of the emergency of the location of military force, whereby the ordinary postal force was not sufficient, that the provision was to apply.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to tell the Senator having the bill in charge and the Senate how the Department met the question in one case in Colorado, which has been alluded to.

The office was a $12 office. It grew suddenly to be a very large office. Fortunately for the public, the postmaster was a man of wealth, and he paid out the first year he could get his accounts arranged $7,000 for clerk-hire, which has never been repaid him to this day, and he still has the claim, and he will probably transmit that claim to his great-grandchildren.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 2, line 26, at the end of the clause appropriating $450,000 "for rent, light, and fuel to post-offices of the third class," to add the following proviso:

Provided, That there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post-office for rent a sum in excess of $300, nor more than $60 for fuel and lights in any one year, nor shall any contract be made calling for the payment of either rent or fuel or lights beyond the fiscal year 1889.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, to strike out the clause from line 33 to line 35, inclusive, as follows:

The Postmaster-General in his discretion may hereafter allow rent, light, and fuel at offices of the third class, in the same manner he does now at offices of the first and second classes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, on page 3, after line 39, to insert:

For the additional expense of the free-delivery service made necessary by the act entitled "An act to limit the hours that letter-carriers in cities shall be employed per day," approved May 24, 1888, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under head of "Office Superintendent Foreign Mails," in section 1, on page 5, after line 105, to insert:

To provide more efficient mail service between the United States and Central and South America and the West Indies, $800,000. To promote the purposes of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to contract with American built and registered steam-ships for the transportation of the United States mails to such ports in said countries as in his judgment will best subserve said postal service. Said contracts shall be for a period of not less than five nor more than ten years, at a compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth.

Mr. BECK. When the bill gets to the Senate I presume I can move to strike out that paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can then have a vote on agreeing or disagreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be reserved in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, on page 5, after line 118, to insert:

The Postmaster-General shall cause schedules to be furnished by the contractors stating dates of departure of steam-ships from the United States six months in advance, and in case of unreasonable failure of any steam-ship or steam-ships to depart with mails on the date or dates therein stated, the Postmaster-General may withhold from the contractor or contractors as penalty one-half the contract price for said trip or trips, and in the event of continued failure to depart on dates stated in the schedule the Postmaster-General may annul the contract or contracts, or the same may be terminated by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. I now offer an amendment on my own responsibility, to which I call the attention of the Senate, it being legislation and subject to a point of order, which I hope will not be made:

That hereafter the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, and scions shall be charged at the rate of 1 cent for each 8 ounces or fraction thereof, subject in all other respects to the existing law.

That is the provision of a bill which has already passed the Senate, except that in order to accommodate the bill to the Canadian rates of postage it was made 1 cent for each 4 ounces. I understand that the Post-Office Committee, except for the Canadian rate, would have made the amount 8 ounces, and I propose that figure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator indicate where the clause is to come in?

Mr. PLUMB. Between lines 102 and 103.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, between lines 102 and 103, it is proposed to insert:

That hereafter the postage on seeds, cuttings, bulbs, roots, and scions shall be charged at the rate of 1 cent for each 8 ounces or fraction thereof, subject in all other respects to the existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is a separate vote desired on any amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BECK. I desire a separate vote on the amendment under the head of "Office Superintendent Foreign Mails," inserting the clauses from lines 106 to 129 inclusive, what I call—I do not know what others call it—the subsidy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the other amendments be concurred in?

The amendments not reserved were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment reserved by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that I am afraid that there perhaps would not be a quorum developed if the yeas and nays were taken. This is an old contest that we have had over and over again, and perhaps we have all made a record on it. Many of us have resisted legislation of this sort on appropriation bills, but it is generally carried in the Senate. Fearing that there might not be a quorum developed by a call of the yeas and nays, as I suppose there is not much danger of its passing the House, I believe I shall be willing to trust the matter to future action between the two Houses, and I will not ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COKE. As the yeas and nays are not to be called on this clause, I desire to put it on record that I am opposed to it.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to make the same statement. I will not call for the yeas and nays, because it would involve a call of the Senate, but I shall vote against concurring in the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote against the amendment. If there was a yea-and-nay vote my vote would be recorded against it. I make the statement because the yeas and nays are not to be called.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am opposed to this amendment, and I am heartily against it as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to state that but for the fact that I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STOCKBRIDGE] I should vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole be concurred in?

Mr. BROWN. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Secretary read the words to be inserted, as follows:

To provide more efficient mail service between the United States and Central and South America and the West Indies, $800,000. To promote the purposes of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized and directed to contract with American built and registered steamships for the transportation of the United States mails to such ports in said countries as in his judgment will best subserve said postal service. Said contracts shall be for a period of not less than five nor more than ten years, at a compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth.

The Postmaster-General shall cause schedules to be furnished by the contractors stating dates of departure of steam-ships from the United States six months in advance, and in case of unreasonable failure of any steam-ship or steam-ships to depart with mails on the date or dates therein stated, the Postmaster-General may withhold from the contractor or contractors as penalty one-half the contract price for said trip or trips, and in the event of continued failure to depart on dates stated in the schedule the Postmaster-General may annul the contract or contracts, or the same may be terminated by Congress.

Mr. BROWN. I think the amendment a wise one, and if the yeas and nays are called I shall vote for it with pleasure.

Mr. BATE. I wish to state that if the yeas and nays were called I should vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment having been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole, the question is on concurring in the same in the Senate.

The amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

UNITED PEORIAS AND MIAMIES.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (H. R. 8074) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in Indian Territory. I move that the proposed amendment be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate for printing 5,000 copies of Miscellaneous Document No. 109; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

SEACOAST DEFENSES.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before submitting the motion the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

STATE DEFENSES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 11th instant, a report of the Secretary of State, to whom said resolution was addressed, together with a copy of the letter addressed by William H. Seward, Secretary of State, to the governors of certain States of the Union, under date of October 14, 1861, as described in said resolution.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, June 14, 1888.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL DAM.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3025) to provide for the reconstruction of the Government dam at the Rock Island arsenal, and for the immediate construction of a temporary dam to furnish water-power for said arsenal.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read at length.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill has already been read at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be again read.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $275,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the reconstruction of the Government dam at the Rock Island arsenal, and for the immediate construction of a temporary dam to furnish water-power for said arsenal and to be used as a coffer-dam when the permanent dam is reconstructed.

Mr. ALLISON. When the bill was under consideration a few days ago the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] desired that it might lie over, in order that he could make a further examination of the situation as respects the obligations of the Government to reconstruct this dam, and at his solicitation, unless he desires to make some remarks——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at my solicitation; at my suggestion.

Mr. ALLISON. At the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, I offer an amendment to the bill, which I think is a wise one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

The provisions of this act shall not be construed or held as importing or implying any obligation on the part of the United States to maintain said dam or works by reason of any obligation to said Moline Water-Power Company, leaving all questions of legal right and obligation as they existed before the passage of this act.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When this bill was up the other day I had a faint recollection of having heard of the matter before and of numerous difficulties that had existed, and I asked to have it laid over, which the Senator from Iowa very kindly and promptly agreed to do. I sent to the Secretary of War, on my own responsibility, an inquiry as to the view of the War Department about our situation there, both as it respected our contract obligations and the public interest, and I think it due to the Senator from Iowa, to the Secretary of War, and to the public interest that what the Secretary of War has said to me should go on the records of the Senate. I therefore ask that his letter and the letter of the Chief of Ordnance addressed to me in reply to mine be read.

It will be noticed or might be noticed by anybody who sees the letter of the Secretary of War to me, that it is unsigned; but that is a mere accident, a mere simple thing, that in signing his letters it was passed over. I think it due to the Senate to call attention to it, but I suppose it is his letter all the same. I ask that the Secretary read the letter of the Secretary of War and the report of the Chief of Ordnance in reply to my letter, so that they may appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letters will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, June 13, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant in reference to the bill now pending in the Senate to appropriate $275,000 for constructing a temporary dam, etc., at the Rock Island arsenal, and inquiring whether the United States is under any obligations to rebuild and keep up the dam as a matter of contract with the Moline Water-Power Company.

In reply I beg to invite attention to the inclosed report of the 13th instant, which has just been received from the Chief of Ordnance, and which seems to state the matter fully, and shows that the United States is under obligations to restore this dam.

Very respectfully,

_____,
Secretary of War.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
United States Senate.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 13, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to return Senator EDMUNDS's letter of the 11th instant, making inquiries about the destroyed dam at Rock Island arsenal, and to report:

Congress, April 19, 1864, authorized the appointment of a commission to adjust claims growing out of the action of the United States in taking possession of property at the Rock Island arsenal, etc. The commission recommended that the Moline Water-Power Company should convey to the United States the fee of the entire water-power, the United States to construct the water-power and give to the Moline Company in perpetuity, free of cost, one-fourth of all the power obtained, etc.

March 2, 1867, Congress authorized the Secretary of War to carry into effect the recommendations of the commissioners, etc. On August 20, 1867, the Acting Secretary of War, U. S. Grant, made an agreement with the Moline Water-Power Company, accordingly.

The recommendation of the commissioners, second section, is as follows:

"The Government to develop and maintain the power, so far as it can be done with the money heretofore appropriated and that which may hereafter be appropriated by Congress for the purpose."

The agreement made by General Grant, Acting Secretary of War, is as follows:

"* * * and which development, together with the maintenance of that power, is to be done by the United States out of the appropriation applicable to those purposes, and of any future appropriation that may be made applicable to the same."

It is understood by this bureau that the water-power has to be maintained by the United States out of appropriations made by Congress, and it is now believed that the reconstruction of the dam recently destroyed should be done under appropriations to be made by Congress.

To the second inquiry, I have to state that the object of the United States developing the water-power was to economically run the many work-shops at the arsenal. "The public interests are concerned in rebuilding the dam independent of any contract obligation, etc.," in this, that next winter and spring the floating ice rushing through the gap will endanger the two Government bridges that join the island with Moline and Rock Island, and which cost in the aggregate $200,000. Besides this, unless the dam is reconstructed, the introduction of steam-power will become a necessity, and while its first cost may be less, the saving of cost by the use of water would in a few years repay this present increased expenditure, and thereafter be a gain and economy to the United States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The Honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish simply to say that on an examination of the acts of Congress and the contracts made by General Grant, acting Secretary of War, with this company, my own opinion is that the United States is under no contract or other obligation to the Moline Water-Power Company to rebuild this dam, either morally or otherwise. Whether, if we do not rebuild it, the property should not be again surrendered to that company is another question that appeals to morals, aside from the question of this bill. But as the Secretary of War takes the responsibility of saying that the public interest requires the rebuilding of this dam, I am willing to let the bill go, with the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, suggested by myself, providing that no implication shall arise out of our doing this in respect of any future obligation about it, but to leave legal matters just as they stand.

It has been stated in one report to the War Department since this dam was carried away that these private mill-owners, etc., are to make a claim for damages against the United States for their stoppage of business since the dam has been carried away, and I suppose indefinitely until the dam is rebuilt and kept up in perpetuity for their advantage.

The acts of Congress have provided all the time that all these people had to require of the United States was just what they could get by appealing to the judgment of Congress for money to maintain the works, but being maintained as far as Congress thought it proper to maintain them, they were entitled to a quarter of the water, whatever it was; if it was up, they were entitled to a quarter of it; if it was half up they were entitled to a quarter of that, and so on. That is the fair, as I think, and legal construction of these contracts. But the Secretary of War says that the public interest, entirely apart from any contract question, requires this dam to be renewed. I take him, for the present purposes, at his word, and suppose that he understands what he is saying.

But it all seems to rest upon the question of our resorting to steam-power for public interests in keeping up that arsenal.

It appears in these very same papers that although the dam was up down to a very few weeks ago, we have a steam-power already introduced capable of doing all that is now required to be done for the public interest. If we have this great water-power essential to the interests of the United States, why we should have thought it advisable to resort to steam-power I confess I can not understand. It ought to be either steam-power or water-power. The water-power is adequate, as we all know, if that is the best way to use it, for all purposes at all times of the year; but in spite of that, at the expense of the United States, steam works have been introduced, which the reports show are now adequate to every present purpose of the United States. I confess I do not understand it.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the Senator whether he inquired as to the authority of General Grant when Secretary of War to make such a contract?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not inquire as to the authority of General Grant, as my friend inquires, to make the contract, because General Grant had the authority that he exercised precisely, because his contract with the water-power company referred specifically to the act of Congress, or joint resolution, which is an act of Congress, and the very same provision, that the water-power was to be developed to the extent of the then money that had been appropriated for that purpose, and afterwards was to be developed and maintained according to what Congress might appropriate for the purpose. The contract, therefore, was within the very letter of that act of authority, and that act of authority and the contract both rested in respect of the future upon what Congress should think it fit to do in regard to keeping up these works. It might happen, as we all know, in fifty years from now that there would be no necessity whatever for any public works at that place, and that they ought to be utterly abandoned, as from day to day we abandon military reservations and old arsenals and forts; and it would be a very strange state of things if the Congress of the United States had authorized anybody, as they have not, to make a perpetual engagement to keep up a water-power forever on the Mississippi River for the benefit of any private interests whatever. They have not done it.

So, as the Secretary of War says, though I can not understand it, that the public interest, merely for public purposes, requires this dam to be rebuilt, I am willing to let it go; but I want to let it go with the protest that I can not understand why we have been to the expense of introducing steam-power while we had the water-power, and secondly, why we should be considered by the War Department as bound forever to keep up this establishment for private interests.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand that the Senator from Vermont is for the bill with the amendment that has been proposed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not for it, but I acquiesce in it.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment was the result of his own suggestion. As to the suggestion he makes, that he does not understand why steam-power is used there now, I desire to say in answer that it is to meet exactly the emergency which now exists. Here is the dam that they were relying upon washed away. Suppose there was no steam in any of those buildings there, what would be the condition? The shops would have to shut up.

The fact is that there is but one of the buildings that has steam-power in it, and that may be all that is necessary for the time being to run the machinery of one of the buildings, but if any great emergency should come upon the country steam-power would have to be introduced into all of them, and if that were required it would cost the Government of the United States hundreds or thousands of dollars more to run them by steam than the appropriation to reconstruct this dam. So far as that is concerned I think that is a good answer to the Senator's statement.

Upon the general history of this matter, the men, or their predecessors, engaged in the conduct of private business at Rock Island were there before the arsenal was established. The water-power was established by themselves, at their own expense. They owned the land. They had constructed wing-dams. They had constructed whatever was necessary to give them all the water-power that they needed, and it was a much better water-power than they have to-day. Notwithstanding the amount of money which has been expended by the Government of the United States, the people there at Rock Island would be much better off if the Rock Island arsenal had never been established there or if they had never been interfered with in the water-power that they themselves established.

But the Government buys this arsenal ground and establishes the arsenal, which is probably the largest arsenal in this country, and I do not know but that it is as large as there is anywhere else in the world. To make the establishment there perfect, so that it could be operated to the best advantage, the Government comes along and says to the Moline Water-Power Company, "we want this land; we want to construct this dam; we want to construct these wings; we want to do whatever is necessary to establish this great arsenal." Those gentlemen had their rights there, and before the Government could do what it desired to do, under the rights existing between men, and between the people and the Government itself, contracts were entered into by which the Moline Water-Power Company was given a certain portion of the work, and it was agreed that the water-power should be developed, the dam constructed, and that the water-power should be maintained in perpetuity.

I am not going into a discussion of the technical force, or the language of the different statutes; but under the different statutes which have been enacted, General Grant made the first contract, General Rawlins made the second, and the third one has been made which is not in the records that have been published, all recognizing the fact that the Moline Water-Power Company had the right to the construction of the dam by the Government, and the development of the water-power and the maintenance of it, the Government giving the Moline Water-Power Company a certain portion of the water. That is all there is in it.

Aside from any private interest, I want the Senators of the United States to understand that this dam is not sought for simply because the Moline Water-Power Company have any interest in it; it is sought for because the Government of the United States has an interest in it, not perhaps for the immediate use of all the water that the construction of the dam would give, because there is not very much work going on there; but as a matter of fact, if the dam is not constructed between now and next spring, the Government of the United States, nine chances out of ten, will lose two bridges which have been constructed there by the flow of ice down that wing of the river, which will take those bridges out unquestionably, if the dam is not constructed so as to make the back-water there a sort of pond where there will be no rapid flow.

That is all there is in this case. I do not desire to take up further time about it, because I understand the Senator who has been opposing it heretofore is satisfied with the adoption of the bill with the amendment which he has suggested.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ought to say that I am not altogether satisfied, but that I acquiesce in the superior judgment of my friends from Iowa and Illinois, with this security against any implication arising from the passage of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the bill is disposed of I desire to say a few words respecting it. I do not claim, nor do I think the Congress of the United States ought for a moment to admit that we are bound in perpetuity to maintain this water-power. It is not upon that theory that I advocate the reconstruction of this dam; but I say that when the Government of the United States fails to maintain this water-power we are under a moral if not a legal obligation to return the water-power to the company that deeded it to us in fee-simple.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So much of it as was theirs.

Mr. ALLISON. So much of it as was theirs. The Moline Water-Power Company claim to hold all the water-power on the eastern end of Rock Island. The Government of the United States away back in 1864 and 1866 claimed that it held a portion of that power, and when the Rock Island arsenal was about to be constructed it became an important question to the Government of the United States whether it should own this water-power in partnership with anybody. Before a great amount of money was expended at the arsenal, the Government of the United States made a contract whereby the Moline Water-Power Company surrendered to the Government of the United States all their claim to that water-power and gave it a deed in fee-simple, and not only did that, but agreed to furnish it with a sufficient amount of land to develop the water-power for the Government of the United States.

The Government expended in the development of that water-power from $800,000 to $900,000 during a series of years. When appropriation after appropriation had been made for the construction of the Rock Island arsenal it was claimed, I believe, by one or two engineers that the Government of the United States had made a bad bargain with the Moline Water-Power Company, and that it would be wiser and better to use as a motive power in the running of the arsenal steam rather than the utilization of this great water-power, which is without a rival, in my judgment, in the United States, or perhaps in the world. A commission of engineers of high character, under, I believe, a suggestion in an appropriation act, certainly under the suggestion of the Secretary of War, was sent out to the arsenal for the purpose of reporting to Congress whether we should not surrender the water-power back again and use steam for the purposes of the arsenal. The report of those engineers, which is to be found in the printed documents, recommended and urged that the Government at all hazards should hold and maintain the water-power, as the utilization of the water-power would save the Government $100,000 a year by means of its use rather than by the use of steam.

I think the Secretary of War states truthfully that it is wise in the public interest to reconstruct this dam, because if we do not reconstruct it we abandon the water-power, and necessarily the Moline Water-Power Company would resume its rights under the owning of the power.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator will allow me, I will suggest that the Moline Water-Power Company would be perfectly helpless if the Government simply abandoned the work, unless the Government should take some action to give them back what they were entitled to and what they possessed prior to its being taken by the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. So they would; I agree to that. Therefore I say unless the Government does reconstruct this dam, it is, through some official source, bound in honor to make some arrangement whereby this water-power shall be abandoned on the part of the Government, and that is all there is in this question.

I desire to say this much because, having practical knowledge of the whole situation at Rock Island, I believe that the Government, under no circumstances, should surrender this water-power. I know there are people in certain sections of this country who have an idea that there should not be a great arsenal located in the heart of the continent, but that the arsenals should be located on the seaboard or on the Gulf and in that neighborhood. We have spent $8,000,000 in the construction of the Rock Island arsenal. We have ground there belonging to the Government miles in extent, an island in the Mississippi River, with this great water-power.

I venture the statement that if the Government shall exist fifty years from now, instead of this arsenal being abandoned by the Government it will be the great arsenal of the United States of America, with its 200,000,000 of people. It is the best point for the distribution of every article that the Government may choose to make as respects the maintaining of its armies either with munitions of war or with guns So I think when this question comes up it should be maintained that the Government of the United States intends to continue the arsenal there, perfected by appropriations from year to year. We have appropriated money for this arsenal every year since 1866, so that we have now invested in it, aside from this water-power, between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000.

I only desired to say this much in order that it might not be for a moment considered that the Government intends either to abandon the arsenal or to abandon the water-power.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Vermont referred to the fact that persons are claiming damages on account of this dam having been washed away. The basis of his remarks, I think, is founded upon a letter written by a man in charge of the arsenal. So far as I am concerned, I have heard of no citizen there, no man interested in the water-works as a private citizen, saying anything at all about believing that he could recover damages on account of the dam having been washed away and its remaining so until it is reconstructed by the Government. I have heard nothing on that subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In response to the suggestion of my friend from Illinois, I read from Executive Document No. 177, of the present Congress, first session, a paragraph from a letter addressed to the Chief of Ordnance of the Army of the United States by T. G. Baylor, colonel of ordnance, commanding at Rock Island arsenal:

> Our operations at the arsenal can go on with the steam-power already provided, but the Moline Water-Power Company will doubtless claim damages against the Government for the loss of this water-power, for which they were in a great measure dependent for their manufactures, until this power is restored to them.

I simply wish to say that I deny, as one of the persons concerned in taking care of the money of the people, any obligation on the part of the United States in any such respect, and I do not wish anybody at the Moline water-works, or anywhere else, to suppose that by the passage of this bill any obligation in a legal or moral point of view in respect of rebuilding this dam exists. So far as my vote is concerned. I allow the bill to go through because the Secretary of War says that the public interest, apart from all contract obligations, requires it to be done. I have great doubt about that, but as I have much confidence in this Administration I will take it to be so.

Mr. REAGAN. Whatever appropriation is necessary for the preservation or promotion of utility of the arsenal at Rock Island I shall very cheerfully vote for; but our experience about the Government making water-power for private persons in this country, particularly in that portion of the Union, is not such as to recommend additional measures for that purpose. It is only necessary to refer to St. Anthony's Falls and to the water-power built at an enormous expense by the Government for private parties on the Fox River. Millions of dollars have been spent there, more than $2,000,000 at least, to furnish water-power to private parties for manufacturing establishments, mills, etc. I understand, of course, that this was done upon the supposition that the water ways of the country must be rebuilt.

The Senator from Illinois referred, as one of his arguments for the restoration of this water-power, to the fact that if the dam was not rebuilt the flow of ice might sweep away two bridges there. I do not know about both the bridges, but I understand that one of the bridges was largely built at Government expense, and that private parties charge the public $5 a car, empty or loaded, for cars passing over that bridge, although it is a bridge built by public money. It seems to me that we ought to understand just how far we are going in these cases where public money is expended for private purposes.

It appears that the Government can get along with the steam-power there, but that the Moline Water-Power Company needs this water-power. If the Government has obligated itself in perpetuity to preserve the water-power for that private company, I can only say that perhaps it had better stand by the unfortunate contract; but from what I can learn of the position assumed by the Senator from Vermont, and I believe his position to be correct as far as I understand the facts, the Government was only obligated to build the dam and preserve the water-power so far as Congress might be willing to make appropriations for that purpose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what the old law and the contracts provide.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not heard any paper presented that shows either a law or a contract by which the Government was bound in perpetuity to preserve the water-power for the company. I should dislike to have to vote against a measure recommended by the Secretary of War, but I must say that, without some better showing than has been made, I shall feel bound to vote against the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I only want to correct the Senator from Texas as to the bridges. There are three or four bridges across the river, two of which belong to the Government. The bridge to which the Senator refers, where they have been charging heretofore—I do not think they are doing it now—is an entirely different structure. That bridge has no connection with the Government of the United States whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE FISHERIES TREATY.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a concurrent resolution of the Senate which was passed by the House of Representatives with an amendment, and to recommend that the Senate concur in the House amendment. I ask that that action be now taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 5,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations (Miscellaneous Document No. 109, first session Fiftieth Congress), being the report relating to the fisheries treaty, together with the views of the minority, be printed for the use of the Senate, in connection with the message of the President, dated February 20, 1888, and the proposed treaty with Great Britain, and the map of the fishing limits prepared at the Hydrographic Office.

The amendment of the House of Representatives was to add to the resolution:

And further, that 10,000 copies of said documents be printed for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask how many copies that gives to the Senate?

Mr. MANDERSON. Five thousand to the Senate and 10,000 to the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move to take up the bill (S. 610) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore, growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812. If it shall give rise to one moment's debate, I will withdraw the motion to take it up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that involves a broad subject. I am sorry to object.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know, but it involves a very wide expenditure and grave responsibility, and I do not think in a thin Senate at this time of the evening we ought to take it up.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. As I said, if there is any inclination to debate the matter, after its having been here for about ten years, of course I do not want to intrude the question upon the Senate at this time. I did think that the Senate was prepared to pass it. If the Senator from Vermont wants to discuss it, and has any reasons to advance why the bill should not pass, as a matter of course I shall yield to him, so that he may have more time than the clock would seem to allow him this evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say that this matter, as I am advised, on the report of a bill by Senator Pearce, of Maryland, twenty-five or thirty or more years ago, was supposed to have been finally settled in adjusting the claims of all the States and everybody else about the war of 1812. There may be merit in this renewed proposition, but I do not think it is the time or the hour to go into the consideration of a matter which involves so much, with great respect to my friend from Virginia.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I will state to the Senator that he is mistaken in saying that there was a settlement as to all the States. There are two States and one city concerned. However, I will adhere to my proposition and not insist on the consideration of the bill, as the Senator from Vermont objects.

ALVARADO CEMETERY ASSOCIATION OF GEORGETOWN, COLO.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senate to take up a bill that will not occasion any debate. It is Order of Business 1374, being the bill (S. 2022) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Alvarado Cemetery Association of Georgetown, Colo.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported with an amendment in section 2, line 4, after the word "only," to strike out "all valuable mineral lodes and mineral deposits to be reserved to the United States;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior be authorized to confirm the title to the said described tract of land to the Alvarado Cemetery Association, and to cause a patent to be issued for said land to be used for cemetery purposes only.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill was intended evidently to provide that this land should be used only for cemetery purposes. I think that there ought to be added a clause that if it shall not be used for these purposes or shall cease to be used for these purposes, it shall revert to the United States.

Mr. TELLER. This piece of land, covering about 12 acres, for thirty or thirty-five years has been the burial place for the town. It never can be used for any other purpose, and it never will be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that statement I have no objection to make.

Mr. TELLER. I know the ground.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 18, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I think the Journal states that leave of absence was granted to me for two weeks. That is a mistake. It should be for two days.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The Journal was then approved.

IMPROVEMENTS AT FORT MYER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with accompanying map and papers, an estimate from the Secretary of War of an appropriation to pay owners for improvements made on the Fort Myer military reservation, Arlington, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

AARON FRIEDHEIM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2882) to pay Aaron Friedheim the rebate due him under the act of March 3, A. D. 1883.

Mr. McRAE. I ask the present consideration of that bill by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker. It is but a small matter, involving some $20 of a tobacco tax not refunded by mistake——

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $22.07 be paid to Aaron Friedheim, of Camden, Ouachita County, Arkansas, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the rebate due him under the act of March 3, A. D. 1883, of taxes paid on tobacco, snuff, cigars, and cigarettes, the claim for which having been lost in the transmission thereof.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, read three times, and passed.

Mr. McRAE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and ask a conference thereon.

Mr. McMILLIN. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I object.

BUSINESS BY UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That after the reading of the Journal and the reference of business on the Speaker's table each day, there shall be one-half hour allowed for the consideration of measures on the Calendar by unanimous consent, and in recognizing members to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of business the Speaker shall proceed as follows: He shall call five names, beginning at the first name on the roll, and when they shall have been called he shall then call five names, beginning at the last name on the roll, alternating in this manner until every member shall have been called: Provided, That no member who has once been called shall be again recognized until every name shall have been called: And provided further, That the Speaker shall not entertain any motion for unanimous consent to consider any measure except during the half hour above provided.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that the demand for the regular order be withdrawn.

Mr. BRYCE. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief personal statement.

Mr. McMILLIN. We will have to take a half day to discuss the very important question before us.

PRINTING REPORT ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I offer a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee have considered the Senate concurrent resolution to print 5,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations (Miscellaneous Document No. 109, first session Fiftieth Congress), being the report relating to the fisheries treaty, together with the views of the minority, for the use of the Senate in connection with the message of the President dated February 20, 1888, and the proposed treaty with Great Britain, and the map of the fishing limits proposed at the Hydrographic Office.

And I am directed to report same to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass with an amendment, as follows: "And that 10,000 copies of said miscellaneous document be also printed for the use of the House of Representatives."

Amend by adding to the resolution the following words: "and further, that 10,000 copies of said document be printed for the use of the House of Representatives."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Regular order.

Mr. BRYCE. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. BELMONT. I did not understand it was insisted upon. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] will agree to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has renewed his demand for the regular order since the gentleman from New York made his statement. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 10190) providing for an Assistant Secretary of War; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RESPONSIBILITY OF ENLISTED MEN, SIGNAL CORPS.

ALFRED PLEASONTON.

Mr. HOOKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 2972) authorizing the President to appoint and retire Alfred Pleasonton with the rank and grade of colonel, with the recommendation that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent that this report be now acted on.

The SPEAKER. That can not be done under the rules in this hour, as the regular order has again been demanded.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I will ask that it be laid aside for the present and I will call it up when the hour is over. I will call it up hereafter and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had better withdraw it, then, for the present.

Mr. HOOKER. I withdraw it. I want to make the report now. I would like to ask the parliamentary question whether it is not proper to make the report now and ask unanimous consent hereafter for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. It will go to the Calendar under the rules of the House if made now. The Chair will state, however, that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] can call it up from the Calendar just as well as in any other way.

E. S. ROWLAND.

Mr. SEYMOUR, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8581) for the relief of E. S. Rowland; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARY M. ORD.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 2663) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary M. Ord; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MAKING MAY 30 A HOLIDAY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LEE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 10053) making May 30 a holiday in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of regular and select committees for reports.

SCHOOL LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. PAYSON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 1782) to authorize the leasing of the school and university lands in the Territory of Wyoming, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRYCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. McMILLIN. I call for the regular order, and I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills raising revenue.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report.

Mr. BRYCE. I ask the gentleman to withhold his report for a few minutes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has demanded the regular order, and I wish to present this report. It will occupy only a few minutes.

Mr. BRYCE. But I made my request first.

GOVERNMENT DAM AT ROCK ISLAND.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] presents a privileged report. The report will be read.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 20, 1888.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the House of Representatives as soon as practicable whatever information may be in possession of the War Department in relation to the destruction of the Government dam at Rock Island arsenal by the recent floods in the Mississippi River, and as to the damages resulting therefrom, and the effect of the destruction of said dam upon the operation of the arsenal and the factories and sawmills at Moline and Rock Island; and also to submit to the House of Representatives without delay an estimate of the amount necessary for the reconstruction of said dam and for the construction of a temporary dam which will restore the water-power and log harbor, which can be used as a coffer-dam when the permanent dam is reconstructed.

The committee report the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I have reported that resolution back with the recommendation that it do pass, in obedience to the wishes of the Committee on Military Affairs. Since that action was taken by the committee, however, I have been informed that the Secretary of War has already furnished the House the information called for, and that it is now before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GEST. Mr. Speaker, I think the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is mistaken in regard to the action of the Secretary of War in this matter, and I would like to see this resolution adopted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, I have been informed by several gentlemen that all the information contemplated in the resolution has been already furnished by the Secretary and is now before the Committee on Appropriations. If that is true, it is useless to pass this resolution. If it is not true, then I shall urge the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GEST. Well, I do not understand that it is true.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then for the present I will withdraw the resolution.

Mr. STEELE. Let the resolution go over until the facts are ascertained.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes. I will withdraw it for the present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRYCE. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief personal statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state again to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRYCE] that the regular order has been demanded by several gentlemen, and unless that demand is withdrawn the Chair can not recognize any gentleman to make a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I demanded the regular order; but I am willing that the gentleman's request shall be entertained.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] has made a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to yielding to the gentleman [Mr. BRYCE] if he does not occupy more than five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York state his request?

Mr. BRYCE. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief personal statement which will not occupy more than five minutes.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BRYCE. The member from Nevada [Mr. WOODBURN] went out of his way last Monday to reopen his attack against Mr. Hewitt.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to the fact that the gentleman from Nevada is not now in his seat?

Mr. BRYCE. I have sent him word of my purpose, sir.

He threatened at the time to continue this attack later. I have waited three days for him to do so and to make good his assertion. He has failed to do it; and I deem it a matter of justice to the mayor of New York—an ex-member of this House—as well as to myself to now call the attention of this House to Mr. WOODBURN'S latest utterances. I quote from his speech of last Monday, in which he says:

I ask this House to construe the letter written by the British minister to Mr. Hewitt on the 19th day of December, 1884, in which he states that Mr. Hewitt did call upon him to make an explanation, etc.

To what letter does the member from Nevada refer? Is it the letter of January 14, inserted in the RECORD of May 9? If so, Mr. WOODBURN has either failed to read this letter or he has grossly perverted its truth by misquoting it. In what part of this letter does Mr. West state that Mr. Hewitt called upon him to make an explanation? Mr. West makes no reference to the purpose of Mr. Hewitt's visit at all. It was accidental. Let the Clerk read this letter, preceded by Mr. WOODBURN'S perversion of the letter, in order to bring into full focus his glaring misstatement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WOODBURN'S statement in the RECORD of June 12, 1888, is as follows:

"I ask this House to construe the letter written by the British minister to Mr. Hewitt on the 19th day of December, 1884, in which he [the British minister?] says that Mr. Hewitt did call upon him to make an explanation," etc.

The British minister's letter:

"BRITISH LEGATION, WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1884.

"DEAR MR. HEWITT: In reply to your note of yesterday asking me whether, in the course of a social visit you were kind enough to pay me some days ago, you said or did anything which could be construed as an apology for your action in moving the resolution in the O'Donnell case, I have only to say I did not regard what you said to me in the light of an apology for the resolution, but an explanation of the peculiar circumstances which prompted it on your part in the interest of the friendly relations which exist between the countries.

"This impression was moreover strengthened by your allusion to the moderate language, in your opinion, of the resolution which you gave as a reason why you thought the request for delay in execution of the sentence should be granted, and by your saying that other resolutions less considerate in form had been proposed to you, and, as you were informed, would have been offered if you had not framed one so satisfactory to both sides of the House as not to meet with a single objection, which would have defeated it. I may add that I could not presume there was any evidence, from what you said, of any want of sincerity on your part in moving the resolution in question.

"Believe me, yours, very truly,

"L. SACKVILLE WEST."

Mr. BRYCE. I ask this House whether there is a word, a sentence, or a line in Mr. West's letter going to show that Mr. Hewitt called upon him, as the member from Nevada has stated, to make an explanation in the line of an apology. If any further proof is necessary to show that Mr. Hewitt's visit was purely accidental, I will read this letter from the gentleman who accompanied Mr. Hewitt on that occasion:

SUDBURY HALL, DERBY, February 7, 1884.

MY DEAR MR. HEWITT: Some one has forwarded me extracts from the American papers in which they seem to have made capital for political purposes out of the visit you were unfortunate enough to have accompanied me in to Mr. West when I was with you at Washington. As you never would have gone to see Mr. West at all that day if it had not been for one of the embassy coming in to call on me, they must have drawn very considerably on imagination to invent the story I read, of your purposely visiting our representative to explain that your resolution about O'Donnell was only intended as a sop to the Irish party in America, and no attention need be paid to it. I can not say that I heard anything of such a conversation, but the invention does credit to the ability of your opponents.

Yours, truly,

VERNON.

The SPEAKER. The five minutes allowed to the gentleman from New York have expired.

Mr. BRYCE. I ask only two minutes more. I will finish in that time. This is a matter in which I am personally interested.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will that conclude the reference to this proceeding?

Mr. BRYCE. That will conclude it, and, so far as I am concerned, I have no desire to allude to the subject again.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYCE. If the member from Nevada doubts the veracity of the writer of this letter, as he formerly did that of the British minister, I will refer him to the leader of his own party, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], who, I understand, is personally acquainted with Lord Vernon, who wrote this letter, and who, I believe, sent him the newspaper extracts that inspired the letter.

This evidence which I have produced is of eye and ear witnesses, and would be held as conclusive by any court of justice. If therefore the member from Nevada still further persists in his misstatements, I will leave him in the situation in which he has placed himself—a position I for one do not envy, but for which he has only himself to blame.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue measures.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Pending that motion, I move that when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be limited to thirty minutes.

CORRECTION.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a question of privilege. I would like to know the state of the case with regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] at line 40, page 3, of the tariff bill. I wish to know whether that amendment was agreed to or disagreed to yesterday.

The SPEAKER. What is the page of the RECORD?

Mr. STEELE. Page 5679; but the amendment refers to line 40, page 3, of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Of course the present occupant of the chair does not preside in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but the memorandum kept at the Clerk's desk shows that the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEELE. The RECORD shows that it was disagreed to:

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The RECORD is erroneous then.

The SPEAKER. It will be corrected.

Mr. STEELE. Another point, Mr. Speaker; I had made the point that there was no quorum. The vote, as announced by the Chair, was 85 for and 67 against the amendment. There was no withdrawal of the point that there was no quorum; and, consequently, that point not having been given up——

Mr. MCMILLIN. The Chair announced the result; and the question of "no quorum" was not insisted upon.

Mr. STEELE. The question of "no quorum" had been insisted upon; and the point was not withdrawn.

Mr. MCMILLIN. A quorum was insisted upon, as I understand, for the purpose only of getting tellers; and tellers were ordered. The tellers reported; and, as the RECORD shows, there was no further insistance upon the point.

Mr. STEELE. If less than a quorum can do business, that motion was agreed to; otherwise not.

The SPEAKER. Of course the present occupant of the chair can make no ruling on any question as to proceedings in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. That is a matter which only the Committee of the Whole itself can deal with.

Mr. STEELE. Further, it would appear by the RECORD that Mr. GALLINGER was recognized as insisting upon the point of "no quorum." The Chair looked at me, recognized "the gentleman from Indiana," and I made the point. I stated that the letter which I presented on this question was so forcible and so much to the point that I could not add to it, and would not take up the time of the House. That does not appear either.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the RECORD to be corrected except in that particular about which there is a disagreement as to the action of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Of course the Committee of the Whole must dispose of that question, if brought up.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and, pending that motion, moves that all debate on the paragraph under consideration and amendments thereto be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. I hardly think that thirty minutes' debate on this question is sufficient time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But we spent two hours and a quarter on it yesterday, at least.

Mr. BURROWS. I know, but this is a very important portion of the bill, and a very important industry. It seems to me that debate ought not to be limited, and certainly not to so short a time as that. Several gentlemen desire to be heard on this side.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think that, with the debate we have already had, the time I have suggested is ample.

Mr. REED. I think you had better say an hour.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am willing to compromise and make it forty minutes.

Mr. REED. Let us have an hour; I do not know that all that time will be occupied.

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well; I will not be captious.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman then modifies his motion, and moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto shall not exceed one hour.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair).

THE TARIFF.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Iron or steel sheets, or plates, or taggers iron, coated with tin or lead, or with a mixture of which these metals are a component part, by the dipping or any other process, and commercially known as tin-plates, terne plates, and taggers tin.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] moves to strike out this paragraph. The Chair is of opinion that that is the pending amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. I have proposed an amendment, which I presume will take precedence of that, to add the words "two and two-tenths cents a pound;" in other words, to place this upon the dutiable list at that rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that amendment as being strictly in order now. The present occupant of the chair was not present when the amendment was proposed.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania indicated his purpose to move the amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. For the purpose of relieving any embarrassment that the amendment may cause at this time, I will withdraw it for the present, but give notice that I will offer it hereafter when we reach the dutiable list.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be withdrawn, if there be no objection. The Chair would have been compelled to hold, however, that the amendment was not in order at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out from this paragraph the words "and taggers tin."

Mr. Chairman, in the report of the proceedings of the St. Louis convention which renominated Mr. Cleveland, I find the following—

Mr. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, under instructions from the committee on resolutions, offered the following resolution:

"Resolved, That this convention hereby indorses and recommends the early passage of the bill for the reduction of the revenue now pending in the House of Representatives"— which was adopted.

I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read the first response of the workingmen of this country to this action.

The Clerk read as follows:

LABOR ON THE TARIFF QUESTION—MILLS'S BILL DENOUNCED BY THE AMALGAMATED ASSOCIATION OF IRON AND STEEL WORKERS.

PITTSBURGH, June 13.

The national convention of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, representing over twenty thousand skilled iron workers, to-day took a decided stand on the tariff question by the unanimous adoption of the following resolution:

"Whereas there has been introduced, and now under discussion before Congress, a bill known as the Mills bill, for the reduction of the present tariff on customs duties, and thereby put a check on the prosperity of this our beloved country in favor of foreign countries, especially England; and

"Whereas we as workingmen know that any reduction on the present tariff would menace the wages of those who earn their living by the sweat of their brow; and

"Whereas there is joy among the ill-paid workingmen of Europe and joy among the members of the English Cobden Club because they hope to obtain control of the market of this Republic: Therefore, as representatives of the iron and steel workers of the United States, in convention assembled, representing New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Wisconsin, Alabama, and other States in this Union,

"Be it resolved, That we are in favor of the sentiment 'America for Americans,' native and naturalized, and we indorse the words of Daniel Webster, who, fifty-one years ago, said if the people can obtain fair compensation for their labor they will have good houses, good clothing, good food, and the means of educating their children; labor will be cheerful and the people happy.

"Resolved, That in our judgment the citizens and industries of this country can not be protected in any better way than by placing a protective tariff on all articles imported from other countries that can be produced by our own people, in order that those who produce them may be better able to demand that to which, as citizens and upholders of this Government, they are justly entitled to—an equitable share of the profits of their toil to maintain their families in decency, that they may be able to educate their children and teach them as they advance toward manhood to defend the principles of our system of government.

"Resolved, That we are most emphatically opposed to any reduction of the present tariff, and we hereby express our unqualified condemnation of the provisions of the Mills bill, believing as we do that its adoption as a law would be detrimental to the interests of the American workingmen, and we respectfully call upon our representatives in Congress to vote against it."

Mr. DOCKERY. That seems to antagonize the Republican convention.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It will antagonize your nominees by November.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood it to be a substantive amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Without taking up the time of the committee to read it, I ask to have printed in the RECORD the address of some of the workingmen of Philadelphia to the workingmen of the United States generally.

Mr. KEAN. I would like to have it read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

The address referred to is as follows:

[Philadelphia Record, June 13.]

FRYING OUT THE FAT—WHEREBY WORKINGMEN ARE KEPT LEAN—THAT IS WHAT THE LABORERS OF PHILADELPHIA HAVE AGAINST THE SYSTEM OF PROTECTION—A RINGING ADDRESS TO AMERICAN MECHANICS—LABOR CAN NEVER BE ADEQUATELY REWARDED WHILE IT IS TAXED TO SUPPORT TRUSTS AND MONOPOLIES.

The Record is in receipt of an especially noteworthy address adopted by the Workingmen's Tariff Reform Association of Philadelphia. It follows in full:

To the workingmen of the United States, greeting:

After years of an almost continuous struggle and worry and much expenditure of time and money the contest for the emancipation of labor seems as interminable as ever, and the toilers are no better off than they were twenty years ago—not even so well. With you we have become sick and tired of this everlasting conflict and turmoil, and long for peace, though that peace can only be purchased by the thorough and complete disenthrallment of labor—its absolute freedom and equality to work out its own destiny. Hence we ask you to join us in the endeavor to ascertain the causes which underlie, create, and foster the wrongs to which labor is subjected. We have so far practically confined our efforts to fighting the effects, and because of this the removal of one wrong has simply made room for another to grow up. We have not gone to the root of the evils, and the result has been that one after another the great labor organizations have gone down, leaving behind them the seeds of discontent, hard feelings, and recriminations more than the hope for the future of the great mass of toilers.

PRIME CAUSE OF LABOR TROUBLES.

We have endeavored, through organization and otherwise, to raise wages, little dreaming that low wages were only an effect which had its producing cause in a system which is creating an ever-increasing army of idle men by stimulating production while it places restrictions upon trade, thus preventing the free exchange of our products whereby alone they can be brought into consumption, which is necessary to make room for more of our products in order to furnish us with the opportunities for work. This forces men to a sharp competition for "leave to toil" and makes many good men be "scabs" or starve. We have been taught to look upon these men—workingmen, all of them—as our enemies, instead of trying to find and remove the cause that makes them so; thus arraying the workers in a deadly factional conflict for existence, causing hatred where brotherly love should exist, creating dissensions where unity should be, and we have thus unwittingly served to strengthen the despoilers of the people against whom labor should be arrayed in a united column for the common good. We have seen nationality pitted against nationality, creed against creed, and section against section, whilst under cover of all this confusion monopoly has grown apace and enlarged its powers to rob labor.

THE SYSTEM TO BLAME.

Do we not see that there is a system in operation here—a relic of the monarchical institutions of Europe—which makes it utterly impossible that labor shall get any permanent rise of wages, or that such a rise could be beneficial; a system that is inexorable in its operation to make the poor poorer and the rich richer, and against which no strike or boycott can avail, which can only be reached by the ballot?

This is the system of indirect taxation, of which the protective tariff is the most conspicuous and most damaging example, working as it does like the prowling thief in the dark, letting no man know what is taken from him, upon the specious plea of contributing to the support of the Government, though its real purpose is to make the masses contribute to the wealth of the few and to exempt the rich from burdens which the poor have to bear. Its greatest modern defender, Professor Von Stein, of Vienna, confesses that it means the taxation of labor and the exemption of capital. It takes from the working poor twenty times more in proportion than from the millionaires; it insidiously robs labor of two-thirds of its possible savings and deprives it of four-fifths of its natural wages, largely for the aggrandizement of the favored few, who are thus tempted and even encouraged to expend large amounts of these ill-gotten gains in efforts to maintain the system which brings them in more than compound interest as well as enlarged powers and privileges.

BOUND HAND AND FOOT.

Who dare say that with such a system in vogue there is any hope for labor? When monopoly professes anxiety for the protection of labor, is it not applying the snares of the pickpocket, who charms your senses with flattering words to your face, while his nimble hands are deep in your pocket fishing for your last penny? Is it not self-evident that if labor were left in the free enjoyment of its natural rights and the natural reward for its toil it would need no such caretakers to protect it? It would protect itself. Can it be said that those who are constantly reducing wages, impoverishing labor, and dictating laws which shall make it more and more impossible for it to have equality of rights in the fixing of terms for its time and toil can be trusted to protect it? Heaven preserve it from such protectors! Are we not already bound to them hand and foot, until we dare not even exercise the natural powers the Creator has given us, with the injunction to toil without their permission; until they claim even the right to control the prerogatives vouchsafed to us by the Constitution of our common country; and until more than a million of our brethren, whose aggregate production would nearly equal one-half the total wages of all the workers of the country, are deprived of the chance to work, causing them by the waste of their powers and the search for work to depress our wages and make slaves of us all? All this has taken place under a system they call "protection to labor;" and if that is the result under protection, is it not time that we call a halt and inquire whether there is not a way out of the dilemma, to see if more freedom for labor and the promotion of trade will not work better results?

TAXES, TAXES, TAXES.

Everywhere we turn we are confronted by taxes, taxes, taxes! Every mite we consume, every roof that covers us, everything we look at, is taxed until our living is made to cost us more than double its natural price, and we pay it without protest because it is surreptitiously taken from us in the prices of what we buy, and the rich, being the beneficiaries of the system, will not protest. Our industries are burdened with excessive taxes which are virtually a fine upon industriousness and a premium upon idleness. The more we labor and produce, the higher the proportion of our taxes; and as all these come out of the consumer, they thus become the instrument to force the formation of monopolies and "trusts." It is here, therefore, where we find the root of monopoly, and this root we must destroy before we can hope to destroy monopoly itself.

ENRICHING MEN ALREADY RICH.

Remember, too, that but little more than one-third of the revenues thus wrung from a docile people are needed for governmental purposes, and it follows, therefore, that the other two-thirds—nearly, if not quite, $1,000,000,000 per year—are made by law to flow into the pockets of the greedy monopolists who do nothing to earn them; and yet this is called "protection to American labor." Let us call it by its right name, "the skinning of American labor for the aggrandizement of capital."

NECESSITIES OF LIFE TAXED.

Every particle of the materials we require for the production of commodities is taxed, and these taxes amount in every case to two, three, and four times the wages of all the labor employed upon them. This makes an addition to the cost of our products, of which labor can not possibly receive a share, and must therefore curtail its wages, both in money value and in increased cost of living. The consumption of our products is thereby decreased, and what is falsely called overproduction is the result, followed by unsteady work and a further depression of wages. Yet the men who have forced these conditions upon us ask us now to blindly trust them again to make laws for our protection.

Are we paupers that we require the care of those who thus wrong us and place us into an ignoble state of dependence, or are we freemen who, while producing the wealth of the nation, have a duty to see to it that we get our just share of it? Are we working for charity from those who do nothing? Has nature designed that we shall be compelled forever to supplicate other men for "leave to toil?" The protectionist idea means this much, but true manhood rebels against it. They want to continue to give us charity for our work; we demand justice and equal rights instead. Indeed, the name of protection, like that of charity, is made to cover a multitude of sins. It robs us of the God-given right of equal say in the making of terms for our labor, and deludes us with pretensions of friendship. If, therefore, we would save ourselves from total degradation we must rise in our might and manhood to teach the would-be protectors how to mind their own business, to take the shackles of protection off our limbs and leave us in the free enjoyment of our natural rights and the untrammeled exercise of our powers. We must show them our readiness to protect ourselves, as we are no longer satisfied with that protection which enables the bosses to take the cream and leave us to scramble and quarrel over the skim-milk.

LABOR'S SHARE.

The wages of labor in the manufactures are but little more than 17 per cent. of the product. In other words, the amount that falls to labor out of the total value of the products is only $17 out of every $100. Now, does it not stand to reason that if a tariff be at all necessary an average tariff duty of 17 per cent. would be amply sufficient to protect American labor against foreign labor, even if the latter got no wages at all? Yet the average of tariff duties now is 47 per cent., although the difference in the wages between this and other countries is not 5 per cent. calculated upon the relative productiveness of labor. Why, then, is this extra 30 per cent. put on? We see it can not protect labor. It does protect the manufacturers not merely against foreign competition, but most effectually against all our efforts to compel them to treat us justly. It is this 30 per cent. extra that secures to them all the benefit from protection and makes it impossible for us to even wring from them a share of it. It makes them free from competition and fortifies them against our just demands, and it yet leaves them free to draw their labor freely from the markets of the world, and the inevitable and natural result is cheap labor and dear goods.

Do not be deluded with the cry that goods are cheaper now than ever. It is the cheapening of production consequent upon the development of the unbounded resources of our country and the immense increase of the productivity of labor that has made them so; and these same causes would make them cheaper than those of any other country were the taxes removed. We would thus compete with the labor of the world in the markets of the world, and, freed from the restraints and disadvantages which protection puts upon it, labor would command more power to enforce just terms for its toil.

THE TAX NEUTRALIZES THE ADVANTAGES OF WAGES.

The taxes, under a protective tariff, always add much more to the cost of the products than our wages. If it did not do this the manufacturers would not ask for it, as it would do them no good; hence the tax must necessarily neutralize the advantages of wages, and thus work a positive injury to labor. If a workman were only a producer and not a consumer the protective tariff might do him some good, but it is difficult to see how the laying on of taxes which in their nature must come out of his earnings, and thus diminish them, can be of any benefit to him, and when he allows another to fix these taxes he gives up a prerogative for the abuse of which there is every temptation, and the privileged will invariably make him draw the short end. Hence a protective tariff can not be for the benefit of labor, because it implies the surrender by the toilers of the high privilege to take care of themselves, and those upon whom the privilege is conferred will always be tempted and often even forced to abuse the trust. For evidence of this we need not go outside of the protectionist ranks.

We quote the language of a protectionist United States Senator, as given in a circular marked "confidential" recently sent out to the manufacturers and others all over the country by the "Republican League of the United States." He says, after stating that he refused to contribute to a protective tariff league: "I replied that if the manufacturers of the United States in their associated capacity were an eleemosynary institution I would vote to give them a pension, but that I did not propose myself to contribute money to advance the interests of men who were getting practically the sole benefit, or, at least, the most directly important benefit of the tariff laws. * * * I can get along without any of it fully as well as the manufacturers can; and if they think the Republican party is going to maintain a high protective corps for their benefit, and that the men who do the work in that party are going to keep up the expenses of a campaign out of their own pockets, leaving them to reap the fruits of the tariff policy without any deductions for political expenses, they are greatly mistaken." After stating that the Pennsylvania manufacturers, "who are more highly protected than anybody else," are especially slow to pay up, he adds, "If I had my way about it I would put the manufacturers of Pennsylvania under the fire and fry the fat out of them."

A RING TO ROB THE PEOPLE.

What workingman can read such language as this, passing confidentially between the interested parties, without drawing the conclusion that the protective-tariff ring is a gigantic conspiracy to rob the people? We have long known that their greed would not permit them to let the working people have any share of the benefits of a tariff; indeed, we do know that they have used the very powers and advantages given them by the tariff laws to reduce our wages, oppress us, and prostrate every effort of organization to get for labor what belongs to it; but it is news to us that they have been so selfish and niggardly as to neglect to furnish the boodle in sufficient quantity to keep the political machine which turns out the good things for them well enough greased to keep it from being smashed.

There is in this, too, the evidence that this ring, based upon ideas which would eventually destroy American liberty, is about to be disrupted by the rank foulness within it, and when it is gone honest men will get their dues. It must go or workingmen must make up their minds to go down into a state of slavery more galling than that which went down in a sea of blood a quarter of a century ago. But, happily, all manufacturers are not in that category. There are many honorable exceptions, as is evidenced by the kindly words of encouragement and commendation our association has received from quite a number of them. They recognize the fact, as we do, that between those who wish not to wrong or be wronged there is no antagonism or separation of interests, and in a cause like ours, which promises to promote the prosperity and happiness of the masses, all true and honest men can and will unite irrespective of differences in rank or station of life.

PRESENT DUTY OF WORKINGMEN.

What boots it to labor if it pushes on to produce an ever-increasing amount of wealth only to find that an ever-increasing proportion is taken from it, not merely to supply Government revenues, but in greater part to enrich the few who enjoy the favors of the law because they have been left to dictate the making of these laws, and who are now asked to disgorge in order to preserve the political ring which has for its mission the upholding and strengthening of the system by which labor is robbed and degraded? Can you imagine the possibility of making labor organizations permanent or effective so long as monopoly possesses the power to arbitrarily force abnormal prices for our products or for what we consume and starvation wages for us? The protective tariff is what gives it the power to restrict the output of the products of our labor and at the same time to promote the influx of foreign labor, thus glutting the labor market in a double way; hence it follows that the only way to make labor organization of any utility is to remove the fundamental source of these unjust powers and class privileges. It is plain—the fact must be obvious to even the blentest mind—that as workmen our first and most important duty is to organize for a grand strike against the system which has so far been the impassable barrier against which our forces have shattered. With this removed we shall be able to go forward on a basis of more unselfish and ennobling principles, inspired by new hopes and expectations for the future of labor, and, through its emancipation from industrial and political thralldom, to a better realization of the aims and purposes of our great Republic.

"GO FOR THE CAUSES."

Let us cease the costly and interminable struggle against the effects and go for the causes, as with their removal the effects will fall one by one. We have, figuratively speaking, been cutting off the tops of the rank weeds that are growing in the industrial field in the vain hope of destroying them, only to find that the roots remaining shoot forth new tops as if by magic. Let us now endeavor to pull out the roots. It is less wasting, more inspiriting with hope, and will bring a victory that will be more radical and lasting in its effects. In a movement like this, based upon the broad principle of a universal brotherhood, we will obviate every cause for jealousies and petty bickerings, as we need do no violence to natural rights or personal interests. We can thus unite in one common bond, inspired by the knowledge that the good of one is the good of all, to strike down nothing except that which no man dares call his friend. We will need no corps of salaried officials nor high-sounding titles, except that of sovereign American citizen. We will require no leaders whom flattery and temptation can draw away from the path of duty or who may be allured to play the rôle of dictators. Free from partisan or sectional bias and prejudice, we will help those who will help us. We will be in line with the great and all-absorbing issue which is now pressing forward as the key to the solution of the great labor problem, and by the intelligent direction of our energies and forces we will aid to push forward the great column of our countrymen that is now arraying itself against the enemy that has so far contrived to neutralize the natural advancement of labor and thus become a menace to the stability of our republican form of government.

THE PHILADELPHIA MOVEMENT.

The little movement for free raw materials for labor and tariff reform, which had its origin among the textile workers of Philadelphia a little more than two years ago, being the first practical effort on the part of workingmen to state their own case in their own way, uninfluenced by either political or industrial bosses, has already borne its fruit in securing for labor that recognition which had previously been uniformly denied it because workingmen, unmindful of their rights and powers, tamely swallowed every dose that was prepared for them by the bosses. This gratifying change is showing itself in many ways by the respect paid to labor by the greatest minds of the country, who, having thus learned to appreciate its importance, are inspired to advocate reforms which look to its elevation; by the willingness and even desire on the part of Congressmen who are not tarred with the protection stick to listen to its suggestions and demands, and by the boldness and force with which the President of the United States has challenged the forces of monopoly to the conflict for the liberation of labor from the crushing weight of unnecessary taxation.

A QUESTION OF BREAD.

Shall we hold the vantage ground thus gained, and continue in that line of battle to an early and effective victory? Shall we continue to contribute our share in the great conflict, encouraged by the knowledge of the great army of allies that has come to join us? Or shall we renew those ineffectual and interminable struggles and strifes which call up and and keep alive the bitter personal, political class animosities and wrangles that have brought disunion and waste to us without bringing us nearer to the goal of our ambition? With us it is a question of bread and not of partisanship, but when there comes forth an open confession of the avowed purpose of a political party to foster and uphold a system of class legislation for the sole benefit of men who shall thus be enabled to furnish the boodle wrung from the wages of labor to carry elections, it is time for workingmen to wake up and inquire what they have been doing all this time while men who were outwardly most profuse in their professions of friendship and tenderness for labor, and extremely solicitous for its protection, were yet conspiring to form plans for the more effectual robbery and enslavement of it, thus striking a damaging blow to the vast business interests of the country.

FOOLISH ADHERENCE TO PARTY.

We are not organized to advance the interests and personal aspirations of any man or set of men, but we are organized to advance a principle which is the foundation of the rights of labor, and we call those who support and advance that principle our friends. As workingmen we hold the interests of labor paramount to every other consideration, and hence we propose to push the battle for freedom from burdensome taxation—the key to the labor question—to an early termination. In order to accomplish this most effectually we deem it our best policy, laying aside every bias and prejudice, to unite with any and all men who are fighting the same battle.

It is in this way that we can make party serve us, and thus make the struggle for our rights a short and decisive one. It is the blind and stubborn adherence of workingmen to party, without even an effort to make the party serve them, that causes political bossism, and political bossism means the destruction of the rights of labor, because, freed from the restraints which the watchfulness of the workingmen would hold them in, the leaders are not only tempted but encouraged to form compacts with the more wealthy and powerful, and the result is the making of laws which favor the rich and oppress the poor. If the workingmen will ever learn to pit their votes solidly against the boodle of the rich, political bossism will become a thing unknown and labor will get its rights. By these means we can close the floodgates of corruption and administrative profligacy and destroy the scheme by which many millions of dollars of the hard earnings of the people are drawn from them and locked up in the public Treasury, thus depriving the business of the country of the means to thrive and expand, destroying trade, and thus closing up the mills and factories.

FOR FREE RAW MATERIAL.

Will you come with us to kill the root of the evil, to strike away class legislation, to secure equal and exact justice for all, and thus promote the elevation of American labor to that standard of manhood and independence to which it is entitled by virtue of our free institutions and the unlimited natural wealth of our country, or will you continue to stand self-degraded as the supplicants for charity and protection from the men whom you thus tempt and even force to give you a stone instead of bread—to protect you by making you dependent upon their covetousness and subject to their arbitrary dictation? Will you come with us in the front rank of labor, encouraging and pushing on the men who stand manfully in the struggle for equal rights and tax reduction, or will you lag behind, either as stragglers or as the willing tool of one common enemy? We care not by whatever other name you call it, we will support that party that is for free raw materials and tariff reform.

If a good meal is set before us we will not stop to hickle over the question of who is the cook. We will no longer serve that party which will not serve us. We will cast our ballots, not for party, but for what we believe to be for the good of the toiling masses, and we will accept the boon without inquiring whether the party that gives it is the one to our liking or not; but we would not be honest—we would be neglectful of our own interests—if we were to withhold our support from any party that stands before the country as the champion of free raw materials and tariff reform.

By order of the Workingmen's Tariff Reform Association, No. 1, of Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, June 5, 1888.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a formal amendment for the purpose of making a brief statement.

I sought recognition from the Chair on yesterday, when the portion of the bill relating to bags and bagging was under discussion, but I failed to secure an opportunity of addressing the committee and the debate was closed on the paragraph before I was able to secure recognition. I ask at this time to present to the House a letter from an establishment engaged in the manufacture of burlaps, bagging, etc., in California, which is quite pertinent to the discussion which then took place. I will not detain the committee now with reading this letter or by further discussion upon that subject, since we have passed over that portion of the bill, and desire simply to place in the RECORD this letter from the firm of Ames & Detrick, of San Francisco, Cal., relating to the duties on and the manufacture of jute bags.

Mr. BIGGS. The gentleman had ample time on yesterday.

Mr. MORROW. I sought recognition twice, but failed to secure it.

Mr. BIGGS. I object to this kind of thing being done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has accomplished all he desired by securing the insertion of the communication in the RECORD without taking the time of the committee to read it.

The communication referred to by Mr. MORROW and a letter accompanying the same are as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, January 26, 1888.

DEAR SIR: I send you herewith a statement expressing our views concerning the manufacture of grain-bags, the business in which we are engaged.

The facts are that if any legislation on the terms stated in the letter can be had you would be astonished at the occupation it would give to boys and girls from sixteen years old and upwards. I think I speak within bounds when I say it would furnish such employment for at least three thousand in this State.

* * * * * * *

Yours, truly,

J. P. AMES.

HON. WILLIAM W. MORROW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 26, 1888.

DEAR SIR: As there seems to be a probability of legislative action affecting the tariff during the present session of Congress, we desire to submit our views upon an important branch of the topic which concerns the business of our firm.

As you are aware, we are engaged in the manufacture and exportation of grain-bags from burlap imported from India.

About 40,000,000 bags are now required annually to supply this market as covers to sack the grain raised on this coast, the value of which aggregates $3,000,000. These bags, with the exception of about five million made here, partly from imported burlap and partly from jute woven here, are imported from Calcutta and Scotland.

The present duty on grain-bags is 40 per cent. ad valorem under "Schedule J, for hemp, flax, and jute goods," act of March 3, 1883; that on burlaps 30 per cent., and on raw jute 20 per cent. under same schedule.

The law found in section 3019 Revised Statutes, entitles the manufacturer to a drawback of the duties when the goods are exported, less 10 per cent., which we have endeavored to obtain, but have been so hampered and embarrassed by departmental regulations requiring each particular bag to be counted as laden on board, and the exaction from us of the compensation of the officers of customs for performing such duty, that little or no margin is left. In fact, for the past two years the drawback feature of our business has barely paid expenses.

As the custom-house regulations now stand we can not get a refund of the drawbacks allowed by law on our manufactures. Could we get it without deduction it would enable us to hold our own against the foreign make, notwithstanding the fact that large quantities of our bags go into local and interstate traffic upon which no drawback is payable, and that the cheap labor of India with which we have to contend costs less than 10 cents per day.

After a fruitless effort to have the Treasury Department relieve us of its illegal exactions, which are destructive of the benefits the law was intended to confer upon the manufacturer, we feel obliged to ask Congress for legislation on the subject.

At present there is an apparent margin for protection between bags and burlaps (bags being 40 per cent. and burlaps 30 per cent.) on goods consumed in the United States, but in the case of exportation with pretended benefit of drawback an exaction is made at the custom-house of 10 per cent. of the drawback duties; yet the bag importer may bring his goods here and place them in bonded warehouse and subsequently export them in bond without the payment of any duties whatever. In this way large quantities are annually disposed of through this port under the warehouse and transportation system to the Hawaiian Islands, Mexico, and Central and South America for coffee and other products.

As domestic manufacturers we are entirely shut out from these markets, since we can not compete with the cheapness of the manufacture in India and pay the custom-house exactions. Now in the case of sugars the act of March 3, 1875, made a special exception by providing that only 1 per cent. of the drawback on refined sugars should be retained by the United States on exportation. This legislation has greatly benefited the sugar-refining interests and cheapened the cost to the consumers. That of bag manufacture is not dissimilar in character to that of sugar. The crude material is imported, pays duty, is manufactured, and the product sold both in the domestic and export market, and no valid reason can be assigned for the retention of any portion of moneys due as drawbacks upon exportation of the goods from the United States.

As the time seems favorable to obtain legislation, the disposition being to reduce duties in certain quarters, it ought not to be very difficult to have the present duty retained on grain-bags and taken off in part from burlaps and jute, or, in other words, to increase the difference in duty between bags and burlaps, and jute, say 40 per cent. on bags, 20 per cent. on burlaps, and 10 per cent. on jute.

Until within a few years all the grain-bags required on this coast were imported, but an attempt was made to manufacture under the impression that the discrimination in duty between bags and burlaps of 10 per cent. was sufficient to protect the domestic manufacturer, the result being that while the California-made bags were superior in quality to that of the foreign make, they can not be profitably manufactured in competition with Hindoo labor, which is sometimes as low as 4 and 5 cents per day.

Jute is not produced in this country nor on this continent, though efforts have been made at various times to cultivate its growth. But owing to its durability and cheapness abroad it enters largely into mixtures of American manufactures, and a light duty should be levied upon it.

We feel quite certain that the changes suggested in the law would be received with great favor here and give encouragement to grain-bag manufacture, as all the grain produced on this coast is bagged for market.

The revenue derived from burlaps and jute is insignificant, but it stands in the way of what would otherwise become an important industry here. The effect of its removal would almost be magical. Factories would be erected at once and employment at remunerative rates be given to a great many persons with great benefit to the community generally.

You are well aware that labor in this State is disturbed by the presence of the Chinese population, and hence it should be the first duty of the Government to employ all fair and reasonable means to protect and encourage her citizen-laborers in the prevention of idleness, vice, and crime.

Please do what you can in the way of obtaining legislation friendly to protection of this industry.

The only known interest that would be likely to oppose the modification, or be affected by it, would be that of bag importers (mostly English resident merchants), who, of course, would wish to destroy local manufacture that the entire bag market and the price may be left to them.

As a general rule the removal of duties imposed on articles not produced here serves to increase the value of the article in the country of production; but such would hardly be the effect on the raw material in this case, as our requirements are comparatively small to those of Great Britain, Germany, Australia, Egypt, and other countries.

Our suggestions may be summed up in brief as follows:

First. Keep the present duty of 40 per cent. on grain-bags.

Second. Reduce the duty on burlaps from 30 to 20 per cent.

Third. Reduce the duty on jute from 20 to 10 per cent.

Fourth. Abolish the 10 per cent. drawback retention as respects exported bags (and all other manufactures, for that matter) under section 3019 Revised Statutes.

Should you think, however, that it is not possible to consummate the legislation desired, then we must formulate a plan by which we can obtain the entire drawback upon our gross manufactured exports without any diminution.

At your convenience please write us as to the prospect, and any suggestions as to how this matter may be advanced would be gladly received by,

Yours, truly,

AMES & DETRICK.

Hon. W. W. MORROW,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is not only perfectly apparent that the tin-plate industry belongs naturally to this country by reason of our possession of the materials, and by reason, as I have already shown, of our prospective tin industry, but it has actually been demonstrated by the labors of those Welshmen at Wellsville, Leachburgh, and Demmler, that tin-plates can be made in America, because, as a matter of fact, they have already been made in America at the places named.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the committee for a moment to what it is that we lose by reason of not having this industry. Subsequent to Mr. Fessenden's decision, to which reference has already been made, there were put up in England sixty-six tin-plate manufactories. From that day to this we have taken two-thirds of the entire product of tin-plate made by England; so that in the last twenty years it is calculated that we have paid to England for tin-plate, in support of English capital and English labor and to the detriment of American labor, $225,000,000. Now, that the development of our Western and Virginia tin-mines ought to lead to the development of the tin-plate industry in this country is not a notion that prevails in America alone. It prevails also amongst educated and intelligent Englishmen. As a part of my remarks I desire to submit an extract from the London Chronicle of January 12, and an extract from the London Industrial Review upon this subject. I will ask that these extracts be printed in the RECORD, so that my time may not be consumed in the reading.

The extracts are as follows:

TIN-PLATE FROM AMERICAN TIN.

While Mr. MILLS and other tariff "reformers" are endeavoring to prevent our people from attempting the manufacturing of tin-plate, of which they consume about two-thirds of the world's production of this material, Englishmen, who make our tin-plates, are becoming enthusiastic over the results of investigations of our tin deposits.

Here is what the London Chronicle of January 12 says:

"Hitherto the tin supply of America has been derived from abroad, but so great are the anticipations, based on the discoveries of ore in Dakota, that the probabilities are that at no remote period not only will the United States be able to obtain its entire supply from within its own borders, but that these mines will also be able to supply a considerable quantity of the metal for export. The supply of bar tin required by the United States at the present day is one-third the entire production of the world, and at the present moment the United States consumes two-thirds of the tin-plate manufactured in England, the two items together amounting to over £6,000,000 sterling. As the discovery of gold in California in 1849 gave a new impetus to civilization, and led to the rapid development of the then scarcely known western coast of America, so the finding of tin in Dakota will doubtless stimulate the growth of population in that now thinly settled region, and tend to increase the wealth of the world.

"Experts who have visited and explored the Black Hills state that the greisen rock of Dakota can be cheaply mined and dressed by crushing and washing in the usual way, and is particularly well adapted to wet concentration by the processes so well known and used in Cornwall. The heavy crystals of tin are easily separated from the mica and spar, and yield about 65 per cent. of metallic tin. According to official data the Cornish ores do not average 45 pounds of block tin to the ton of stuff sent to the mill for reduction, though ores yielding considerably less have been profitably worked in Cornwall and elsewhere."

The London Industrial Review, which at last believes in American tin, says that it "can easily understand the misrepresentations used by present tin importers and producers from all sources to hold this American property in check, to prevent its becoming a dangerous competitor. This should not interfere with its development by American or English capital."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. KELLEY. I think there is some mistake as to the gentleman's time. The gentleman certainly has not yet consumed five minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. If I have consumed five minutes, I certainly have not said very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not keeping the time, but relies entirely upon the Speaker's page for the time.

Mr. KELLEY. I suggest there ought to be a more mature person to keep the time.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no doubt a mistake as to the time. The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. DALZELL. What I want to call to the attention of the committee is the connection of this subject with labor in this country, and the development not simply of the tin-plate industry, but the development of cognate industries. For that purpose I send to the Clerk's desk (and this I desire to have read) a statement on the subject, giving the figures.

The Clerk read as follows:

The effect of placing a protective duty on tin-plate will not have the effect, as some people argue, of raising the price in proportion to the increase in duty. The increase in price will be really immaterial. It should be observed that under our present system of having all our tin-plates manufactured abroad, that a large expense is incurred between manufacturer and consumer. This, with home production, would be absorbed in higher wages to labor.

The value at the port of export of the tin-plates imported during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, was $16,883,813. The average price of tin-plates for last year, paid by the American consumers, not including the Standard Oil Company and a few other large corporations, was about 5.2 cents per pound. Our total importation for last year would thus indicate a value of nearly $30,000,000.

The cost of production of the tin-plates, according to the cost-sheet we submit, would be $15,877,623 in Great Britain, and in this country $28,267,982. This indicates that with home production the price to the consumer would be advanced but very little over present rates.

The advantages to the home market, however, would be immense. The total wages paid to British labor in the production of tin-plates imported last year was about $8,991,468. American wages for same amount of work would be $20,352,875.

This increase in employment furnished to labor would more than remove the glut in the labor market. It would create such a demand for labor as to give employment to every idle iron and steel worker in the country.

It would also stimulate labor in the production of coal, iron, ore, coke, limestone, and other materials. The 254,751 gross tons of tin-plates represent 870,000 tons of iron ore, 300,000 tons of limestone, 1,800,000 tons of coal and coke, 360,000 tons of pig-iron, 5,000,000 pounds of lead, 25,000,000 pounds of tin, 12,000,000 pounds of tallow or palm oil, 35,000,000 pounds of sulphuric acid, 11,000,000 feet of lumber; fire-brick, clay, oils and lubricants, hemp, etc.

It would require sixty-eight large works of five trains of rolls each, involving an outlay of over $30,000,000 capital, and giving employment to about 24,000 workmen in the rolling-mills alone, who would earn at least $12,000,000 per annum.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, in addition to that there is another aspect of the case deserving attention. I refer to its relation to the character of Southern iron. I send to the Clerk's desk a letter written by Mr. Jacob Reese, addressed to the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette, in which he shows the advantages to result to the South from the creation of the tin-plate industry. I desire to have that read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BASIC STEEL FOR TIN-PLATE.

Mr. Jacob Reese, in an interesting letter to the Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette on the above subject, after giving statistics of the magnitude of the tin-plate business already familiar to the readers of the Iron Trade Review, says:

"The South wants the tin-plate trade. The Southern iron ores are too high in phosphorus to make steel by the old Bessemer process, but their ores are especially adapted to making steel by the basic process, and, as all the tin-plate made in the world is now made from mild basic steel, the South would much rather make basic ingot iron for tin-plates than run in competition with the steel-works of the North for the steel-rail trade. If Congress would only put a tariff on tin-plates to justify their manufacture, it would boom the South without hurting the North, and I think that there is not a Southern Democrat in the House but would be willing to vote for such a policy. It would energize the whole South from Virginia to Texas. It would give her a new market for $30,000,000 of her products, and at the same time the phosphorus which would thus be eliminated from the metal would be put into lime and produce 92,355 tons of basic phosphate worth $26.12 per ton—$2,412,651.45.

"The Southern lands are growing poorer and poorer every year because the cotton is shipped away and carries with it the elements of plant food. But if the basic process could be started in the South, for making tin-plate, the resulting phosphate would fertilize the land so as to double the cotton crop in a few years. Great as this tin-plate importation is we are importing a great deal of other stuff that ought to be made in this country. Our importations from England alone in 1887 were: pig-metal, 404,559 tons; bars and angles, 4,273 tons; rails, 182,270 tons; hoop and sheets, 32,471 tons; tin-plates, 268,364 tons; cast and wrought manufactures, 2,925 tons; old material, 172,927 tons; steel blooms and slabs, 215,656 tons, a total of 1,282,445 tons. To this must be added a large amount of basic steel wire rods, slabs, blooms, and billets coming from Germany, the whole of which amounts to over $50,000,000, all of which could be made in the South without interfering with the trade of the North in the least. Will not the Northern Republicans unite with the Southern Democrats and pass such a tariff on tin-plate as to enable us to make it down South? I will guaranty to make the entire demand inside of two years, and in five years be ready to place tin-plate on the free-list, and commence to export it.

"If we could secure this tin-plate industry for the South, it would boom her industries from the James to the Rio Grande; her fields would glow with heavy crops, while her hills and vales would glisten with phosphorescent beauty as the converters would pour out their molten streams of pure metal. It would break down sectional barriers and fuse the whole country into one common brotherhood, which would be a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. STONE, of Missouri, took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 8989) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government in the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 901) for the relief of Sophia W. Wright.

TARIFF.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, there have been two arguments used upon the other side in favor of putting tin-plates upon the free-list. The first is that tin-plate manufacturing in this country is not now an existing industry. The same argument might at one time have been made against a tariff in favor of any now existing industry in this country. The fact is that the proper purpose of a protective tariff is to build up those industries that naturally belong to the country, but need protection. I think it is capable of demonstration that the tin-plate industry naturally belongs to this country. The second argument used was that we needed tin-plate on the free-list in order to cheapen tin-plates in this country. The fact is that to-day we are absolutely in the power of the British tin-plate manufacturers. With the duty removed we have no guaranty that the price of tin-plates will go down. On the contrary, we have the right to assume that they will go up. I will ask to have printed in my remarks an article taken from the London Iron, a London publication, dated January 13 of the present year.

[From London Iron, January 13.]

A BRITISH TIN-PLATE SYNDICATE.

A meeting of tin-plate makers, which was numerously attended, was held at the Swansea Exchange on Tuesday, January 10, under the presidency of Mr. James Spence, of London, for the purpose of seeing what steps can be taken with the object of increasing the price of tin-plates. The chairman laid before the meeting the basis of a scheme which, he stated, would meet with the approval of powerful capitalists, who are prepared to form a syndicate in furtherance of the object in view. The whole details of the proposals, which took the form of an agreement, were fully and exhaustively discussed, and ultimately a special executive committee was appointed to carry out the decision arrived at. This committee is to put itself in communication with the capitalists already referred to as being ready and willing to co-operate, and to effect an arrangement with the view of immediately putting into practical working shape the scheme proposed to be adopted.

One of the principal features of the scheme is the fixing of a minimum price for ordinary plates—say, B. V. grade at 15 shillings per box f. o. b. Swansea—which would be adopted as the figure below which plates for the present should not be sold. The rumor of the intention to form a corner which was current last week has had the effect of stiffening the price of tin-plates with makers, and it is thought that, when the result of Tuesday's meeting is made known, it will have the effect of further improving both prices and demand. The present moment is regarded by the makers as the most favorable part of the year for the purpose of the present combination.

At the end of December, 1886, stocks amounted to 311,000 boxes, while last December the stock had been reduced to 207,000 boxes, with the additional fact that stocks of tin-plates in America are thoroughly depleted. With this reduction in stocks, notwithstanding the increase of make through additional manufacturing works having been restarted and built, makers expect that the price of plates must keep up, and they look forward to an immediate demand, especially American. Apart from the reduction of stocks, the volume of trade is fast overtaking the manufacturing supply. It is stated that the tin syndicate is backing the tin-plate makers, and that, should any makers be unable to hold their plates sufficiently to obtain the standard price, the members of the syndicate will take the plates on warrant at a price 1 shilling below the standard.

And Mr. Jacob Reese, of Pittsburgh, the well-known metallurgist, in a recently published letter, says: "Last fall a tin trust was formed in Europe which bought the stock of tin on the market, made contracts with the manufacturers, and then put up the price of block tin from £100 on April 1, 1887, to £167 per ton

March 1, 1888, in London, which is an advance of 67 per cent. It is not generally known, but it is nevertheless true, that when tin goes up in price the tin-plate manufacturers mix lead with the tin and use the amalgam of tin and lead for casting the tin-plate, because the lead is only 5 cents a pound, while the tin is 35 cents per pound in London, where they buy their stock. There is now great danger of the tin-plate makers using lead, which, when coming in contact with the acids of the fruits in our canned goods, will produce a deadly poison, known as lead-poison, which, owing to the extent of the use of canned fruit in the United States, might prove more disastrous to the people than the yellow fever or the cholera."

The control of the tin supply by a foreign syndicate means the extortion from this country of an immense amount of money over and above a fair price for the tin and tin-plate purchased, as the advance in price mentioned by Mr. Reese proves. Last year our imports of tin and tin-plate amounted in value to $25,021,093.

With the development of a home supply of raw tin, such as no other manufacturing country possesses, encouraged by an adequate duty on tin and tin-plate, a tin-plate manufacture would spring up in this country which in a very few years would place tin-plate on the market at a lower price than consumers can expect from foreign manufacturers so long as the manufacture of this important product is entirely in their hands. A domestic tin industry competing with the foreign would stimulate the foreign manufacturers to use the best material in order to retain a foothold in our markets, and thus greatly lessen the danger to the health of our people from the use of lead or inferior tin. An industry of so great importance to the health of the people of this country, as well as to their pockets, surely deserves whatever encouragement, and not discouragement, legislation can properly give to it.

I am advised I have but one minute left, and I therefore address myself to a correction of something that was said yesterday in the House. During the course of the discussion my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] said:

> There is a notorious character in this country named John Jarrett. He was at one time the head of the Amalgamated Association of Steel and Iron Workers of this country, and he was by that association driven out of that association. He then went into the city of Pittsburgh and started a little tin-plate manufacturing establishment, or became identified with it.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to say in the absence of Mr. Jarrett, who is attacked by a gentleman who has a right to the floor of this House, which Mr. Jarrett has not, that Mr. Jarrett is not what in ordinary parlance we understand by the words "a notorious character." On the contrary, he is a gentleman entirely honorable, the peer of more than one gentleman upon this floor, and it is not true that he was ever ejected from the Amalgamated Association. On the contrary, he voluntarily retired from its presidency and continued for years thereafter to be its adviser, and he never was connected with any tin-plate establishment in the city of Pittsburgh.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. I withdraw the formal amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. The amendment being withdrawn, I move to renew it. Mr. Chairman, I desire to express to the gentlemen of the committee the deep and I fear lasting depression of spirits produced in me by listening to this debate. If what I have heard here and what has been sustained by the votes of the majority be true, I am one of a nation of imbeciles, planted by Providence on an arid and valueless land. There is nothing we have proposed to stimulate in the way of industry, agricultural, mining, or mechanical, that we have not been told we could not do the thing proposed, and the majority of the committee have voted to sustain the allegation. I have lived, sir, to be three-score and fourteen years of age in the belief that my countrymen could do anything that man could do, and that my country was an epitome of the resources given by a bountiful Providence to mankind for their use. But no. I bring here a studied and able report by an American scholar and patriot to show that jute, in its growth and manufacture, is entirely accessible to the Southern States, and two hours of our time are lost in order to force me to print silently in the RECORD the extracts I wanted to read, because the gentlemen on the other side "know" that we can never grow jute or manufacture it. Oh, no; we can not grow jute! Nor are we more fortunate mechanically. We can not produce "machinery designed for the conversion of jute into cotton bagging, to wit, cards, roving frames, winding frames, and softeners." We can not raise our own supply of sugar. Oh, no; sorghum will not grow here. Cane does not prosper. The beet is not available. Corn sugar is not made with profit, or if it is, it is not good. Sheep are a failure in this country. We had better go anywhere abroad and buy wool than raise a crop of bad mutton and feeble wool in our own country. We can not produce fresh mutton here. The dog could never have got in this country that succulent leg of mutton which he lost in looking for "the markets of the world." [Laughter.]

We can not make tin-plates. Why, sir, the Southern States, with native tin ore, and fuel, and the labor of a million of people now practically idle, can dig the ore, mine the coal, gather the limestone, smelt the ore, convert it into steel, and roll and hammer it if need be into first-class steel plates and sheet-iron. They can do all that within the limits of the old Confederacy, and in doing it not only give employment to more than a million of idle men but invite millions of capital and tens and hundreds of thousands of skilled men into that region to deal with all the metals in which the South so abounds. In God's name, gentlemen, give up the cry that is designed to convince the country that we are fit only for cotton-growing. We have other resources than cotton-fields, and God has blessed us with energy and ability to convert all our native resources into needed utilities. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I regret very much, Mr. Chairman, that my time is so limited. I have several very interesting and instructive letters, written by gentlemen in charge of very large manufacturing establishments in the district which I have the honor to represent, which I desire to have read for the information of this House. The first one to which I will call the attention of the House is a protest against placing tin-plates upon the free-list, and a protest against the passage of the Mills bill. It is from the Ætna Iron and Steel Company, located at Bridgeport, Belmont County, Ohio. This company has a capital of $600,000; it employs six hundred men, and it pays out annually for labor $340,000. The writer of this letter, who represents his company, does not hesitate to say that if this bill should become a law it would be followed by prolonged idleness and bankruptcy and probably by violence and bloodshed. The transition from protection to free trade is described as a fearful and dangerous pathway, which may or may not be passed without violence; but in case this can be avoided the necessary delay of a single year in passing from one condition of affairs to another he says will result in a loss of $100,000 to the company. It protests against placing tin-plate upon the free-list, and asks for the restoration of the duty which a former Congress placed upon it, in order that this industry should be placed upon an equal footing with other metallic industries.

I shall print also the protest of the Junction Iron Company, located at Mingo Junction, Jefferson County, Ohio. It has a capital of $500,000; it pays out annually in wages $225,000, and its annual product is $1,675,000. It also protests against the passage of this bill.

Then I have another letter from the Spaulding Iron Company, located at Brilliant, Jefferson County, Ohio. This company has a capital of $300,000. It is now employing about two hundred men, and the company says that if it were not for this tariff tinkering, if it were not for the threat that hangs over business like a lowering cloud, this company could employ constantly five hundred men. I intend to print this protest also; but I wish to call attention here to the last words of the letter, which are these: "Hoping that the MILLS who introduced the bill will be knocked out instead of all the other mills in the country." [Laughter.]

I shall also ask to have printed a protest of laboring men against placing tin-plates on the free-list, a protest which is full of argument, and which I should be very glad to have read to the House if time permitted. And I also have a letter written by a gentleman who lives in the city where the late Democratic convention was held—St. Louis—a short letter, giving very strong reasons why tin-plates should be adequately protected instead of being placed on the free-list.

The following are the letters and papers referred to by Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR:

[Ætna Iron and Steel Company, manufacturers of iron and soft-steel sheet, plates, bars, and rails.]

BRIDGEPORT, OHIO, April 4, 1888.

DEAR SIR:

* * * * * * *

Our stockholders, as the directory would indicate, are composed of citizens of both sides of the river. Our paid-up capital stock is $300,000, and in addition we have a surplus fund of about $120,000. The average amount we keep employed in the business is about $600,000, and we give employment to about six hundred men. Our annual capacity is about 20,000 tons, consisting of bars and sheets of steel and iron, also small T and street rails. At present prices the annual product will sell for about $1,000,000. The cost of material and amount paid for labor, as well as the amount received for the finished product, will vary somewhat according to the relative proportions of iron and steel, and sheets and bars produced. As we have been running for the past three months—that is quite full—the material consumed for about 20,000 tons annual product would cost $500,000 in round numbers, and the labor employed in working it up about $340,000, not including salaried officers and clerks. Our fuel charge on the basis of the last three months would amount to about $30,000 per annum, the fuel being natural gas. Were we using coal as fuel, we would be employing about seventy-five to one hundred men more than above reported, and the fuel would be costing us somewhat more than we pay for gas.

We do not export. There is no place in the world, outside of our own national limits, where we could get cost for our product owing to the high-priced labor devoted to the production of iron along the whole line from the finished product to the ore and coal-mine.

Our interest in protective tariff is to have such a duty on iron and steel bars-sheets, plates, and other shapes, as well as on other products into which iron and steel enter as the principal or only part (such as tin-plate and cotton-ties), as will enable the manufacturer to pay the wages that American workmen demand and are receiving. The close competition among American manufacturers keeps profits on iron down to a low point, so low in fact that for years the iron industry has paid but small profit to those who have their capital in it. Should the barriers to free trade be removed, aside from the first shrinkage in values and the idleness of mills that will result from the flood of imported iron made by lower labor, the manufacturer will not suffer, for considering the prices paid for labor entering into the cost of iron in this country, as compared with that paid in foreign countries, the American manufacturer is supplying a cheaper article than the foreign maker. With labor the same, the American manufacturer can hold the trade of his country. The tariff as it relates to the iron industry is a protection to labor more than to capital. Without it, labor must inevitably be reduced to European standards, or the iron-works of the country remain idle.

The manufacturers would avoid the severe loss of the transition period and the misery and discord resulting therefrom, and would gladly pay the higher wages demanded by the American workman, if they are placed in a position rendering that possible. Should cotton-ties and tin-plate be admitted free—as is proposed by the Mills bill—a severe blow will be given to the manufacture of iron and steel, especially sheet iron and steel. Free tin-plate would destroy the manufacture of sheets for roofing, and tin would take the place of sheets for many purposes to which the finer grades of sheet are not applied. Instead of bringing tin in free of duty, it should be made to bear a duty at least as high as sheet iron and steel. A very fair duty is placed on hoop-iron, but cotton-ties, that are practically hoops, it is absurdly proposed to bring in duty free. These two items should be placed where they belong, say, with sheet and hoop iron and steel.

Removing duty on these gives to Europe all the trade we now have on cottonties and a large part of what we have on sheet-iron and steel. Labor entering into the product of these can not be reduced to the point of competition with the European makers, while other labor in American mills working on protected products is receiving the price rendered possible by protection. This works a serious injury to the manufacturer of unprotected products. Rather than the state of affairs to be brought about by these features of the Mills bill, it may be questioned if it would not be better for all concerned to take off all the tariff on iron and steel. If we are to be brought to free trade would not a clean, clear, straight cut to that goal be better than to approach it by the meandering and devious path its advocates are mapping out? No changes in the tariff laws heretofore have borne heavily on us. Taggers iron has to some extent knocked out light grades of sheets, and under the existing tariff soft-steel sheets are admitted under a lower duty than sheet-iron, owing to the former being admitted under an ad valorem duty intended originally for high grades steel sheet. This trouble as to soft-steel sheet we think is adjusted so as to place them on the same plane as iron sheets in proposed legislation.

Your tenth question, as to what loss we would sustain if our product was placed on the free-list, is a hard one to answer in any definite way represented by dollars and cents.

We have intimated above that the loss to the iron manufacturer by having his product placed on the free-list would be from a shrinkage of values and from the stoppage of his works. The shrinkage would be on his plant, his raw material, his finished products, his accounts—and it would be serious. How long the workmen would stand out against the necessary reduction, and with what temper they would oppose such a reduction, can only be a subject of conjecture. Only the direst necessity would induce them to resume work at wages so much below what they had been receiving, and before the time of their acquiescence would come much destruction of property—probably of life—discord, disturbance, and misery would result.

Supposing our loss of time to be not over one year, and that no destruction of property resulted from riots and violence, we would place our loss at not less than $100,000 if our products were placed at once on the free-list.

Hoping the wisdom of Congress may so regulate the tariff as that the general interests of the country may not suffer, we are,

Yours, truly,

ÆTNA IRON AND STEEL COMPANY.

[Junction Iron Company. Bessemer pig-iron, steel nails, steel tack plate. H. M. Priest, president and general manager; George A. Dean, secretary and superintendent.]

MINGO JUNCTION, OHIO, March 31, 1888.

DEAR SIR: * * * The capital in this business, not including interest in the Junction Steel Company, is $500,000. The number of persons employed, men and boys, is about four hundred. The value of our annual sales varies so much, owing to conditions of business, we can scarcely give reliable figures on them. We also find difficulty in stating the cost of material bought annually for similar reason. We might say on our capacity to produce pig-iron, steel plate, and nails the cost of materials would amount to about $1,675,000 per annum on present values.

Our wages on preceding basis of capacity at current rates would reach about $225,000 per annum. We do not export any goods. Our interest in a protective tariff is the same as that of any other manufacturer of goods from ore, iron, or steel. Without protection we could not employ over $500,000 capital in this business, and consequently could not employ the four hundred persons whom we now aid in living, clothing, educating, and encourage to make homes for themselves in our country, so long as goods we now manufacture can be made so cheaply abroad and marketed in this country so easily.

If the goods of our manufacture were placed on the free-list we would certainly have to cease our operations, and our capital stock, instead of selling at par, being unemployed, would so rapidly shrink in value as to become an almost total loss to its owners. Were the writer inclined to be selfish in the matter he would demand free ore (not owning a mine). Again, if he were a steel manufacturer alone, he might also desire free pig-iron. On the contrary, however, he takes a broader view, and in every sense is impressed with the belief that America should be for the Americans, and tariff upon articles we can make or produce at home should be made prohibitory, at least until we recover from serious competition of the past few years. Immigration should also be regulated until our present surplus labor is all employed at liberal wages and a demand for more labor an absolute necessity. When home-made products must compete with foreign then wages run low. Short time and low wages soon make the workman dissatisfied, and as a consequence frequent strikes, riots, and death, and destruction of property ensue.

If a prohibitory tariff can not be enacted (as it certainly can not by the present House), then existing tariff should no doubt be in some sense revised. Taking a selfish view of the matter, our company being large manufacturers of soft Bessemer steel, blooms, and billets, would ask the tariff on same from abroad, whether Bessemer or basic, should be the same as on rails at present. I am unable to understand why any honorable citizen of the United States desires free trade, where each man can become a manufacturer if he desires and if it is so profitable as some demagogues desire the voter to believe it is.

Very truly, yours,

H. M. PRIEST, President.

[The Spaulding Iron Company, manufacturers of cut and clinch nails and cut boat spikes of both iron and steel; also first-class muck-iron.]

BRILLIANT, JEFFERSON COUNTY, OHIO, March 27, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Your favor 24th instant is received. Our capital stock is $300,000; paid in capital, $287,500. Could employ five hundred men and boys were it not for interference with trade caused by tariff tinkering and labor troubles throughout our country; as it is, we employ one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty about half time. Our annual sales are about 100,000 kegs nails and 4,000 tons muck-iron.

Cost of material, say, $250,000 annually; cost of labor, say, $100,000 annually. Have never sold abroad, except one little lot in Mexico.

Our interest in a protective tariff is in the affirmative for the sake of the general good. We believe a tariff that would absolutely be prohibitive as to articles that are manufactured in our own country would be a better way to reduce the revenues of the Government than the tariff-for-revenue-only policy of our friends, the Democracy. Let articles that are not produced in our country come in free of duty, and, if necessary, pay the sugar-makers of our own country a bounty or bonus, and all others similarly situated.

We would be favorably affected by some such action as the foregoing, and so would all our friends and neighbors, and the country generally, if the action could be guarantied to stand for, say, twenty years without amendment.

We think the placing of any item in the iron and steel schedule on the free-list means simply the annihilation of the industry in this country.

Trusting that we have not taxed your patience too much, and that you will have some notion of what our views would be if we undertook to air them, and hoping that the MILLS who introduced the bill will be knocked out instead of all the other mills in the country,

Yours, truly,

C. H. SPAULDING, Secretary.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR,
Washington, D. C.

The following is an extract from a letter written by Mr. F. G. Niedringhaus, president of the St. Louis Stamping Company:

It is true that our free-trade friends may be able to put forth a strong argument in favor of free tin-plates, and looking at the question merely from one standpoint, their point may be well taken as long as tin-plates are not made in this country. But, nevertheless, if this 1 cent of duty, which is equivalent to 20 per cent. ad valorem, is taken off, tin-plates will be adopted for a great many things for which sheet-iron is now used. This would, as a matter of course, lessen the demand for sheet-iron just to that extent, and a certain number of men now employed in producing that iron from the ore and coal beds to the finished sheets must look for employment in other channels, or else the price of labor must be reduced to a point where it can effectually compete with foreign labor.

If any one will take the trouble to look into the iron business more closely he will observe that the cost of iron is all labor from beginning to end, and that the profit put upon the finished product by the manufacturer, as can be clearly proven, has not exceeded 10 per cent., and in some cases not 5 per cent., for quite a number of years. When, therefore, our free-trade friends say that it is the manufacturer that needs protection you may put it down as idle talk, and that they are passing upon a question which they have not thoroughly investigated. Give our American manufacturer labor at the same price that the European competitor gets it and he will not ask for any protection.

The whole question at issue, therefore, hinges upon this one point, namely, what or how much shall we pay those who labor? If we have free trade, labor must work for exactly the same price it does in Europe. In other words, you will have pauper labor and a community without a purchasing power. Whether or not this would be advisable American policy is a question that we will not attempt to answer, but leave it to the wisdom of our national representatives. Steel plates and sheets are now being largely imported under the ad valorem duty, and at that rate they can be imported at a much lower figure than sheet-iron can be produced.

This also is working very depressingly upon the American manufacturers of sheet-iron, and the final result will be that either this trade will have to be left to European manufacturers or else the wages of the operatives will have to be cut down in order to overcome this competition. It was our intention to have increased our mill capacity, but from the present outlook we think ourselves very lucky in not launching out any further in that direction. If the free trade faction of the Democratic party is to control the politics of the country, it is not difficult to foresee what hardships are in store for our manufacturing communities.

THE TIN-PLATE PROVISION IN THE MILLS BILL.

We present herewith a part of the very able letter of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers of the United States, addressed to Hon. WILLIAM MCKINLEY, jr., and signed by William Weihe, president, and William Martin, secretary. It admirably presents the leading facts in support of the proposition that tin-plates should be continued in the list of dutiable articles, and the duty on them increased, as has been wisely provided in Mr. RANDALL'S tariff bill.

The Mills bill places tin-plates on the free-list. Whatever professions of friendship and partiality to American labor the majority of the Ways and Means Committee may have made, this act of theirs in placing tin-plates on the free-list clearly indicates their real intentions of ultimate free trade. It is an act solely and absolutely in the interest of British capital and labor, securing to them a monopoly of the tin-plate manufacture needed to supply the wants of the American people. It is an act that implies the inability of American labor to produce tin-plates, or that it is better to employ British labor at low wages to supply us with tin-plates rather than permit the same to be done by home labor at reasonable wages.

It is unnecessary that we should enter here into the history of the tin-plate question in this country. Suffice it to say that, although strenuous attempts were made between 1872 and 1878 to establish the tin-plate manufacture in this country, all failed for lack of proper encouragement by the Government. A protective tariff was never enforced for the purpose of promoting the tin-plate manufacture here.

British manufacturers, though possessing a monopoly of the tin-plate manufacture since 1720, never supplied cheap tin-plates to this country until attempts to manufacture tin-plates were made here. In 1875 we had four tin-plate works in operation in this country. Prices of British tin-plates were very high up to that date.

Quoting from the Iron Age, we find the prices to have been, in 1873, for ordinary coke grades, $12 per box, and for charcoal grades $14.75 per box. A box contained 112 sheets of 14 by 20, and weighed about 112 pounds. It was the high prices that had existed up to this time that tempted American capital to undertake tin-plate manufacturing. The duty at that time was 15 per cent. ad valorem. In 1875 the duty was made specific, 1.1 cents per pound; but it was only a low revenue duty, equal to about 15 per cent. ad valorem. The British manufacturers, finding that the attempts to manufacture tin-plates in this country were successful, rapidly reduced prices, and, by the aid of cheap labor and a low tariff, in 1878 completely throttled the young American industry. Since this little episode took place we have had an era of low prices and an extremely poor quality of tin-plates.

As workingmen we reason that, if British manufacturers were enabled to throttle this young industry by the aid of a low revenue tariff, the same results would follow in bars, sheets, structural, and all other forms of iron and steel manufacture, had we not a protective duty.

The low revenue tariff on tin-plates, which also includes terne-plates, has furthermore been very injurious to our sheet iron and steel industry. For several years the imported tin and terne plates have been steadily displacing home productions of sheets of the finer grades, particularly galvanized and leaded sheets, in several directions. In the roofing business the quantity of home-produced sheet-iron has fallen off within the last six years nearly one-half. If these results have followed from a low tariff what may we expect to follow in the wake of free tin-plates? It is reasonable to presume nothing less than the complete annihilation of the sheet iron and steel business in all the finer grades.

The arguments used by a majority of the Ways and Means Committee in favor of free tin-plates seem to us very illogical and impracticable. They make but one point, to wit, cheaper cans to promote the export trade in canned goods. This is ridiculous, as the law now provides a drawback of 90 per cent. of the duty to the exporter. The remaining 10 per cent. affects the price of a dozen 3-pound cans of salmon about 1 cent. Just imagine an item of 1 cent per dozen cans of salmon giving the exporter such an advantage in the foreign market as would effectually overcome all competition.

The majority report does not show that free tin-plates would be any advantage to the home consumer of canned goods. Nor can canners expect any advantage, as the tax is not paid by them, but by the consumer of canned goods. For this reason we fail to comprehend why canners are agitating for lower duties on tin-plates, or free tin-plates.

Importers and such large users of tin-plates as the Standard Oil Company are naturally and consistently in favor of free tin-plates. There are quite a number of importers who are interested as owners of tin-plate works—Henry, Nash & Co.; Bond & Parsons; Sims & Coventry; Taylor Bros.; Phelps, Dodge & Co., and others. We readily admit that to these free tin-plates would be quite an advantage.

British manufacturers would also expect to realize some benefit from free tin-plates. For over eight years they have been constantly complaining of the low price of tin-plates in the United States. It must be observed that the agitation for a protective tariff and home production of tin-plates has had its moral effect, in a large measure at least, of keeping down the price of the article in our markets. Let free trade in tin-plates be established, and the agitation in favor of protection and home production cease, it is but natural to suppose that British manufacturers, finding themselves absolutely masters of the situation, will materially advance prices to a point at least satisfactory to themselves.

It is, therefore, evident to our minds that the real beneficiaries of free tin-plates would be the foreign producers of the article, foreign merchants, and importers. To the American workingman and chief consumer no material benefit whatever would accrue. On the other hand, as wage-earners our workingmen would be greatly injured.

In the name of the iron and steel workers, we therefore protest against the action of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee in placing tin-plates on the free-list, or against any reduction in the present duty.

We go further and earnestly petition Congress to seriously meditate as to the advisability of placing a protective duty on tin-plates, a duty commensurate with the higher labor cost in this country; thus securing employment to American labor in the production of tin-plates at wages in harmony with those now existing in our iron and steel manufactories.

Mr. Chairman, this House will make a very grave mistake when it attacks these great industries along the Ohio valley and in other parts of the country, where thousands and thousands of men are employed, who live in comfortable homes and receive liberal wages. They should not suffer a reduction of wages and a loss of employment by this attempt to strike down the American tariff.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this question of the production of tin is one in which the people of the West are deeply interested. If there are any "infant industries" in the United States that need protection and fostering, this is one of them. Some four or five years ago it was definitely and reliably ascertained that there was tin-producing ore in the Black Hills of Dakota, and after repeated experiments capitalists felt justified in investing their money in those mines. They have invested very nearly half a million of dollars. There is no question at all, judging from the most reliable authority attainable, that there exists in the Black Hills of Dakota sufficient tin to supply the needs of the people of the United States. The only difficulty which has been met with in mining this tin is in reducing the ore, and it only remains to secure machinery adapted for this purpose in order to make the enterprise a success.

The people of Dakota have expended over $100,000 out of their own pockets in the establishment and maintenance of a school of mines at Rapid City for the purpose of experimenting with and testing these and other ores in the Black Hills. I will read a brief extract from Professor Bailey, United States geologist for Montana. Speaking of the tin-bearing rock in the region of Harney's Peak in the Black Hills, he says that it quarried from the surface; that there are veins measuring more than 50 feet in width which will average much better than those in Cornwall. He declares there is enough to supply the world, and says that it is impossible to imagine this great body of ore ever being exhausted. If these statements are correct, the discovery is one of the most important of the century.

I have not time to enter into a detailed statement as to the difficulties which have been met with in reducing these ores. Though they constitute a different formation from any heretofore discovered, it will not do to say that the skill, the energy, the ingenuity of the American people can not overcome these difficulties, if this industry is properly protected. The people of this country can well afford to protect and nourish this industry, which, if done, will make them independent in time of need of other countries for their supply of tin.

I incorporate in my remarks a statement from the commissioner of emigration of Dakota in reference to what has been done to develop these mines. It is poor economy for our people to encourage the development of foreign mines to the injury of our own.

Mr. NUTTING. I will inquire of the gentleman whether, in the part of the country to which he refers, the ore is not now being mined and shipped abroad?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes; they are shipping ore to England to be tested and reduced. A large amount is being shipped. This clause placing tin products on the free-list should be stricken out.

TIN.

This metal was discovered in the hills in 1883. To whom the honor of the discovery belongs is already a matter of some question, but it is admitted that the first public announcement was made by Maj. A. J. Simmons, of Rapid City, through the Journal of that place, in a communication under date of June 8, 1883. After sketching the geology of the Etta mica mine, where the discovery was first made, with accuracy, and stating that time and exploration are needed to determine the value, he closes by saying:

"At the present, however, the discovery must be regarded as one of the highest importance, and I venture to say that the indications already point to the existence of an extensive district of the mineral."

In the same month he forwarded a box of the specimens to a San Francisco capitalist, who sent Professor William P. Blake, a well-known mining engineer, to examine the find. After this the scientific world received information of it through the American Journal of Science, in September of the same year.

The mining is a new industry in America, and its development has of necessity been slow, but not slower than the development of the rich silver mines of early days on the Pacific coast and in Colorado. It requires large sums of money to properly open these mines and to build mills for the treatment of the ore.

There are two well-known tin districts in the hills. One occupies a belt about 4 miles wide, lying around the northern and western flanks of Harney's Peak. It extends southward to a point 6 miles south of Custer City. It will probably be found entirely encircling the granitic area of the hills. The other section is located about 16 miles southwest of Spearfish, where a small archæan area has been laid bare by denudation.

The tin-stone is found in granitic veins or dikes in the early or schistose archæan, shown upon the map, and which vary in width from a few inches to hundreds of feet. In some sections the veins consist of an albitic greisen—that is, a rock composed of albite, feldspar, and mica, through which are disseminated crystals of cassiterite. In other sections, as upon the west side of Harney's Peak, the veins are composed of typical greisen—that is, quartz and mica. The crystals of cassiterite vary much in size, some having been found of several pounds weight, but generally they seem to partake of the nature of the greisen—that is, if the individual crystals of feldspar or quartz and mica are large, the accompanying crystals of cassiterite are large, and vice versa. That through which the tin is finely disseminated is usually richer than the coarsely crystallized rocks.

The percentage of tin-stone in the greisen varies, but there are many veins carrying rock yielding from 2 to 4 per cent. That this is by no means a small percentage may be seen by the following:

In Altenburg, in Saxony [Mineral Resources of the United States, 1883-'84, article, Tin], the yield is from one-half to 1 per cent. In Cornwall, as shown by the Government statistics, the yield of block tin for the whole country is less than 2 per cent. In the Palberro district, in Cornwall, the average of all the ore crushed in five years was eighty-nine hundredths of 1 per cent.; yet these mines yielded a fair profit.

There have been many mines discovered and recorded in both the northern and southern sections. The latter is the more extensive section of the two, which is simply saying that here a larger archæan area has been laid bare by erosion, and had the sedimentary rocks between the two sections been removed, the districts would doubtless have been found continuous. In the northern, or Nigger Hill district, as it is called, the best known claim is the Cleveland, owned by the American Tin Company, who have sunk a shaft to the depth of 160 feet. At the 100-footstation, where a cross-cut has been driven, the vein is found to have a width of over 200 feet, and to carry tin throughout, but a zone about 30 feet wide near each wall is somewhat richer than the remainder of the lode. The company own about seventy claims, a mill site, water-power, etc., and expect to operate upon a large scale.

This district was first worked exclusively for gold, and in it were found rich placer diggings. The miners were troubled by the vast amount of "iron" which filled the riffles of their sluice-boxes and interfered with their work. It was harder to separate from the gold than the "iron" of other districts, for a magnet would not act upon it. No one suspected the black substance to be tin-stone, but such it was. The miners now save it, and several tons have been shipped to New York and to England. It is the opinion of the writer, who has thoroughly examined the district, that stream-tin mining as a business would pay.

Other groups of mines in this section are controlled by the Callahan Company, by Chapman & Hydliff, by Miller & Co., and by others.

The first company to operate upon the tin deposits in the southern hills was the Etta Company. They bought a number of claims, but did their principle work upon the Etta, where tin was first found. The management of the company was left to parties who could have had no real knowledge of the subject of tin mining. Without having the mine sufficiently opened to supply a 20-ton mill, they erected a 200-ton mill, and used machinery which did not do the work, for the tailings from the mill, as sampled by a competent English engineer, and also by the writer, yield 2 per cent. tin-stone; that is, the quantity wasted exceeded the average of all the ores mined in England, and was three times as great as the quantity which has been found to pay in Saxony. They crushed about 400 tons of ore, which, notwithstanding the waste, yielded 2 per cent. block tin, which was shipped East. The management of the company has been severely criticised, and, after the expenditure of about $350,000, they closed down, but immediately bonded sixty or seventy additional claims in the district, and secured the services of a well-known English mining expert in the service of John Taylor's Sons, London.

This gentleman spent several weeks in thoroughly examining and sampling the different claims of the company, and advised that certain work be done upon those bonded. The result of his examination was doubtless favorable, for all bonds so far that have fallen due have been paid, and during the present month (June, 1887) the company have paid out in the purchase of these claims over $100,000.

They have secured a mountain park of several hundred acres in extent, near Hill City, in Pennington County, water-power, etc., and announced their intention to build their works at that point. Their plan of operation also includes the building of a narrow-gauge railroad from Rapid City to that point, which railroad has already been surveyed.

Other companies besides the Etta are preparing to work. Some Chicago capitalists recently purchased the Tin Mountain group of mines, near Custer City, which is said to be a veritable mountain of tin-bearing rock. Some masses of this sent to the school of mines at Rapid yielded 40 per cent. cassiterite. It is claimed that there are many thousands of tons of ore in sight that can be worked to a profit. Many claims are owned by prospectors and others who are not able to develop them. Others will be found, for so far none has been sought for except those which outcrop or show upon the surface.

It will be seen from examination of the map that tin is found in three counties—Custer, Pennington, and Lawrence. The writer has personally examined all the districts and has made many assays of the ore. When sampled in quite large quantities it seldom runs below 2 per cent., and often yields 4, 6, 8, and even 12 per cent. These assays refer to averages taken across veins, dumps, sample lots, etc., for of course picked specimens can be easily had which are nearly pure cassiterite.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On page 3, lines 45 and 46, strike out these words, "or lead, or with a mixture of which these metals is a component part."

I offer this because the paragraph as it stands offers encouragement to the importation of tin-plate adulterated with lead. Much of the plate now imported is so adulterated, and the importation of such plate should be prohibited instead of encouraged. This leaded plate is used by some unscrupulous makers of cans for packing and preserving vegetables and fruits. As is well known, the acids in some of these vegetables and fruits cut open the lead in these tins, and the result is that the contents are poisoned and become highly dangerous to health and life. I clip from a Philadelphia paper of this morning an account of one such case, and they are of very frequent occurrence.

A dish of canned tomatoes eaten at dinner time on Monday in the household of Dr. John W. Rauck, who keeps a drug store on Germantown avenue near Nicetown lane, poisoned all those who partook of the vegetable, and in the case of Dr. Ranck himself the poison came near terminating fatally. Those poisoned were Dr. J. W. Ranck, Albert D. Forrest, his assistant in the store; Frank Nestor, the office boy; Charles Ranck, aged 11, and little Mamie Ranck, aged 7.

Mr. Forrest, who was one of those poisoned, said that it was the opinion of Dr. Howell, Dr. Ranck, and himself that the tomatoes poisoned them, as every one that partook of them was taken down with cramps. The symptoms were those of lead poisoning, and it was supposed that the acids in the tomatoes acted on the lead in the cans and the poisonous mixture permeated the contents. The grocer will notify the manufacturer of the cans. Mr. Forrest said that all would be about in a few days, as the only difficulty now was one of weakness and lassitude.

I repeat we should prohibit the importation of such adulterations, and not open wide our doors to them by placing them on the free-list.

Mr. MACDONALD. Mr. Chairman, I have followed the discussion, during the consideration of this bill by separate paragraphs, until I am actually weary listening to what has been stated in behalf of protection. I represent a district which I may say is purely agricultural. If there is a man in that district who is engaged in a protected industry and would be benefited by the increase of this tariff beyond the present rate, I do not know it. I have been waiting patiently to hear some gentleman on the other side tell upon what principle of justice every constituent in my district who is a producer and who has to come in direct competition with the labor of Europe—pauper labor, if you please—should continue to be taxed in this way.

In regard to this subject of tin-plates there has recently been established in my district, in the city of Faribault, an infant industry, an establishment for the purpose of canning fruits and vegetables. I recently received a letter from the president of the company owning that establishment, a letter not intended for publication, asking, as a mere business inquiry, whether, in my opinion, the Mills bill would become a law by the 1st of July; stating that if it did, it would be several hundred dollars in the pockets of the company, as the passage of the bill, with this clause in it, would have the effect to reduce the price of tin-plates.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], in discussing this subject yesterday, undertook to demonstrate that the effect of the reduction would be so infinitesimally small, in favor of the consumers of fruits and vegetables, as to make practically no difference. Admitting, for the purpose of argument alone, that that is true, the fact remains that the gentlemen who own this factory are constituents of mine, and if this bill should pass they would save several hundred dollars by its operation. Why should I not vote to save them that amount of money instead of voting to put it in the pockets of men living in the city of Pittsburgh or somewhere else?

How long are we to be taxed in this way? The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. YOST], in the course of his argument yesterday, said that Virginia had paid tribute to protected industries elsewhere for thirty or forty years, and now she demanded that the country should submit to pay tribute to her. Why, sir, we in Minnesota have paid tribute for more than thirty years, and if we yield to the plea of the gentleman from Virginia, it simply means that Minnesota must continue to pay tribute, for we have none of this mineral, and no establishments to be benefited by its production. To gentlemen representing portions of the country whose people are entirely occupied in agricultural productions, the inquiry naturally suggests itself when this continued effort, which is continually being made for the benefit of these men who own these manufacturing establishments, is to cease, and whether anything will ever be proposed by the opposition for the benefit of the producer; and how long are we going to continue this condition of things?

The question which naturally arises in the minds of those who are consumers of the articles named in this bill, and who have to depend upon a foreign market for the sale and price of their products, is, how long are we to continue to pay taxes to feed and clothe this "infant," otherwise known as the industries spoken of here so much, until it arrives at the age of manhood? Judging from what we hear, we shall continue to pay tribute until the youngest man in this House—ay, the infant just born—shall have arrived at the mature age of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], and then we shall not be through if we yield to the arguments which are constantly repeated.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR rose.

Mr. MACDONALD. I can not yield; I have only five minutes. It is a part of the policy of the other side during this discussion to interrupt. I refrain from doing so myself, and must decline to yield. I wish to say in conclusion that I deny emphatically that the placing of tin-plates on the free-list will have any effect upon the sheet-iron industry. I know it to be a fact that tin is being generally discarded as roofing material, and sheet-iron, especially corrugated sheet-iron, is superseding it.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who will now address the committee, be permitted to proceed for fifteen minutes of the time allotted to this side of the House.

Mr. KELLEY. And in addition to the hour heretofore allowed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, but for that part of the hour allotted to this side.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair). Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois being permitted to proceed for fifteen minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I am much obliged to the committee for extending this indulgence to me, and I shall endeavor to improve that time by making an argument solely in reference to tin-plates, and I shall not digress upon other subjects connected with tariff legislation.

This is one of the most important items embodied in this bill. It is a proposition to place on the free-list tin-plates, which are consumed universally, and by the great body of our people. The present duty upon tin-plates is 1 cent a pound, and it is proposed by gentlemen on the other side of the House to strike this item from the free-list as proposed by the pending bill, and insert a clause, when we reach the dutiable items of the bill in subsequent proceedings, increasing the duty to 2.2 cents a pound.

At 1 cent a pound the duty paid to the Government on this article last year amounted to $5,706,433, the value of the imported article being $16,883,813. This was the value in Europe on board ship, and does not include freight charges or insurance, nor does it represent the cost to the consumers of this country, who are obliged to pay these freights and also the commissions to the middlemen.

This duty collected, of $5,700,000, is added to the cost of this commodity to the consumers of this country.

I know it has been denied by gentlemen upon the other side that the duty paid upon this article, or similar articles, is carried forward and placed upon the value of it and paid eventually by the consumer. But it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if there is any proposition plainer than another in connection with such legislation, it is that the $5,700,000 paid as customs duties upon the article of tin-plates was charged up by the merchant to the purchaser, and by him charged up to his customer, and by the merchant finally to the consumer. I am amazed that any gentleman should dispute a proposition so perfectly plain as that.

Mr. ADAMS. That is true, because no tin-plate is produced in this country.

Mr. SPRINGER. My colleague concedes that none is produced here. It is admitted, then, by my colleague that this addition of the duty to the prime cost is paid by the consumer. There is no industry of this kind in this country now, and it is admitted upon the other side that there can be no such industry. [Cries of "Oh, no," on the Republican side.] Do not be in a hurry, gentlemen; it is admitted that there can be no such industry unless the duty is increased, as indicated by gentlemen upon the other side, to the amount of 2.2 cents per pound. That is the completion of the sentence that I had started to utter when I was interrupted by exclamations from gentlemen on that side. Of course, I can not say everything at once.

The proposition, then, is this: Tin-plate is a product coming into this country to the value of over $16,000,000 annually, which is not produced here now, and can not be produced under the present duty in this country; but if the present duty, as is proposed on the other side shall be doubled and two-tenths of a cent more is added, it can be and will be eventually produced. That is the condition. That is what is claimed.

Now the effect of doubling the duty or rather increasing it to two and two-tenths cents per pound would be——

Mr. BRUMM. To cheapen the price of tin-plate generally. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Now be quiet, if you please. I do not need the assistance of the gentleman. [Laughter.] The effect of this proposition would be to increase the cost to the consumer by the additional tax placed upon the article, none being made at this time in this country, and none could be made until a plant could be produced for its manufacture.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Which would take at least twelve months.

Mr. SPRINGER. And which the gentleman from Tennessee says would take twelve months. In my own opinion it would take very much more time than that, but, at least for the present and until such plant was established, it would add to the cost of this article to the consumers of the country the increased burden of 1.2 cents a pound. In other words, instead of paying a tax upon the article to the amount of the duty now collected of $5,700,000, we would pay not only that but an additional tax of 1.2 cents per pound, making an aggregate of $12,554,000 a year.

Until the new plant was established in this country the Government would receive the additional revenue caused by adding 1.2 cents a pound to the duty on this article. But as soon as the home plant was completed, and the home demand could be supplied in this country, importations of tin-plates would cease, and the Government would cease to collect the tax or customs duty. Our revenues would then be cut off to the extent of $12,554,000 a year. Tin-plates would not be sold much, if any, cheaper, for it is admitted that tin-plates can not be manufactured in this country at a profit with a duty of 1 cent a pound. The home manufacturer would charge the people an amount just below that at which the foreign product could be sold after paying the duty of 2.2 cents per pound and freights and other necessary charges.

The sum of $5,700,000 now paid as a duty upon the importation of tin-plates goes into the Treasury of the United States and becomes a part of the people's funds to be applied to public purposes; but if you increase the duty, as proposed on the other side of the House, the effect will be ultimately to transfer the $5,700,000 from the public Treasury to the pockets of the manufacturers who may grow up hereafter, and also give them an additional bonus of 1.2 cents per pound, or over $6,000,000 more, making a total bonus of $12,554,000 a year. If successful in this it would be the inauguration of a policy that would take $5,700,000 out of the public Treasury, add $6,000,000 to it, and turn over the whole amount, $12,554,000, thus extorted from the consumers of tin-plate, to the National Tin-Plate Association, to enable it to manufacture the article in this country.

This is protection pure and simple, and solely for the sake of protection. It is a perversion of the taxing power, and has no warrant in the Constitution.

It is, in other words, a proposition to make, by legislation, a business profitable that would not be profitable and could not be carried on without the tax. If the Government is to enter upon such a policy, gentlemen may turn their attention to other industries which we could encourage in like manner with equal propriety. They may insist hereafter that tea, now the product of Chinese cheap labor, should be produced in this country. We pay out annually some $16,000,000 for tea, just as we pay about $16,000,000 annually for tin-plates. With a view of protecting against Chinese cheap labor something may yet be proposed with a view to establish tea-culture amongst ourselves.

There may hereafter be in California or some other part of the country gentlemen who will proclaim that it is a great outrage to continue paying $16,000,000 to China a year for tea. They may contend that our own people should produce what we reqnire. This could perhaps be accomplished by placing a duty of a dollar or $2 a pound on tea. Give a sufficient bonus to our own people for producing it, and it certainly can be done if we resort to forced production. Other industries could be created and fostered in like manner. But such a policy is unwise and not in accordance with the spirit of our institutions. I am utterly opposed to it, and am ready to meet gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber before the people on this question.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] stated on yesterday that this article had been taxed at the rate of 2½ cents per pound at one time, and that under the operation of that tax this business flourished and the price of tin-plate was brought down from $12 to $5 a box.

I have looked over the statistics and the tariff records and I can not find that that article ever was taxed 2½ cents a pound. It never was taxed at that rate. There was a clause put in the tariff act of June 30, 1864, which for a few weeks was construed in that way by the custom-house officers; but Mr. Fessenden, then Secretary of the Treasury, on the 22d day of July, 1864, construed the clause in the bill to refer to another article entirely, and admitted tin-plates at 25 per cent. ad valorem.

If the gentlemen will refer to Evans's Imports and Duties from 1867 to 1883 they will find a statement, on page 431, of tin-plates, terne-plates, and taggers tin admitted into this country from 1867 to 1883, with the rates of duty upon them and the prices prevailing during that period, and they will find that the duty, ad valorem, never exceeded 25 per cent. until 1883, when it was increased by reason of the fluctuations in price to 29.9 per cent. ad valorem; but the price of tin-plate has continually declined in this country without reference to the duty. Under the rate of $1\frac{1}{5}$ cents per pound, which was established by the act of February 8, 1875, the price continued to decline from 5.20 cents to 3.74 cents per pound, which was the price in 1883; and the price at this time is 3 cents per pound or $3 a hundred. The decline in price is caused entirely by the decline of prices abroad. The price in this country is affected solely by the freight, insurance, and duty. The fluctuations in Europe occur by reason of the increased competition and the improved facilities for production.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman will not deny that at the time the industry started in this country tin-plate was selling at $12 a box?

Mr. SPRINGER. That was not caused at all by the duty on the article. At that time there was a corresponding price abroad. The duty never exceeded $1\frac{1}{5}$ cents per pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem.

During the Forty-seventh Congress this subject was before the Tariff Commission, and Mr. Nathan A. Taylor, of Philadelphia, on behalf of the importers of tin-plate and the manufacturers of tin-ware of this country, appeared before that commission and delivered an address. Persons interested in that industry in the city of Philadelphia sent a petition to Congress at that time. In 1882, when the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentlemen interested in the manufacture of tin-ware in this country desired to be heard before the Committee on Ways and Means. They were refused a hearing; at least so they say in their petition, which I hold in my hand. I read from that petition:

> Inasmuch as the Committee on Ways and Means decided to hear no oral argument on any matter relating to the revision of the tariff now under consideration by them, thus debarring us from refuting some of the serious errors and misstatements which have been presented to the committee and as printed in their report, we therefore communicated with them in the only way possible, namely, letter and telegram, and we think they did not receive our communications in time to consider our suggestions. We deem it now our duty to call your attention to the inconsistency in the recommendation of the tariff committee to advance the duty on tin-plates, and as you will be called upon to vote upon this revision, we deem it necessary that you should have all the points of information which we can give you, so that you will be enabled to vote intelligently and understandingly upon this important item.

This is the introductory to the petition and memorial of fifty-five firms in the city of Philadephia who represent, as they state in their memorial, two hundred thousand persons in this country who are engaged in the manufacture of tinware that is consumed by every family in the United States. The petition sets forth the facts very clearly in regard to this industry. I quote further:

> In every former tariff bill which has been enacted the item of tin-plate has occupied a specific and independent place, and not taken in conjunction with any other article, and we think very wisely, inasmuch as there has been nothing of the kind successfully produced in this country.

And I call the gentleman's attention to this:

> And we think that the present duty of 1.1 per pound, which is equivalent to about 33 per cent. ad valorem, should have been sufficient protection to any one ambitious of manufacturing in the United States, especially as Congress, in order to encourage the manufacture of tin-plate in this country, abolished the duty on pig-tin in 1875.

Notwithstanding the abolition of the duty on pig-tin for the purpose of encouraging its manufacture in this country no firm began the industry, for the reason, I presume, that the product could not be made at a profit with a duty of 1 cent or 1.1 cents a pound.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] be extended.

Mr. REED. That will not interfere with the arrangement previously made.

Mr. SPRINGER. No. I hope not.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see the time is passing rapidly. I will ask to have printed in the RECORD some extracts from this petition, and the address of Mr. Taylor, and I desire to call the attention of the gentlemen on the other side to the names appended to the petition, the names of fifty-five business houses in the city of Philadelphia, who ought to be represented on this floor. But it seems they are not now represented. These firms protest against increasing the duty on this article, and ask Congress to reduce the tax. They would doubtless have asked that it be placed on the free-list, if they had supposed it possible.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not yield for a speech.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. There are men who will explain away the arguments used by those very gentlemen. There are men from Philadelphia on the floor who will do so.

Mr. SPRINGER. They will have plenty of time to do so hereafter. I can not yield for that purpose now, as I have but a few minutes of my time left. In that time I desire to call attention to the specious argument offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] on this side of the House, and also the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] on the other. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], in his remarks yesterday, said:

> To-day there are coming to the United States $17,000,000 in value of tin-plates. If those tin-plates were produced in this country twenty-four thousand people here could be employed in this industry. The labor in Great Britain and Wales required to produce the tin-plates we consume amounts, I am advised, to $9,000,000, and it is only fair to conclude if we produced those tin-plates in this country the laborers engaged in that work would receive from it some ten or twelve millions of dollars.

A similar statement was made by the gentleman from Ohio on the right, and it is a customary argument upon that side of the House, that we ought to have a Chinese wall built up around this country so as to prevent any foreign product from coming in that can possibly be made here. Now, what are the facts in regard to imports and exports?

The fact is, that last year there were exported from this country articles which could not be consumed at home, and which found no home market, valued at $725,000,000. If these products were produced by laborers earning $400 each per annum, that would show that 1,800,000 persons were engaged in making products which could not be sold in this country and could only find a market abroad, and consequently that the wages to remunerate their labor came from foreigners.

These laborers would represent, counting five persons to every family, 9,000,000 of our population. Hence during last year that number of our population were dependent for the means of support entirely upon the people of foreign countries.

Mr. BRUMM. Those articles were exported in the face of a protective tariff, I believe.

Mr. SPRINGER. And yet gentlemen rise here and deplore the fact that $16,000,000 worth of tin-plates are consumed in this country which are made abroad, and which they say ought to be made here. Do they forget that more than $700,000,000 worth of our products were taken and consumed and paid for by foreigners last year? Now, what are we getting in exchange for these products which we must export? Here is a pamphlet which shows what we did get, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, giving our exports and imports for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.

This report shows that of the foreign products which came here in exchange for ours sent abroad there were $233,000,000 worth that were on the free-list, articles adjudged by gentlemen on the other side to be safe and harmless to be admitted free. Then there were articles worth $165,000,000 that were imported in a crude condition, materials which entered into the various products of our domestic industries. Only $59,542,000 worth of these crude articles were dutiable, the remaining $106,000,000 worth being on the free-list.

Will gentlemen say that that importation injured our workingmen? Why, these were the materials that were imported by manufacturers and workingmen, in order that they might have employment in making the different useful articles of our domestic production. Without these articles many of our home industries could not have existed.

Then there is another list of "articles wholly or partially manufactured for use as materials in the manufactures and mechanic arts," amounting to $79,000,000, among which are found tin-plates. Only $12,000,000 worth of these partially manufactured articles are on the free-list. These articles require labor to make them suitable for consumption, and furnish employment to millions of our people.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not now.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Before you conclude?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not now, but when I conclude. There is also a list of articles of luxury, articles used only by the rich, such as wines, jewelry, etc., amounting to $90,000,000 in value, less than $4,000,000 of which are on the free-list. And the manufactured articles which come in ready for consumption amount to $136,000,000, and only $11,000,000 worth of which are on the free-list. Those articles ready for consumption which pay a duty are taxed at the rate of 49.73 per cent. ad valorem. Surely this is protection enough!

On these articles, amounting to $136,000,000 in value, which came in manufactured ready for consumption, the people of the United States had to pay a tax of nearly 50 per cent. ad valorem, amounting to $61,898,366, and the benefit of that protection, whatever it was, went to the protected industries.

Mr. Chairman, there are other things that I desire to say, but I see the gavel raised, so I will not further trespass upon the time of the committee.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. My time has expired; otherwise I should be glad to answer any questions. I will ask to print in the RECORD the whole of the petition to which I have referred, and also the address of Mr. Nathan A. Taylor, of Philadelphia, before the Tariff Commission of 1882. They are as follows:

Petition to Congress from consumers of tin-plate, in opposition to advancing the duty thereon.

To the honorable the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Inasmuch as the Committee on Ways and Means decided to hear no oral argument on any matter relating to the revision of the tariff now under consideration by them, thus debarring us from refuting some of the serious errors and misstatements which have been presented to the commission, and as printed in their report, we therefore communicated with them in the only way possible, namely, letter and telegram, and we think they did not receive our communications in time to consider our suggestions. We deem it now our duty to call your attention to the inconsistency in the recommendation of the tariff committee to advance the duty on tin-plates, and as you will be called upon to vote upon this revision, we deem it necessary that you should have all the points of information which we can give you, so that you will be enabled to vote intelligently and understandingly upon this important item.

In every former tariff bill which has been enacted the item of tin-plate has occupied a specific and independent place, and not taken in conjunction with any other article, and we think very wisely, inasmuch as there has been nothing of the kind successfully produced in the country, and we think that the present duty of 1.1 per pound, which is equivalent to about 33 per cent. ad valorem, should have been sufficient protection to any one ambitious of manufacturing in the United States, especially as Congress, in order to encourage the manufacture of tin-plate in this country, abolished the duty on pig-tin in 1875.

We are now paying, and have been since 1875, a higher rate of duty on tin-plate than at any period since a tariff was instituted, in verification of which we submit the following schedule:

Prior to 1842, free. 1842 imposed 2½ per cent. ad valorem; 1846 increased to 15 per cent.; 1857 reduced to 8 per cent.; 1861 increased to 10 per cent.; 1862 increased to 25 per cent., special war tax; 1872 reduced to 15 per cent.; 1875 specific duty 1.1 cents per pound, then equal to 15 per cent., now equal to 33 per cent.

Tin-plate is in fact a raw material, furnishing a basis for a larger or more widespread industry than any other articles; therefore, in behalf of the tin-plate workers, who number over two hundred thousand, and the many auxiliary trades depending upon the same, and the entire population of the United States, we beg to call your attention to the reasons herein contained why this unjust and unnecessary tax should not be imposed upon fifty-five millions of people.

Tin-plates, on account of their cheapness and great adaptability, are applied to numberless uses, namely, in the manufacture of kitchen utensils, stove furniture, outfits for miners and lumbermen, roofs and gutters of houses, cans and boxes for preserving meats, vegetables, oils, etc., and are a necessity to the poorest people of our country.

To curtail this industry would strike the severest blow to manufacturing and agricultural interests of the country that it has ever received, and any advance in duty would open the door for the introduction of ware manufactured by foreign mechanics, to the direct detriment of our 200,000 workmen, thereby closing our factories

The entire population have been looking for a reduction of duty on tin-plate one-half cent to three-fourths cent per pound, which it should be. At the present rate of duty the farmer is enabled to purchase tin cans from the nearest tin-worker and can any surplus of fruits, vegetables, meats, game, fish, milk, butter, or lard, in fact any eatable that would otherwise go to waste. Of course the United States can not consume all of these goods, as is evident from the fact that we have shipped to Europe up to December 1st of this year over twenty-five million cans of produce, which simply includes salmon, oysters, beef, and fruits, and does not take into consideration the enormous canned exports of petroleum, lard, lard-oil, spices, blacking, etc., where they find a ready sale at prices fairly remunerative to our producers, and England receives back in the shape of cans manufactured here the major part of all the tin-plate imported. We have now the monopoly of the canned-goods trade. A good reduction of duty would largely increase this trade, and as our country is rapidly growing we must find some outlet for the prolific productions of our soil.

A few large canneries can take advantage of the refund of duties, but the smaller parties who in the aggregate produce the most, can not. Increasing the duty will prevent the foreigner from continuing the use of a variety of vegetables, fruits, etc., after we have been educating them to the use of the same for years, or they will seek their supplies elsewhere.

The present rate of duty on tin-plate of 1.1 cents per pound is equivalent to $24.64 per ton. The Tariff Commission's recommendation of 2.2 cents per pound is equal to $49.28 per ton which is equal to 66⅔ per cent. of the present English cost, and the rate just adopted by the Committee of Ways and Means is 2 cents per pound, equal to $44.80 per ton, equal to 60 per cent. upon the cost value, whereas according to the intention of the tariff at the time the rate was made specific it should be $11.25 per ton to equal the ad valorem duty of 15 per cent., which was the duty prior to the change to specific.

We respectfully submit to your consideration the facts before enumerated in connection with the printed argument herewith, which was made before the Tariff Commission during their sitting in Philadelphia in behalf of the consumers of tin-plate. We earnestly beg that you will give the important question the consideration that it deserves.

Yours, respectfully,

Argument referred to as having been read before the United States Tariff Commission by Nathan A. Taylor, representing the consumers of tin-plates, etc.

It may not be generally known that the present duty on tin-plate is unintentionally higher than was sought to be imposed by the tariff act of February 8, 1875. We are in fact to-day paying a duty of fully 100 per cent. in excess of what was intended by that act. We propose to explain this briefly, and to recommend to the commission a reduction in the duty on tin-plates to three-quarters of 1 cent per pound.

Recognizing the fact that there have been more important interests than tin-plates before the commission—that our growing industries are properly deserving of the fullest consideration, we desire to be as brief as possible and to present only some important facts in favor of the slight reduction asked for. We appear in behalf of the entire tin-plate trade of Philadelphia—a trade which is rapidly assuming enormous proportions, and, as we shall presently see, is identified so largely with our growing commerce.

We propose to call your attention to the several acts of Congress upon the subject and the resulting duties; to the growth of the trade; to its advantages and to its value as affecting American interests, American industries, and American commerce.

We shall disregard technicalities and combine in the one phrase, "tin-plates," the "tin and terne plates and taggers tin" of commerce.

Let us first review the several acts of Congress and point out the inconsistency of the present tariff of 1.1 cents per pound.

By the early acts of Congress tin-plate was admitted free of duty. By the act of March 2, 1861, a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem was imposed. By the act of July 14, 1862, the duty was temporarily increased to 25 per cent. ad valorem. I say "temporarily," as the title of this tariff act reads, "An act increasing temporarily the duties on imports," and being a war measure its repeal was thus promised at an early date. It was not, however, until the passage of the act of June 6, 1872, that the tariff was reduced to 15 per cent. ad valorem, and by the same act pig-tin or block-tin was placed upon the free-list with the sole object of encouraging the manufacture of tin-plates in our own country.

The expansion of the tin-plate trade had by this time brought with it a wide increase in the number of its brands or grades, and the multiform qualities were so difficult to reconcile that Congress, in the act of February 8, 1875, substituted the specific duty of 1.1 cents per pound in place of the ad valorem duty of 15 per cent. The intention was excellent, as, although a specific duty taxes tin-plates most unequally and to the injury of the largest class of consumers, still we believe it removes all difficulties in the way of a just and simple administration of the tariff and places all importers upon the same fair basis. This act did not take into consideration the large decline in price that was to follow and has therefore been most prejudicial in effect, as the following facts will show. Its intention was merely to change the nature of the duty from ad valorem to specific, to neither increase nor decrease it, and the corresponding duty of 1.1 cents per pound was ascertained by taking the average of values ruling at the time; a most unfortunate mistake, as the only fair way was to take the average, not of the values of each kind, but of the value of the quantities of each kind used or imported. Now, we will be pardoned if we are obliged to bring in some figures to verify our statements, but they are the most reliable of witnesses. During the year 1872 (when the tariff was reduced from 25 per cent. to 15 per cent. ad valorem) the following were the average values of tin-plates in Liverpool:

Charcoal tin, highest, 46*s.* per box of 1 hundredweight, less 3 per cent.
Charcoal tin, lowest, 32*s.* per box of 1 hundredweight, less 3 per cent.
Coke tin, highest, 40*s.* per box of 1 hundredweight, less 3 per cent.
Coke tin, lowest, 28*s.* per box of 1 hundredweight, less 3 per cent.

It was a year of extreme and violent fluctuations, and it was our first experience of one of those "booms" that have been so disastrous upon prices since. The duty upon the above values at 15 per cent. ad valorem was the exact equivalent of 1.1 cents per pound. In 1875, when the tariff was changed from 15 per cent. ad valorem to 1.1 cents per pound specific, the following were the values of tin-plates in Liverpool:

Charcoal tin, highest, 35*s.* per box of 1 hundredweight, less 3 per cent.

Charcoal tin, lowest, 24*s.* 6*d.* per box of 1 hundred weight, less 3 per cent.
Coke tin, highest, 27*s.* per box of 1 hundredweight, less 3 per cent.
Coke tin, lowest, 20*s.* per box of 1 hundredweight, less 3 per cent.

A reduction all along the line of about 10*s.* per box of 112 pounds, a large decline having occurred over the years 1873–'74, as the natural result of the inflated prices of 1872. Now, the average value of all importations for the year 1875 was about 24*s.* per box, or $5.64, upon which the intentional duty of 15 per cent. ad valorem would have been 84 cents per hundred weight, or exactly three-quarters of a cent per pound; but it was assumed, and very fairly, that as values might react, the Government was justly entitled to a little higher specific duty, and a tariff of 1.1 cents per pound was imposed, and an actual increase in the duty equivalent to an ad valorem one of 22 per cent. was the result for that year alone, with a corresponding increase in the revenue. That was not the intention of the act of February 8, 1875.

Since 1875 we have passed through seven years of extreme depression, and a large decline in values has resulted with the single exception of a temporary improvement for a few months in 1879–'80. Production over these seven years has steadily increased beyond the wants of consumption, and as the manufacture has been cheapened through a variety of causes, we can not look for any return to the high values of former years. The following short table will show the effect of the present tariff of $1\frac{1}{10}$ cents per pound:

Year.	Average value of all importations reduced to cwts. for the year, and upon which the uniform specific duty of $1.23 has been paid.	Equivalent ad valorem duty of—
	s. d.	Per cent.
1877	18 0 = 4.23	29
1878	15 0 = 3.52	31
1879	17 0 = 4.00	31
1880	18 6 = 4.35	28
1881	16 0 = 3.76	33
1882 (six months)	16 0 = 3.76	33

The equivalent specific duty of 15 per cent. ad valorem over these six years, is exactly fifty-five one-hundredths of a cent per pound, and yet we are paying just double this amount!

Now, only to point out in a few words some of the advantages of tin-plate, let us say at the outset that its great point is its absolute cheapness, bringing it into universal use. It is in no sense whatever an article of luxury, and in this respect, perhaps, it stands alone as essential to the humblest kitchen and the most obscure cabin in the growing West. It is the one material for a roof by reason of its lightness and extreme durability. It furnishes our kitchens, where nothing can take its place for cleanliness and absolute purity from all poisonous properties. Two-thirds of its importations are made up into cans for meats, fruits, vegetables, and petroleum, and these indispensable adjuncts of our daily life are thus within the reach of the humblest purchaser. It gives employment to hundreds of thousands of busy hands in all its varied industries throughout our country. Its importation is in the nature of raw material which is worked up here and which we can not supply ourselves. A reduction of the duty would cheapen it to the consumer. An increase of duty would check its importation and render necessary a variety of substitutes.

Tin-plates are not made in this country. Their manufacture has been attempted at various periods, but has never succeeded. We can not think of competing with the cheap labor of Europe where the workman is satisfied with 20 or 30 shillings weekly, and where his family frequently aid him in adding to his receipts. We therefore have no industry of this kind to protect. The placing of pig-tin on the free-list over ten years ago, and a duty on tin-plate of about 30 per cent. since that time, have not encouraged its manufacture here. Double the present duty and continue pig-tin free, and it can not be made here to compete with the cheap labor of England, but by increasing the duty you restrict its importation, and consequently its revenues and you exert a depressing influence upon a foreign market, rendering it still more difficult to attempt its competitive manufacture here. We can speak for ourselves and our friends in the trade here, when we say we are in favor of a protection that protects every American industry, but with no industry of this kind in our country, even with the encouragement afforded by the present tariff, we respectfully ask that the commission recommend the reduction of the duty on tin-plates, not to one-half a cent per pound (where it properly belongs under the intention of the act of February 8, 1875,) but to, say, three-quarters of a cent per pound, and thus encourage its larger and wider use, and a corresponding increase in revenue. We think tin-plates are properly the subject of some duty, as a large revenue can be derived from this source without injury to any one; but the present rate of duty is unfair, unnecessary, unintentional, and excessive. While cheap labor prevails in Europe—and let us hope for the sake of humanity that its value will ere long be recognized more in the spirit of American intelligence and education—nothing but a most extraordinary tax upon the importation of tin-plate will ever allow its home manufacture. Let us here instance a single comparison: We can buy a good quality of tin-plate suitable for making into cans at 16 shillings; a second quality at 14, and a fair quality of terne plate for roofing at 15, all per hundredweight, less 4 per cent. cash. This is exactly 3.1 cents per pound, and yet we have to pay in this country for an inferior quality of No. 30 common sheet-iron, the same thickness as tin-plate, 6 cents per pound. Meanwhile we see no reason, looking at the subject fairly and without prejudice, why its millions of consumers in this country should be the subjects of an excessive tax, while its importation conflicts in no manner whatever with any American industry.

We have now to consider very briefly the enormous growth of the trade.

There were imported from England into the United States:

	Boxes of all kinds.
From 1848 to 1857	3,457,079
From 1858 to 1867	6,726,784
From 1868 to 1877	15,218,225
For the year 1878	1,931,128
For the year 1879	2,755,421
For the year 1880	2,959,380
For the year 1881	3,134,402
And the year 1882 promises to exceed	4,000,000

Or 230,000 tons.

This large increase in consumption has been caused, first, by the decline in values from an average price of 34 shillings per box in 1872 to an average price of 16 shillings per box in 1882, with a probability of a low or even lower range of values being maintained over many years to come. And, second, by the wonderful growth and prosperity of our own country. It may be a selfish consideration to know that the manufacture in England has been unremunerative for many years, so that we as consumers are profiting thereby, as will be seen by the following extract from a letter of our Liverpool correspondents, received only this morning:

"As for the manufacturing department of the tin-plate, we feel almost in despair about it. It looks just now as if there never could be a profitable trade. The demand is enormous, larger than any one could have imagined, and it is supplied at prices leaving nothing to the manufacturer, with numbers of mills waiting to start when there is a paying profit."

The demand for tin-plates has been unprecedentedly vigorous and healthy, occurring conspicuously over periods when languishing and expiring enterprises were frequent in all directions, and we ask in a reduction of the duty only the execution of a measure that will cause a fulfillment of our statement, that the consumption of tin-plates will be greatly increased and the revenue be ultimately benefited.

This conclusion is the result of a business experience by our firm of over seventy years, during which time we have paid the Government duties amounting to many millions of dollars, and we respectfully ask the concurrence of the commission with our views. The relief asked would be only about $1,500,000, and this amount would soon be more than made up in increased importations.

In connection with the rapid increase in the importations of tin-plate at Philadelphia, there remains but one more subject to refer to, and we do it with a pardonable pride. Ten years have now elapsed since our Philadelphia merchants started an American line of first-class steamers between Philadelphia and Liverpool, building them at our own wharves and encouraging them over a long number of uniformly successful voyages. We point to-day to the only line of American-built steamers crossing the Atlantic, and as we see the flag of our country floating from their peaks and crowning these beautiful models of American ship-building as they glide into English waters, we are led to hope the day is not far distant when our commerce shall enjoy something of its former prestige, and when Congress can consistently encourage it by reducing the duty on all goods fully 10 per cent. when imported in American vessels.

PHILADELPHIA, October 16, 1882.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, the pending proposition is one to which I think it would not be easy to find a parallel. We have had tariffs for revenue and we have had tariffs for protection, but the proposition to double the duty upon the tin-plate it seems to me is not for revenue, because the Government does not need money, but on the contrary has largely more than suffices for its necessities, and neither is it for protection, because there is no tin-plate manufactured in this country to be protected. The manufacture of tin-plate in the United States is not even an "infant industry." It is not even an embryo. It strikes me that it is somewhat like Pooh Bah's genealogy; it is a "primordial protoplasmic globule." [Laughter.] It has no existence here except in the minds of the American manufacturers of sheet-iron. Gentlemen tell us that if this duty be increased tin-plate can be manufactured profitably in the United States. Why has it not been done hitherto? The tariff act of 1864 fixed the duty on tin-plate at $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound, but, as is alleged, through a misconstruction on the part of the then Secretary of the Treasury, the duty collected upon tin-plate was only 15 per cent. ad valorem, and yet, notwithstanding that fact, the duty being only 15 per cent. ad valorem from 1873 to 1875, several tin-plate manufactories sprang up in different sections of the United States. And just at this point I desire to correct my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL]. He said in his remarks on this subject yesterday:

So the law remained until 1875, when a specific duty of $1\frac{1}{10}$ cents per pound was put upon tin-plates. Following that, at three places in this country, certain Welshmen who had understood the business at home undertook the inauguration of the tin-plate industry, at Wellsville, in the State of Ohio, at Leachburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania, and at Demler, also in the State of Pennsylvania.

In a pamphlet issued by Mr. John Jarrett at a time when he was secretary of the American Tin-Plate Association, I find a statement to the effect that tin-plate works were built at Wellsville, Ohio, and were put into operation early in 1873, and not in 1875, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] states. These works were put into operation when the duty collected upon tin-plate was only 15 per cent. ad valorem, and they passed out of existence when a specific duty of $1\frac{1}{10}$ cents per pound was put upon tin-plates.

If the industry was profitable under the former duty, the reduction caused by the change was too slight to account for the suspension of the business. The cause must be sought elsewhere, and is to be found in the fact that there is no metallic tin yet discovered in this country in such quantity as to pay for the mining; and until it is found in such quantity the manufacture of tin-plate can not be successfully conducted in the United States, and the protectionist can not consistently ask that a duty be levied upon its importation.

The agriculturist of the East is specially interested in free tin-plate, for the reason that he can not compete with the virgin soil of the great Northwest in the production of staple farm products, and is compelled to turn his attention to the cultivation of fruits and vegetables for canning purposes, an industry in which tin-plate is an item of large expense, the cheapening of which to the packer will enable him to pay better prices to the farmer and furnish cheaper goods to the consumer, without curtailing his profits.

Let us say to the weary plowman, as he casts his seed in hope and fear, that what blight and mildew and canker-worm have spared the Government will spare also.

Mr. REED. I would like to occupy five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY). Debate on this paragraph is now closed by order of the House. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYNER. Can we have the same courtesy extended to our side?

Mr. REED. I have no objection to that. [Cries of "Yes," "Yes!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAYNER. I do not want to object, at any rate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks permission to speak for five minutes, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] asks that the same courtesy be extended to his side of the House. If there be no objection, that arrangement will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. REED. I have asked time, Mr. Chairman, in order right now to call the attention of the House to the purport of the observations of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. I never regretted more than I do now the lack of communication between this House and the outside world. I wish the outside world could understand that the gentleman who has been selected by the majority to preside over our deliberations on this bill has been induced to leave the chair in order to state the true doctrines upon which his side proceed.

He has stated them; and I regret that the community will not be sufficiently informed about them to render unnecessary and impossible the traversing of this country which will take place between now and election time by members of the other side for the purpose of denying them. The gentleman from Illinois states that if we add to the duty on tin-plate, so that this article may be produced in this country, the $16,000,000 which we now collect as revenue will be distributed among the manufacturers.

Now, I am delighted to hear such an enunciation of the true doctrine which the other side generally is maintaining under a cover. I am glad to see that the gentleman from Illinois adheres to his former opinions expressed in this House and elsewhere. If it be true that if we manufacture tin-plate in this country by reason of an addition to the duty, the money which would otherwise go to the Government will go to the manufacturers, then it must follow that as to those things which we are now manufacturing under protective duties the Government is deprived of revenue, and the money goes into the pockets of the manufacturers.

Some attempts have been made to deny the logical conclusion, which is really undeniable; and many more efforts will be made during the campaign. Now, if that is the fact, it must be the plain duty of the other side of the House to maintain the duty upon tin-plate, every dollar of which goes into the Treasury of the United States, and to take off or reduce below the living point such duties as protect and encourage manufactures. It seems as if there were no escape from that.

If it be true that the manufacturers will levy tribute in case we fix a duty which will enable tin-plate to be produced in this country, it must also be true that they will levy tribute under this Mills bill to the extent, as is claimed, of some 40 per cent. as to custom dues, and nobody knows what per cent. as to the actual productions of this country.

That is the attitude, the real attitude, of the Democratic party. It is signalized by the fact that the gentleman from Illinois, the Chairman chosen by the other side to preside over our deliberations, has seen fit to intrust the enunciation of that doctrine to no less a mouth than his own, and this gives it the emphasis which really belongs to it, which it really deserves.

If the doctrine announced by the gentleman be true, here is a duty of 60 to 100 per cent on rice, which must be just so much tribute exacted from the people of this country. Why, then, is the rice duty continued? Why are these other duties continued? And if this measure is for revenue only, why is it proposed to abolish a duty which levies revenues only? In other words, how is it possible to exist in such a mongrel situation as the gentlemen on the other side are now in? [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes are now to be occupied by the other side of the House. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to be recognized?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent for time enough to put a question to the gentleman from Illinois which can be answered in a moment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I understand it to have been the decision of the Committee of the Whole that five minutes should be occupied by each side on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the fact.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If that was not the arrangement I do not wish to make any request.

The CHAIRMAN. At the time the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] was permitted to speak for five minutes, the request was also made and agreed to that five minutes should be allowed to the other side of the House.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent only to ask this question of the gentleman from Illinois: On what principle does he justify that provision of this bill which imposes a duty of one cent and a half and one cent and three-quarters a pound on sheet-iron, when, if the same manufacture be covered over with 2 or 3 per cent. of tin, it may come in free.

Mr. BYNUM. Does this come out of our time? If so, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is recognized.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that this debate will run on for some days, and I may be able before it closes to comprehend what he is talking about.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will make my question plain if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not invoke any more of these long, double-jointed questions. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR rose.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman be kind enough not to interrupt me?

Mr. REED. The question of the gentleman from Ohio was not addressed to the gentleman from Arkansas, but to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I thought the gentleman was asking a question of me.

Mr. Chairman, I would not have asked for five minutes on this question, and I do not know that I care now to pursue the discussion for that length of time. I think, however, it may be well to meet one or two points made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. One is his statement that the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. SPRINGER] was induced to leave the chair and take the floor in order to state our position. The gentleman from Maine had not seen fit to inform himself on that subject before he made the statement, or he would have found out that the Chairman simply exercised his own voluntary wish, that right which every other member of the House has to take part in this discussion.

The Chairman in taking part in the discussion requested the time he occupied, and it was granted to him, and that was all there was about it.

There is nothing seemingly that limits the statements of that kind on the part of the gentlemen except their need to make some statement of that sort. They will imagine it to be so, and they will believe what they imagine to be true, and forthwith state it as a fact.

The duty upon tin-plate is a typical illustration of this question and dispute. We have no need of the revenue and nobody is engaged in the business. Although it is a revenue tax, yet it is one that materially restricts and encumbers trade. Gentlemen on the other side are seemingly very solicitous about a reduction which may affect people engaged in business. Here, then, is a reduction helping business and helping consumers, and reducing the surplus $5,000,000. And yet this proposed reduction is fought as persistently and as captiously by gentlemen as those which reduce duties on articles which are produced in this country. There is but one conclusion to be drawn. Gentlemen contending against this reduction and for an increase are in favor of protection for the mere sake of protection without its being incidental to revenue needs; and they are opposed to reductions in the tariff, even where no industry is affected, and hence can contemplate no repeals except upon the internal revenue.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have not time to permit an interruption.

Mr. DALZELL. It is argued on this side that this does affect the sheet iron industries.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I can not yield for questions.

It is clear if it is a protective duty they do not want to remove or reduce it. If it is not protective they do not want to reduce it. It comes of the fixed determination on their part not to reduce taxation anywhere except in the internal-revenue part of the laws.

I think, as we proceed, it is made clearer and clearer that no tariff reduction is acceptable to these gentlemen. We remember in the Forty-eighth Congress a bill was proposed, and it was objected to because it was a horizontal reduction. In the Forty-ninth Congress one was proposed and it was objected to because it was a perpendicular reduction. Now a bill is proposed, and it is objected to squarely because it is in part a tariff reduction. There we come at last to the first and real position of our friends on the other side, that they are opposed to any reduction of the surplus that is to come out of the tariff at all. The country, then, had as well see and accept the fact that the efforts and intention of the other side of the House to reduce the surplus are confined to the internal revenue, pure and simple, which now consists solely of taxes on tobacco and liquor and a small tax on national banks.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to ask a question of the other side of the House, and I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is willing to answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I desire to know whether at this time I can not ask a question? [Cries of "Ask it!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will address himself to the Chair.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I will do so; I desire to ask a question and want to know whether I can do so? I have no information from the other side, and I desire information in good faith. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] consents to answer my question if I am permitted to ask it. Is it not a proper thing, Mr. Chairman, on my part to ask that question at this time, and to allow the gentleman to make an answer to it?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be done by unanimous consent. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The Chair does not think the question of the gentleman from Ohio is a parliamentary inquiry. A gentleman can ask any question by unanimous consent, but the regular order has been demanded, which is in the nature of objection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. We are tired of preliminaries; let us have the regular order.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I should like to ask the question, but gentlemen refuse permission to me to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded, which cuts off unanimous consent.

The question recurred on Mr. BUCHANAN'S amendment to strike out, in page 3, lines 45 and 46, the words "or lead, or with a mixture of which these metals is a component part."

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph, by order of the House, has been closed.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I demand a division. Let us see how many want adulterated tin-plate. If it is to come in let it come in pure.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DALZELL. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 44, after the words "taggers iron," insert the words "not larger in area than 4 feet, and not thicker than No. 26 gauge."

Mr. DALZELL. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 58, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. DALZELL. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 74.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I call for tellers.

Mr. BURROWS. I make the point of no quorum so we may have tellers.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the point of order is withdrawn, how many votes are required to order tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. One-fifth.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I observed yesterday when the point of no quorum was made, and tellers were appointed by the Chair, some gentlemen considered themselves absolved from their pairs and voted.

Mr. BURROWS. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of no quorum, and now demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS and Mr. MCMILLIN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 66, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

49. Beeswax.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to strike out that line.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question which I wish to have answered by gentlemen who take the position assumed by the other side of this House with reference to this bill; and I wish to state it so clearly that it can not be misunderstood by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who has agreed to answer it. I wish to know upon what principle—because I suppose that you are acting upon some principle in the preparation of a tariff bill like this, and there is a wide distinction between a protective tariff and a revenue tariff as it is explained in the Democratic speeches upon this subject—now if there is any principle in the whole matter, if you pretend to claim that any principle is involved in the preparation of the bill, of course you will be able to answer my question.

I want to know upon what principle you defend that provision of the bill which imposes a duty of 1½ cents per pound, and on the best grades 1¾ cents per pound, on sheet-iron imported into this country, while the same sheet-iron, if coated over with a thin wash of tin, amounting to only from 2 to 3 or at most 4 or 5 per cent. of tin, may be imported free of any duty whatever? I would like to know upon what principle you can explain this. I would like to know upon what principle of right or justice a provision is incorporated into this bill putting this duty of 50 or 75 per cent. on the naked sheet-iron and no duty at all on the sheet coated with tin; a high rate of duty on the advanced product and no duty on the "raw material?"

Or, in other words, I want to know whether it is not the aim of this Ways and Means Committee to strike down, by indirection, two important industries which they did not care to attack directly? I refer to sheet-iron and sheet-steel roofing and siding, and also to the manufacture of sheet-iron and sheet-steel.

I desire to know if this bill is not prepared with a view of secretly stabbing these two industries under the guise of professed friendship. Not a word is said about striking down any other industry, and yet the stroke is as fatal as if this were the main object. And it is this mysterious discrimination in favor of free tin and against free iron that I want explained.

This is not a small matter, Mr. Chairman. The entire annual product of the sheet-iron and sheet-steel mills of this country is 150,000 tons, one-half of which, or one-third of which at least, is used in roofing and siding; and if tin-plate is placed upon the free-list, as proposed by this bill, this demand for sheet-iron and sheet-steel will cease and this market for the products of these industries in this country will necessarily be destroyed. Tin-plates will be substituted for iron and a free-trade product for a protected one.

This is too plain to require demonstration, and the manufacturers of sheet-iron and sheet-steel roofing and siding will, by this method of indirection, be stricken down and the industry destroyed, as well as the manufacture of sheet-iron and sheet-steel. While, on the other hand, Mr. Chairman, there are imported into this country annually 280,000 tons of tin-plates, almost twice as much as the entire product of all the sheet-iron and sheet-steel mills in this country. And all of this 280,000 tons of tin-plates is to be permitted to come in free of duty under the provisions of this bill. It is not to pay a farthing of revenue, while the 150,000 tons of sheet-iron or sheet-steel, if it were imported, all of it would have to pay a duty of at least 1½ cents per pound.

Now, I repeat, I can not understand this gross inconsistency, nor can I understand why they are attempting to disturb these industries which are established and giving entire satisfaction; and on behalf of the people of this country I protest against any such injustice and unfairness.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the gentleman permit me to answer him by asking a question?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. In your own time. I can not yield. A gentleman on that side said he did not understand this. Now, I want him to understand the position that is held on this side. I want to make it plain. I want to know why it is that the poor man who uses a cooking stove and wants a cheap stovepipe, or wants a cheap coal-hod, or a cheap bread-pan, must be required to pay a duty of 1½ cent per pound on every pound of black sheet-iron that is used in the manufacture of what he needs——

Mr. BAYNE. While the Standard Oil Company gets its tin free of duty.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. That is it exactly. Why he must pay this tax while the rich corporation, the Standard Oil Company, gets its tin free? I want to know why any man who uses sheet-iron for any of the purposes for which it is required, in his kitchen, in his house, or for any other purpose, can not have it free as well as the man who uses tin-plates for similar purposes?

This is the inconsistency which I have been wanting explained, and this is the question that I want answered. And while I do not admit that a duty on sheet-iron makes it cost more, you claim that every duty is a tax, and if sheet-iron is to be taxed, why not tin-plates? And if tin-plates are to be free, why not sheet-iron?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RAYNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question now he has finished?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. Are you a member of the National Iron Roofing Association?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I suppose I am.

Mr. RAYNER. I see the name of Col. J. D. TAYLOR, of Cambridge, Ohio, as one of the executive committee of that association.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I was not at the meeting which appointed me a member of the committee, but I see I was made a member. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.] The National Iron Roofing Association is a mere organization——

Mr. RAYNER. So far I have asked nothing further. I have asked whether you are a member of the association? I have not asked any other question.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I say I am a member.

Mr. RAYNER. Now I will ask you another question. Is not the National Iron Roofing Association in competition with this industry, and are you not here on this floor defending the protection of your own interests? [Applause and derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. He laughs best who laughs last. The National Iron Roofing Association is an association which has nothing to do with prices, nothing to do with sales. It is an organization to prevent this House from bankrupting this industry. They called a meeting in the city of Cincinnati and formed some sort of an organization looking to this end. I was not at the meeting.

Mr. RAYNER. Your name is there.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I have a little stock in a company that was represented there, and I was appointed on some committee. I have never been asked to do anything in regard to it in any way. The organization is only intended to simplify the methods of doing business, to regulate the standard of iron to be used, the symbols to be employed to designate grades and quality of iron, etc. There is no agreement whatever as to prices. The association has nothing to do with values or prices. Each manufacturer of sheet-iron or sheet-steel roofing sells at his own price, on his own time, and in his own way. I have received a letter from one of the members which explains the object of the organization.

These organizations, Mr. Chairman, are not at all uncommon just now. They are all over the country. The people whose industries are about to be stricken down are organizing in self-defense. They are organizing in a way that will be effective. The voters are organizing too, and especially laboring men, and you will hear from them in November. Mark my words; you will hear from these organizations in a way that will not be soon forgotten.

Mr. RAYNER (referring to a paper in his hand). Here is your name, not only as a member of the association, but signed to the petition asking Congress not to take off the duty.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I never saw that petition until after it was printed.

A MEMBER. He repudiates it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I do not repudiate it. I accept the responsibility for whatever has been done by that association, although I was not present at the meeting. I was not at the meeting, and did not know anything about the matter until I saw my name in print in the circular, but it is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out this line.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next line.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glue.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a parliamentary question; whether it would be in order to move now to strike out lines 50 and 51?

Mr. RAYNER. The duty has been restored on glue.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] that if the next line is read that motion will be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the paragraph relating to glue be passed for the present. [Cries of "Why?"] I have made the request. If there is any objection let it be stated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask that the two lines 50 and 51 be read together and that they be considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that line 51 be read and considered with line 50? The Chair hears none. Line 51 will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gelatine and all similar preparations.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out both lines.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 50 and 51.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] on that motion.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I thought the gentleman from New York was recognized on line 50.

The CHAIRMAN. He is recognized now on the motion to strike out lines 50 and 51.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That had been determined upon before the lines were reached. I was out of my seat at the time the lines were reached.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then it may be done by unanimous consent. We are all agreed that these two lines shall be stricken out.

Mr. BURROWS. It seems to me there ought to be some explanation as to why those lines should be stricken out. If there is no explanation this side will not vote with you.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If I am recognized for the purpose I will explain.

Mr. WEBER. I hope that the Chairman will be so much of a protectionist as to protect me in my rights. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is endeavoring to secure the gentleman his rights under the rule.

Mr. WEBER. I have no desire to discuss lines 50 and 51 if it be decreed that they shall go out of the bill, because I do not want to waste time. Am I correct in understanding that they are to be struck out?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I stated that it was the purpose of the committee to move to strike out those two lines.

Mr. WEBER. Then I simply call for a vote on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out lines 50 and 51.

Mr. BURROWS. I have inquired of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] what reason can be assigned for changing the bill in this regard.

Mr. MORSE. I suppose he has a right to make the motion.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What was the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]?

Mr. BURROWS. I was asking the reason for proposing to change the bill in this regard.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We thought it ought to be changed. Does the gentleman oppose the change?

Mr. BURROWS. I have made no motion.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word. If the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. LAWLER] were present, we could probably obtain an explanation of the reasons which prompt the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to move to strike out these two lines. It has been bruited about to a certain extent in the newspapers that in order to concentrate the Democratic vote upon this bill certain concessions had to be made, and that those concessions come in conflict with the theories of the original projectors of the bill.

Now, whether this be one of the cases that fall within that newspaper report or not I am not fully prepared to say, and therefore I regret the absence of the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. LAWLER], to whom common report attributes the influence which was exerted upon the committee to induce them to make this change. The importance of glue and gelatine as two distinctive articles is not so great as the importance of the idea that to secure votes for the passage of this bill certain concessions had to be made to certain districts.

Mr. MORSE. That is all right, is it not? What is wrong about that?

Mr. BAYNE. I do not think it is right.

Mr. MORSE. I do.

Mr. BAYNE. You may, and therein you and I differ. I think that if tariff legislation is entitled to anything it is entitled to be founded upon principles which shall permeate the whole of the law upon the subject, and I for one propose to stand for those principles which I believe should run through a tariff bill. I propose to stand for the perpetuation and the conservation of the policy of protection as an entirety, and let it apply where it will and to whatever district it will.

If there be any article, I care not what it is, which does not fall within the idea of protection, then I say strike that down, although your action may injure some particular district somewhere in the country. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that gentlemen appreciate the injury that is being done all over this country by this bill. If there were any apprehension on the part of the public that it would ever become a law the protests would come up here in much more pronounced form and manner than they now come. Here we have an illustration of the methods of the promoters of this bill. The glue interest in the city of Chicago is represented by a Democratic member of the House of Representatives, and he secures the striking out of glue from the free-list, leaving it where it is among the protected industries. But, gentlemen, you are proposing by this bill to strike down other industries all over this country, and in many cases there does not happen to be a Representative on the Democratic side of the House whose vote is necessary to the passage of the bill, and who might thus have the influence to secure the protection of those industries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize some gentleman who opposes the proposition to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am ready to vote upon this motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman rises to oppose the motion, I ask him why he opposes it?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am opposed to striking out the last word, because I want to strike them all out. I hope that explanation is satisfactory to the gentleman. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] seemed very much concerned in regard to this bill, for fear the Ways and Means Committee had been guilty of some inconsistency in recommending the placing of tin-plate upon the free-list, leaving sheet-iron as it stands under the present law. The gentleman wanted to know why it was that the committee proposed to put tin-plate upon the free-list, leaving the duty on sheet-iron unchanged. He gave us some information, which I was glad to receive, to the effect that he concedes that this duty is a tax upon the consumer, and therefore a burden upon the people.

Sheet-iron has been on the protected list for a number of years. It was put there at the instance of the manufacturers. They came to Congress and got it taxed to suit themselves. In the mean time the industries have been established and have grown up under it with the pledge of the Government that they should have this protection. No one would declaim more loudly than the gentleman from Ohio against a proposition to strike this duty all out at once, leaving this industry without protection. It is not proposed by this bill to remove all the protection that existing industries now have. It is only proposed to reduce the duties from an average of 47 per cent. to 40 per cent., and as to the particular industry in which the gentleman is so much concerned the committee have generously allowed it to remain just where his friends put it. In that matter, as in many others, they have "tempered the wind to the shorn lambs." [Laughter.] Tin-plate is not one of the infant industries of the country. Gentlemen seek in this case to beget a new industry. That is what they propose. They confess there is no such industry here at all; but they think that by doubling this tax they can create an industry which does not exist.

Mr. MILLIKEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not yield; I am answering a question now.

The Committee on Ways and Means, in framing this bill, has thought it preferable that we should not embark in the enterprise of creating industries by means of taxation, and they therefore propose, as we do not need the revenue, to put tin-plates on the free-list. If we needed the revenue this would be a very appropriate place to impose a duty; but as we are trying to get rid of revenue, and as no existing industry is to be affected by placing this article on the free-list, the proper thing to do is to strike down the tax. If I understand the theory of this bill, that is the reason for placing the article on the free-list.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the motion which has been made to strike out these two lines; but I wish to understand on what ground it is proposed to take glue from the free-list and place it on the dutiable list and at the same time to place manufactured lumber, manufactured lime, and other products of that character upon the free-list. I find by the census that in 1880 the whole number of persons employed in the manufacture of glue was 2,601; that the wages paid were $600,018; that the value of the product was $4,324,072; and that only 15 per cent. of the value of the product of glue was represented by wages. Now, you propose to restore glue to the dutiable list when only 15 per cent. of the value of the product is wages, while you place upon the free-list manufactured lumber, in which the proportion of labor is 20 per cent., and manufactured lime, in which the proportion of labor is 28 per cent. I should be pleased to ascertain the reason for this discrimination.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] says that the propositions in this bill have been "tempered to the shorn lamb." Is there a "shorn lamb" in Chicago, where this industry exists, or rather a lamb to be shorn, and must it be cared for? Is it true, as has been intimated by the newspapers, that glue has been taken from the free-list and restored to the dutiable list because the Representative from that district has said that if glue should remain upon the free-list a Democrat would probably not be returned to the House, but a Republican instead? And is it true that in a tariff bill duties are being adjusted to bribe constituencies to elect members of a particular political complexion, in order that thus the control of the Government may be secured?

Mr. Chairman, whatever principle is to be adopted with reference to a tariff bill, it is important that equality should be preserved, and that such a measure should not be used for the purpose of oppressing a constituency that happens to have a Republican Representative on this floor, or for the purpose of procuring the re-election of a Democratic Representative. The purpose should be equal and exact justice to the people of this country and the industries which we stand here to represent. To press through a tariff bill which places the products of one industry on the free-list because the people who reside in the district or State where such industry is carried on are Republicans, and which places another industry in which the proportion of labor is less on the dutiable list to bribe the people in districts or States interested in that industry to elect Democrats, is to use the legislative power in a reprehensible manner.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to know whether the gentleman understands that Mr. Edward Cooper, who was a member of the committee on resolutions in the recent Democratic National Convention, is an extensive manufacturer of glue.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand he is.

Mr. PERKINS. I would ask whether that is the reason the other side propose to take this article out of the free-list.

Mr. McMILLIN. And why the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEBER] moved to strike it out; and why the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] is in favor of the motion.

Mr. PERKINS. And why gentlemen on the other side consent that it be done.

Mr. DINGLEY. The gentleman from Maine favors the principle of protection, the principle of imposing duties on imported articles which can be made here to the extent of our wants to such an extent as will hold our own markets for our own industries, and he is ready to vote to apply this principle impartially to all industries of this character, in whatever part of the country located, and whatever may be the political affiliation of the people immediately interested. The gentleman from Tennessee favors free trade and opposes protection, yet he proposes to give the industries of his political friends protection and to apply free trade to his opponents.

I have no information beyond what has appeared in the newspapers in reference to the reasons for this discrimination between glue, coal, wood-screws, sugar, and rice on the one hand, and manufactured lumber, grain-bags, and line on the other hand; but I want to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact that for the first time in the history of a tariff bill it is proposed to frame such a measure to favor industries in Democratic districts and to injure industries in Republican districts.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I have not detained the House or the committee with any remarks on this question of the tariff during the present Congress, and I do not now intend to occupy more than a minute or two. When the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR] asked the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] why it was proposed to put tin-plate on the free-list and leave the duty on sheet-iron, it seems that the question was not thoroughly answered from a political standpoint, as it can be in a few words. If gentlemen on both sides of the House will refer to the enunciations made in the platforms of their respective parties, they will find that in spirit, if not in letter, both parties stand committed to the principle of putting on the free-list everything which we neither produce nor manufacture in this country, or in the production or manufacture of which we are not brought into competition with the labor of Europe. That proposition will be conceded by gentlemen on both sides. Now, the reason given by gentlemen on this side and the reason which induced me, when this Committee of the Whole divided, to vote in favor of placing tin-plate upon the free-list, was that it is not now, and has not been claimed to be, an industry of this country.

It is a product not manufactured in this country in any place that is accessible in any sufficient amount to supply the demand. It is an article which it is admitted enters largely into the consumption of our people and that it is not produced here at all. Now, it is a doctrine of the Democratic party that articles that we neither produce nor manufacture should be placed upon the free-list.

Mr. DINGLEY, by unanimous consent, withdrew his pro forma amendment.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I move to strike out the last word. As the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has made certain inquiries in regard to my connection with the National Iron Roofing Association, and as my name has been signed to a circular distributed among the members of the House as a member of the tariff committee of that association, I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read a letter which fully explains the character and object of the association.

CAMBRIDGE, OHIO, May 31, 1888.

DEAR SIR: * * * The object for which we came together [The National Roofing Association] was not to form a trust or even to make any binding prices. All agreed that it would damage rather than benefit the business to force prices up beyond a living profit, as it would tend to turn the attention of the building public to other roofing material, and therefore every manufacturer was left as free as ever to make his own prices. The object of the association primarily was to formulate universal rules and methods of doing the business as much for the benefit of the buyer as the seller. Before the association was organized there was such diversity of ways in presenting their products among the different manufacturers that it was almost impossible for those wishing to purchase roofing to make up their minds what company to patronize from the fact that they could not tell from the different price-lists and catalogues whose price was the lowest or whose goods were the best. One company, quoting prices, would call iron weighing 70 to 75 pounds per square No. 26, another would call iron weighing 75 to 80 pounds No. 26. Both would quote their iron roofing without giving the weight, and yet a difference in weight of from 5 to 10 pounds existed, making a difference in cost of from 20 to 40 cents per square.

Some were allowing so much for lap, some nothing; some were including fixtures, others were not, in their quotations. The association has brought the manufacturers together, and all these different methods, in a great measure, have been done away with by coming to satisfactory understanding what No. 26 iron should weigh, how much to allow for laps, and how many fixtures should be included in quotations. Never in the history of the iron-roofing business has it been so satisfactory to the purchaser as now. When he places his order now he does it intelligently. He knows just how much iron and what quality, and how much he is going to get with it as fixtures. It simply reduces it to a matter of price which is shown plainly on the face of the price-list. It is a fact that no one is complaining anywhere about the price of iron roofing. No one is saying that the price of it is too high. It is a surprise to many that it can be produced at such a small cost. I could write more on this subject, but have already said more than I expected to. I helped to organize the Iron Roofing Association, and have been in every meeting it ever held.

Yours, truly,

J. E. ANNIS, Secretary.

Hon. J. D. TAYLOR, Washington, D. C.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, the extent of my interest in the National Iron Roofing Association is this: I own some stock in the Cambridge Roofing Company, which is a member of this national association, and while I have owned this stock seven years I never have received a dollar of dividends or a cent of profit from my investment, and hence you can see how deeply I am interested.

One word more. I do not wish to reply now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] further than to say that so far as he bases his argument on the statement that no tin-plates have ever been made in this country he is mistaken.

Tin-plates were made at several points, and would be made now if this industry was as well protected as pig-iron, scrap-iron, sheet-iron, and the other metals. Hence he is mistaken in claiming that we are trying to inaugurate an industry that never has had and never can have an existence in this country. No American industry is better suited to American labor than the manufacture of tin-plates, and no industry is more worthy of protection.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the question in reference to the pending amendment is interesting to me for the reason that it has given a turn to the debate which impresses me with the correctness of the position I take and have taken in reference to the dangerous character of this policy which its friends call protection, but which, in my opinion, is simply anti-competition. Instead of being called protectionists, it seems to me these gentlemen put themselves fairly and clearly before the country in the position of anti-competitionists, if I may use that term.

I was struck with the force of the arraignment of the Democratic side of this Chamber by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] when he accused the Democratic side of an attempt at bribery in being willing to eliminate from the free-list the articles enumerated in these two lines in this exceptional way, in order to get the vote of a member or to compass an Illinois district; for, when he was illustrating the position on the other side of the Chamber, he stated what seems to be the absolute and unvarying rule on this side. [Laughter and applause.]

He said they must take this position, that they must compass this district in order to save it now and in the future. If the gentleman's position be tenable, then I submit that he and the other anti-competitionists are open to that precise charge on every article which they insist shall be on the dutiable list; and I do not allude to the gentleman's position in the charge he makes save to emphasize what I have said in this place before as to the danger any policy of legislation is fraught with where plunder is the cohesive element of the party and its possession the goad to action.

In this connection, as applicable here as elsewhere, I wish to say to these gentlemen that there are more laboring men than those engaged in the technically protected industries of the country. There are thirty millions of people in this country who are interested in the labor of agriculture, and they are put off by such a tub to the whale as a duty on exports.

Granting for argument's sake that the laborers in the protected industries receive increased wages on account of the high war taxes being retained, those so to be benefited are very few in numbers compared with the great body of farmers who must pay these taxes, and who are not, in turn, in any way benefited thereby.

I wish to say to gentlemen who talk so eloquently about developing the industries of America, that there is perhaps no trouble in developing the tin-plate industry or any other if the parties developing it can make the millions of people who are not interested in the business foot the bills.

If there is a single thing in the country that the laboring people engaged in agricultural pursuits are concerned in, it is the domination and control of the great commercial establishments, which, like the railroads, the telegraph, the banks, and the manufactories, the creatures of legislation, are dictating unduly and at the expense of the other industrial establishments of the country the laws that impose the hundreds of millions of taxes which the people pay annually into an overflowing Treasury.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. I want to see if we can not reach some understanding as to the length of time this debate shall run. I ask that by unanimous consent it be limited to ten minutes on a side.

Mr. WARNER. I want a few minutes myself.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Ten minutes on a side I think ought to be enough. This is an amendment to which nobody objects, to strike out the lines, and it seems to me we ought to have an agreement to pass on to the next lines of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph of the bill be limited to ten minutes on a side.

Mr. BURROWS. I want five or ten minutes myself. I suggest fifteen minutes on a side.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have suggested ten on a side.

Mr. BURROWS. I think fifteen will be satisfactory.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to limiting debate on this paragraph of the bill and amendments thereto to thirty minutes—fifteen on a side?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WARNER rose.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman, I thought there were to be alternate recognitions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WARNER. I shall not wrangle with the gentleman from Maryland if he desires to proceed now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland hereafter.

Mr. BAYNE. The gentleman from Missouri wants to reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened for several weeks to the continued denunciations of the doctrine of protection, or, as it has been characterized "legalized robbery" and the paying of "tribute by the poor to the rich." A person not informed as to the true doctrine of protection, on listening to this discussion from the other side of the House, must inevitably have come to the conclusion that there was nothing good in this entire system, that it is an evil in any and every form, that the whole system is vicious.

Yet, sir, as much of a hog as the manufacturer of the country has been represented to be by the gentlemen on the other side, they charge them with taking all of the profits to themselves. Yet we find our friends upon the other side coming in and gracefully yielding so far as to throw protection around this item and that item in the bill, giving way joint by joint and slice by slice to this hog. It is admitted upon the other side this morning that for the purpose of securing votes, without regard to any principle, they have thus yielded to this system, which they are pleased to call "legalized robbery." Their action reminds one very much of the old Eastern legend that has been recorded in verse, and is very properly entitled "Hypocrisy exposed." If I can quote the lines correctly I will give them for the benefit of my friends on the other side of the House, because it strikes me as being very pertinent to this question and aptly illustrates their sincerity.

Thus says the Prophet of the Turk,
"Good Mussulmans abstain from pork.

(Thus say the prophets of Democracy: "Good Democrats abstain from this doctrine of protection.") [Laughter.]

"There is a part in every swine
No friend or follower of mine
May taste, whate'er his inclination,
On pain of excommunication."
Such Mohammed's mysterious charge,
And thus he left the point at large.
Had he the sinful part expressed,
They might with safety eat the rest;
But for one piece they thought it hard
From the whole hog to be debarred,
And set their wits at work to find
What joint the Prophet had in mind.
Much controversy straight arose:
These choose the back, the belly those;
By some 'tis confidently said
He meant not to forbid the head,
While others at that doctrine rail,
And piously prefer the tail.
Thus conscience freed from every clog,
Mohammedans eat up the hog.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAYNER. Is that original? [Laughter.]

Mr. WARNER. It may be applicable to some gentlemen on the other side; you have given such an apt illustration of it to-day; I will not say for any improper purpose, but you have made an apt illustration of it in order to secure certain supports for your bill. I understand that a concession is to be made also in the glass interest; and in order to stick a gentleman to the bill who was thought to be a little indifferent they had to bring in glue. [Laughter.] And so you go on, gentlemen; you abandon the principle of tariff for revenue, and make concessions first to this and then to that member in order to win support for the bill. It is admitted by the committee that they had agreed and determined to strike these two lines out. Is it not fair to assume that it is done to secure votes, rather than protection to the articles? Upon one item we collected $95,000 revenue, and upon the other $65,000.

You, gentlemen, rail at the doctrine of protection, yet to secure votes, "from tail to snout" the protection hog is eaten. [Laughter.] I am for striking the items out even if you do follow the example of Mohammedans and eat the whole hog. [Renewed laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman, before beginning my remarks I would like to be permitted to occupy at least ten or twelve minutes of the time accorded to this side of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to the gentleman occupying ten minutes, but I shall insist on the reservation of five minutes for myself.

Mr. RAYNER. But you can extend the time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not propose to ask an extension of the time. The gentleman may occupy as much time as the committee is willing to accord to him, with the understanding that I shall ask to reserve five minutes for myself. I am not showing want of magnanimity to my friend, but I want five minutes.

Mr. RAYNER. There is not much magnanimity in giving me ten minutes, but I will take it if there be no objection.

In some remarks that I addressed to the House on last Friday, and this is the first opportunity I have had since the reply was made to those remarks to refer to them again, I tried to speak of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] as I always do, and as I stated there, with the greatest respect and consideration, and I made the remark in passing that whatever he said was entitled to the respectful consideration of the House.

I was interrupted upon our side of the House by some one who said "On this side of the House," and I replied by saying no, he was entitled to the respect and consideration of both sides of the House. Here was the answer that came to the rather decorous position I took in reference to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]. He winds up his speech by saying:

Now, is it not time that we squarely talked sense to the people. Is it worth while to lie everlastingly to the community?

"Is it worth while to lie everlastingly to the community." I want to say that that epithet is absolutely harmless and inoffensive when used by a coward, but it never finds a place in the vocabulary of a gentleman who has not the courage to sustain and defend it. The trouble with the gentleman from Maine——

A MEMBER. He is not here.

Mr. RAYNER. Let him come in. I hope he will be here. I invite him in, and I will wait until he does come in if you will extend my time.

Several MEMBERS. He will be here before the session is over.

Mr. RAYNER. The gentleman does not seem to realize that a man can try to be funny without being insolent, and that he can even succeed in being a clown without being vulgar and offensive. Now, sir, as far as I am concerned and as far as this side of the House is concerned the gentleman from Maine had no right to make any such statement as that. We may be wrong in the stand we are taking against these monopolies and these trust combinations that are depredating upon the people; but if we are wrong we are honest. So far as I am concerned every earnest impulse of my being is enlisted against these deadly alliances that I feel are doing an incalculable injury to the people I represent.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] may be right in the stand he has taken that there is no monopoly in this land; but I seriously question the integrity of his motives. In proof of the assertion I then made and in proof of the assertion I now make, that the leaders of the Republican party are in combination with the capitalists who are centralizing wealth in this country for the purpose of oppressing the people, I take the liberty now of placing before this House a very edifying exhibit, to which I respectfully invite your considerate attention. If what I read is not true, some gentleman on the other side can rise to contradict it. If it is true it should bring a burning blush to every man connected with it. I read from a confidential circular which has been made public from Mr. Foster, the president of the Republican League, to the manufacturers of this country and an answer thereto. I read the reply of a Senator from Vermont, now in the Senate, in reference to an assessment that Mr. Foster proposed to levy on him for the purpose of keeping up high duties in favor of the manufacturers of this country.

I hope I shall have time to finish this article. I do not want to read any of it unless I can read it all.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Go on with the reading.

Mr. RAYNER. I will hasten as rapidly as possible. I think I am entitled to a few moments.

I hope what I am about to read is not true, gentlemen; but it has been scattered broadcast in all parts of the country.

EDMUNDS OR MORRILL, WHICH?

Mr. James L. Foster, president of the Republican League of the United States, which is the organization formed at the national convention of the Republican clubs a few months ago, has recently issued a remarkable and "confidential" circular. It has been sent to manufacturers all over the country, and is a demand for money to carry on a campaign in their interest. President Foster's circular begins with the statement that "The Republican League of the United States desires to bring you face to face with the startling fact that the coming Presidential election is not to be fought on the old party lines which have heretofore divided Democrats and Republicans, but upon the direct issue of free trade versus protection. The league stands for protection, and is fighting in your interest. It is no Fourth-of-July organization for dress-parade, but it is an every-day working force of practical political workers, who have in four months enrolled an army of over four hundred thousand men."

After this vigorous introduction Mr. Foster proceeds with the usual clap-trap about "British free trade" and "British gold." He lugubriously remarks that "the coming campaign will be fought for protection under disadvantages never before encountered. Ninety-nine per cent. of the Federal officials are Democrats, and will contribute financially to the hoped-for success of the free-traders. Never before has the Democratic free trade, or 'tariff-reform' party, been in so fortunate a position." Then President Foster, metaphorically throwing off his coat and rolling up his shirt-sleeves, gets down to real business. "We will win this fight," he says, "if you will do your share and help us to finish what we have begun. We want money, and want it at once.

"We are overwhelmed with calls for tariff documents and for speakers and organizers. We propose to organize and fight against free trade in every doubtful Congressional and legislative district in the United States. To-day there is but 1 majority in the Senate of the United States when the lines are drawn between Democrats and Republicans, and unless much is done the next Congress will see a free-trade House, Senate, and President, and then good-bye to your prosperity."

That sounds very much like "stand and deliver;" but it is not the most spicy part of President Foster's confidential circular. He goes on to complain "that the manufacturers of the United States, who are most benefited by our tariff laws, have been the least willing to contribute to the success of the party which gave them protection and which is about to engage in a life-and-death struggle with free trade."

That is bad enough, but here is the part I want to direct particular attention to:

Mr. Foster quotes "a Republican United States Senator from a State which never had a Democratic Representative in either House of Congress." This must be Vermont, and the Senator quoted must be either EDMUNDS or MORRILL.

Mr. GROUT. That can not be Vermont, because Vermont has had a Democratic Representative here.

Mr. RAYNER. Where is the Republican State that has never had a Democratic Senator?

Mr. PERKINS. Kansas.

Mr. RAYNER. It is very funny. Here is a statement published right here under the eye of the Senator from Vermont, in a Washington paper, and it has not been contradicted although it has been scattered broadcast.

Mr. GROUT. It was contradicted.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Give us all of it.

Mr. RAYNER. There has been plenty of time to show it is not true. If it does not refer to a Senator from Vermont then it refers to some other Senator from a State that never had a Democratic Senator.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the case with Kansas.

Mr. RAYNER. Then it comes from your illustrious representative from Kansas. I am glad it does not come from either Mr. MORRILL or the other Senator from Vermont, and I am glad it does come from your representative.

Mr. PERKINS. Unfortunately for the gentleman and the State Kansas has been represented by a Democratic member of Congress. It never made the mistake but once, however.

Mr. RAYNER. Do not get so worked up. Wait until you hear the statement. I have no doubt every word of it is true. Here is the letter in quotation marks, published in a dozen different papers:

"I was solicited," he says, "to contribute to a protective tariff league, and I replied that if the manufacturers of the United States in their associated capacity were an eleemosynary institution that I would vote to give them a pension, but that I did not propose myself to contribute money to advance the interests of men who were getting practically the sole benefits, or at least the most directly important benefits, of the tariff laws. I am in favor of protection, though not precisely the kind we are having, and I might be willing to keep even that rather than not to have any, but I am sure I can get along without any of it fully as well as the manufacturers can, and if they think the Republican party is going to maintain a high protective corps for their benefit, and the men who do the work in that party are going to keep up the expenses of a campaign out of their own pockets, leaving them to reap the fruits of the tariff policy without any deduction for political expenses, they are very greatly mistaken. I understand that in a general way the manufacturers of New England—

I submit this to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]— have been more liberal in their contribution than those of Pennsylvania.

Why is that, Mr. O'NEILL?

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!" "We will give you a week!"]

Mr. RAYNER (continuing to read):

"In fact, I have it from the best possible source that the manufacturers of Pennsylvania, who are more highly protected than anybody else, and who make large fortunes every year when times are prosperous, practically give nothing towards the maintenance of the ascendency of the Republican party. Of course I shall not violate what I consider to be a proper principle of action; but if I had my way about it I would put the manufacturers of Pennsylvania under the fire and fry all the fat out of them. If the Mills tariff bill comes to the Senate there will be some votes cast there which will open the eyes of some of these people who have, while gathering their millions, treated the Republican party as their humble servant."

Now, this is either true or it is not true.

A MEMBER on the Republican side. Who makes that assertion?

Mr. RAYNER. It is published in this paper, and it has been copied without denial or contradiction in a dozen different papers throughout the country as a letter written by Mr. Foster, president of the Republican League, and the reply of a Republican Senator to that letter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have read this simply as I find it. I am not here for the purpose of charging any individual upon the other side of the House as being in a combination of this sort, because I have too much respect for a great many of the gentlemen who compose the other side of this Hall, and too high an opinion of them, to make any such charge; but I do say that if this is true there is a criminal combination between some of the leaders of the Republican party and some one else to keep on protected duties and for the manufacturers to compensate for that by paying assessments for the purpose of carrying on the Republican campaign, and I merely say that in the fight we are making against this sort of a fraudulent conspiracy——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed three minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYNER. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is a serious question, and it requires a great deal more than the bantering of a clown or the pranks of a buffoon to divert public attention from it. The man who arises upon the floor of this House, in view of what the country knows, and says that there is no monopoly in this land, while he himself is the howling dervish of the monopolists, may do very well to play the part of harlequin in a political menagerie, but he figures in a very poor light before the nation as the Delphic oracle of the Republican party.

I tell you, gentlemen, that this issue is too important to be brushed aside by a boorish jest. You can not destroy it. You can not bury it. The deeper its grave, the higher its revival and the greater its reascension. We will make you paint upon your banners, if you do not disclaim the leadership of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED], that there is no monopoly in this land, in hoc signo vincemus, and on that issue we will fight you from the mountains to the prairies, in every town and hamlet of this land, until your banner lies drooping in the dust, torn and tattered at your feet. [Applause on the Democratic side, and derisive cries and jeers on the Republican side.]

Mr. COGSWELL. It is but fair to this debate and just to the committee in charge of this bill to say that glue could not have been taken from the free-list solely in the interest of this Chicago district, which is said to be Democratic, because I am quite sure that the district I have the honor to represent, which is a Republican district, has as large a glue interest, if not larger than that of Chicago. Surely when you combine the glue interest in my district with the large leather-tanning industry, which is indirectly interested in glue, and the fish-glue and isinglass interests, the aggregate in men employed and money used must be larger than the interest of that Chicago district. I know that the parties in my district who are interested in glue and fish-glue have been earnest in their endeavors here to have those articles taken from the free-list, and, as representing them, it is but fair to say that I am glad, in whatever manner it may have come about, that the committee listened to those gentlemen, and that at least this one industry is to be protected by the pending amendment, which I hope will be adopted. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. GOFF. I am heartily in favor of the amendment proposed, and as I was so unfortunate as not to hear the explanation given by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] of the reasons that moved him when he moved to strike out these two lines, I will use the few moments that have been yielded to me to ask the gentleman to favor the committee now with a statement of his reasons for moving this amendment. It is certainly rather a serious position for the gentleman from Tennessee to take, because I have no doubt he feels that his party friends will have some use in the near future for the article of glue for the purpose of holding their platform and their voters together. [Laughter.] I wish to remind the gentleman from Tennessee also that when he makes this motion he is asking us to tear to pieces the Democratic platform on which Grover Cleveland has been nominated, because in the St. Louis convention they adopted and indorsed the Mills bill. It does seem to me therefore that there should be some statement given to the country why this great Democratic policy as enunciated at St. Louis is to be attacked or abandoned thus early in the campaign. I pause for the gentleman to give the explanation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, when I sought the attention of the Chair a few moments ago it was simply for the purpose of asking a question of the gentleman from Tennessee; but so many other members have asked almost the same question that I think it hardly worth while now to take up time in propounding it again. I know personally the gentleman from Tennessee, and have always believed that he acted from pure and conscientious motives; and when, in response to the question why he desired to take from the free-list of the Mills bill the words "glue, gelatine, and all similar preparations," he said "Because it was right," the thought which suggested itself to my mind, and which became a matter of remark on this side of the Chamber, was that for four months this Mills bill has been under consideration, yet gentlemen on the other side did not find out that "it was right" to strike out these words until they found it necessary to manufacture American glue for its adhesive qualities in causing votes to "stick" to the Mills bill. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will yet explain why "it is right" to protect "glue, gelatine, and all similar preparations" and not right to protect wool, not right to protect flaxseed, not right to protect lumber.

I was amused at another thing. The gentleman from Iowa, with that peculiar air ascribed to one of old, which says apparently, "I am holier than my fellow-man," took the gentleman from Maine to task, because, forsooth, he questioned the motives of this proposition, and that in the interest of the farmer. I have observed, Mr. Chairman, as to one item of this bill which strikes $12,000,000 from the hands of the farmers, the gentleman from Iowa swallows it, to say nothing of striking down the wool industry of the farmers. I do not understand that kind of argument which pleads for the farmer of the country, yet advocates a bill which protects everything except the industry of the farmer.

There was another matter which struck me as very peculiar, and it reminded me of a little incident which I observed once on a railroad journey. Traveling through the State of Pennsylvania, I looked out and saw a mild, quiet, refined looking man to whom a rough fellow was applying, one after another, the most abusive epithets. The gentleman who was thus abused returned to the car and resumed quietly and with undisturbed dignity his seat, and remained unruffled until we had crossed Ohio into Indiana, and then he got very angry. We could not understand why it took him so long to get into a passion. I am reminded of that incident sometimes in this House, when I find gentlemen who listen to insinuations against them for three or four weeks before they get angry. They remind me of that gentleman who was disposed to make in Indiana the fight he ought to have made in Pennsylvania. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWLER. I move to amend by striking out the last two words. Some reference has been made to the Representative from the Second district of Illinois——

The CHAIRMAN. All debate on this paragraph is now closed by unanimous consent.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WEBER to strike out lines 50 and 51 of the bill, embracing the words "glue, gelatine, and all similar preparations," the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glycerine, crude, brown, or yellow, of the specific gravity of 1.25 or less at a temperature of 60° Fahrenheit, not purified by refining or distilling.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] threw down a challenge to the gentlemen on the other side to stand a civil-service examination on the industries of this country affected by the pending bill and on the relation of these industries one to another. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I, for one, should not be willing to accept that challenge. I have, however, made a very slight and superficial study of the industries affected by the paragraph relating to crude glycerine, now under consideration, and on their relations to one another. I rise now to secure, if possible, some information from the Committee on Ways and Means, in order to enable me to pursue my studies a little further in the same direction.

In the pending paragraph we find crude or unrefined glycerine on the free-list. Under the provisions of the existing tariff law it is dutiable at 2 cents per pound. Crude glycerine is used altogether for the manufacture of refined glycerine. Refined glycerine we find in a subsequent paragraph of this bill, dutiable at 3 cents per pound.

Under the existing tariff law it is dutiable at 5 cents per pound. The rate of duty on crude glycerine is reduced 2 cents per pound. The rate of duty on refined glycerine is also reduced 2 cents per pound. There is the same reduction in the two cases. A manufacturer of refined glycerine can not, perhaps, complain of the change.

The effect of the change in the duty must be the same in both cases. If the reduction of the duty implies a corresponding change in the selling price of the article, the manufacturer of refined glycerine, who uses crude glycerine as a material of his manufacture, can not complain that the duty on his product and the duty on the material which he uses in his industry are reduced at the same time and to the same extent.

But, Mr. Chairman, why regard the manufacturer of refined glycerine? Why not put refined glycerine on the free-list in the interest of the consumer? If protection is robbery, why protect this particular robber? There is only one answer: The Committee on Ways and Means here admit the principle of protection. The committee admit the principle that the duty on the finished product of an industry ought to be higher than the duty on the material out of which that finished product is made. Crude glycerine being the material of an American industry, and refined glycerine being the product of that industry, the committee admit that the duty on the latter ought to be higher than the duty on the former.

I take no exception, Mr. Chairman, to the principle or to its application; but, surely, if the principle is a sound one, it is as sound in its application to other industries as it is in its application to the industry of converting crude into refined glycerine. Let us see how the committee have applied it elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, there is hardly a material thing which has been touched by the hands of labor which is not at one and the same time the product of one industry and the material of another industry. This is true of the two substances to which I have referred, crude and refined glycerine. Refined glycerine, for instance, is not only the finished product of the business of refining crude glycerine; it is also the material used in several other American industries. So of crude glycerine. It is not only the material out of which refined glycerine is made; it is also one of the finished products of the soap-making industry.

If you take various sorts of animal or vegetable oils or fats and treat them with caustic soda you gain two finished products. The one is crude glycerine; the other is soap. Soap and crude glycerine are therefore the two main products of the soap-making business, in which caustic soda is the main material. Of these two main products of the soap-making industry, one, namely, crude glycerine, we find here on the free-list. A few lines further down we find the other placed on the free-list also.

Now, if the Committee on Ways and Means apply to the soap-making industry the same principle which they have applied to the glycerine-refining industry, it is evident that the duty on the finished products, namely, soap and crude glycerine, ought to be higher than the duty imposed upon caustic soda, the material out of which soap and crude glycerine are made.

If, however, the committee for any reason see fit to place soap and crude glycerine on the free-list, the very least which the manufacturer of these articles can demand is that caustic soda, the principal material out of which soap and crude glycerine are made, should also be put on the free-list. A decent regard for consistency would compel the committee to concede it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you may examine the free-list of this bill from end to end and you will not find caustic soda there. Look, however, at the dutiable list of this bill. There you find it dutiable at half a cent per pound. How is this? In the business of refining crude glycerine one principle seems to have been adopted. In the business of manufacturing crude glycerine another principle has been applied. In the first case the duty on the finished product is higher than the duty on the material out of which it is made. In the other case the duty on the material is higher than the duty on the finished product.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Read the next line.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to strike out the words "by refining or distilling."

Mr. Chairman, it seems that I have not succeeded by what I have said in eliciting any valuable information from the Committee on Ways and Means. I will make another attempt, and for that purpose I have offered a formal amendment.

I have said that the committee have applied one rule to the industry of refining glycerine, and another and an entirely different rule to the business of manufacturing crude glycerine. In the former they impose a higher rate upon the finished product and a lower rate upon the material out of which the finished product is made, while in the other case they adopt the opposite rule, and impose a higher rate upon the material of the industry than they impose upon the finished product.

Now this is a question of practical concern to many of my constituents. They are interested in the soap and glycerine industry. In the soap works of Chicago there were employed last year about one thousand workingmen. They manufacture crude glycerine as well as soap.

If a change in the tariff duty has an effect upon the selling price of the dutiable article, it is a matter of some concern to them that the Committee on Ways and Means have placed upon the free-list the two main products of the industry by which these workingmen gain their daily bread, and has at the same time left dutiable the main material, caustic soda, on which the cost of that industry depends.

Yet they find that when we come to the very next stage of the process by which refined glycerine is produced the committee adopts the opposite rule, and places a higher rate of duty on the finished product, refined glycerine, than they place on the crude glycerine out of which it is made. In the one case the committee put the higher rate on the product and the lower rate on the material. In the other case, in which my constituents are directly concerned, the committee puts the completed product on the free-list, and imposes a duty on the material.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, it is not unreasonable in me to ask the Committee on Ways and Means for some explanation of this which I can impart to my constituents.

Mr. Chairman, when my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] suggested that we ought to inform ourselves of the relations to each other of the American industries affected by this bill, so that we might act intelligently upon it, it occurred to me that I would try to trace a little further back the industrial processes on which the soap and glycerine industries depend, and see how they are affected by this bill. Crude glycerine, as I have said, is made by the application of caustic soda to animal and vegetable oils and fats.

Now, what is caustic soda made from? Of late years it is made almost altogether from salt or salt brine. You have put salt on the free-list. Will that diminish the cost of making salt? Not at all. Gentlemen will claim that it will make table salt cheaper; they say it will cheapen imported salt to the extent of 1 cent per annum to each inhabitant of the United States. But caustic soda is not likely to be made from imported salt to any considerable extent. It will be made at or near the salt-works at Syracuse, or at or near the salt-works in the Saginaw valley, if it is made at all in this country.

That it is likely to be made at some place in this country the committee seem to believe, because they have retained the protection duty. If they did not believe this, why did they retain the duty? By putting salt on the free-list the committee, whatever they may expect of the effect on the price of salt on the seaboard, can not possibly claim that they have cheapened the cost of producing salt in the United States. Therefore they can hardly claim that they have cheapened the cost of making caustic soda, or the cost of making soap and glycerine, of which caustic soda is so important a material.

If, however, we follow the industrial process one step further back we shall find that the Committee on Ways and Means, according to the reasoning of several gentlemen on the other side, have actually increased the cost of making salt, and therefore the cost of making caustic soda, and therefore the cost of making crude glycerine. They have put lumber on the free-list.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not mean to say that lumber is one of the materials out of which salt is made. All that I mean is that the lumber industry is one of the agencies by which the cost of making salt is reduced in the Saginaw valley. To stop the Michigan lumber mills is to increase the cost of making salt in Michigan.

The reason is this: Salt works in Michigan, as we have repeatedly heard on this floor, are placed in close connection with the lumber mills. They thus get their fuel, not merely for nothing, but actually for less than nothing. They use as fuel the refuse of the lumber mills which otherwise the lumber mills would have to get rid of at a considerable expense.

If, then, by putting lumber on the free-list you stop the lumber-mills you add to the cost of producing salt. Will gentlemen on the other side contend that in voting to put lumber they did not vote to diminish the activity of the lumber mills? Certainly not all of them.

Most of the gentlemen on the other side who spoke in favor of putting lumber on the free-list advocated it, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] did, in order to preserve our forests from destruction. It is inconceivable that putting lumber on the free-list should have any tendency to preserve our forests, unless it had a tendency to stop the lumber mills which were consuming them.

These gentlemen, therefore, in voting to put lumber on the free-list as a means of preserving our forests, voted to diminish the supply of fuel to the salt works of the Saginaw valley. They therefore voted to increase the cost of making salt in the United States. They therefore voted in favor of increasing the cost of making caustic soda in the United States. They also are bound by caucus decree to retain the duty on caustic soda. They therefore vote, according to their own reasoning, in favor of increasing the cost of making soap and crude glycerine in the United States. Yet as soon as I shall have finished my remarks they will probably vote with alacrity, if not with understanding, in favor of putting soap and crude glycerine on the free-list. With equal alacrity and without the slightest regard for consistency, they will probably, when we come to the dutiable list of this bill, vote to retain the duty on refined glycerine. In short, there is no consistency whatever in the pending bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, the amount of revenue derived from this source is $204,000.

Mr. ADAMS. What was the gentleman's statement?

Mr. MCMILLIN. That this produced $204,000 of revenue. Of the crude glycerine used about 70 per cent. is imported.

Mr. ADAMS. One-half, I think.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman will find, I think, upon a closer examination that about 70 per cent. of it is imported. The balance of that which is consumed in this country is made as a by-product, by the candle factories in the main.

Mr. BURROWS. By whom?

Mr. MCMILLIN. By the manufacturers of candles.

There might be some ground for the claim of the gentleman from Illinois, that there was a want of consistency in this provision of the bill, where he speaks of glycerine for soap-manufacturing purposes, were it not for the fact that that is not the only use to which glycerine is applied. And I want to remind him here, once for all, that he need not expect a bill which has to be made up on such an incongruous basis as the law under which we are now operating to be perfectly consistent in every respect. It has necessarily to be framed to meet the existing law, and it is impossible that it could be otherwise. It has been shown by gentlemen on their own side of the debate to be the case, and the very hardships of which gentlemen have complained more than once during the course of this debate are inflicted by the law under which we are now operating.

We are receiving very nearly a quarter of a million of dollars on revenue not needed; and that is a sufficient answer for the action of the committee, especially in view of the fact that that is a raw material in the manufacture of various other products.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question for practical information: Will the reduction of duty on refined glycerine from 5 to 3 cents diminish the revenue?

Mr. MCMILLIN. The placing of this article on the free-list will diminish the cost of it, and that is the only thing to which I am addressing my remarks at the present time. When we reach that clause of the bill to which the gentleman's question is applicable, then I will address myself to that. If it does not reduce the revenue it gives a cheaper commodity to the people, and at the same time any of the reductions of the revenue which may follow legitimately from the result of cheapening the duties; and in view of the existing conditions of the Treasury, and of the manufacturing interests in this country, we believe that the reduction proposed by the committee is right and consistent in this regard. The bill, taken as a whole, does very largely reduce the revenues, and that is a sufficient answer, I think.

I now ask a vote.

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew the pro forma amendment, and I desire to say that the mathematician or economist does not exist who can make anything like an accurate prediction as to the true answer to the question, Will this bill increase or reduce the revenues?

The elements are not given upon which such a calculation can be based, because in many instances the reduction of duty is made in such a way as to invite immensely enhanced imports, which, with a lower rate of duty, will give an increased instead of a diminished revenue.

Now, there is no opportunity to allege that the duty proposed to be repealed is a prohibitory or an oppressive one. We manufacture 9,000,000 pounds of crude glycerine, and import 10,245,356 pounds, showing that we import between one-ninth and one-tenth more than the entire amount manufactured in this country.

As has been shown by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS], we have destroyed the usefulness of the slabs and dust that accumulate about saw-mills in the neighborhood of salt springs, and have probably in some instances, if this bill should become law, closed up the salt works by destroying the production of free fuel for its manufacture. So now we are confronted with this proposition, which will bear like pernicious fruits. Let us see what are the ingredients of crude glycerine.

They are animal fats. They are materials which, if they go to waste, become prejudicial to the health of the neighborhood in which they are permitted to decay, noxious odors being exhaled, while where the manufacture of glycerine is maintained they are carried away before they become pestilential, and are converted into, not, as the gentleman from Tennessee says, the "raw material of other manufactures," but they become manufactured materials for higher manufactures. The pride of a great nation, of a nation that can, as the Democratic party in this House seem to think we can not do, convert crude materials into advanced materials, and thence into finished products, it is the pride of such a nation that it knows no such thing as waste. That which is waste in one manufacture, or in some condition of life, rises under the influence of science into a material, and crude glycerine is one of these striking illustrations of the law that in diversified industries there is no waste. In its production the refuse of soap and candle factories, whose products are made of that which was the refuse of the household and the slaughter-house—not very attractive subjects—becomes a source of one of the purest articles—chemically purest—known to our pharmacopia or to chemistry.

Mr. DALZELL. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be permitted to continue for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Just as while we maintain by means of protective legislation the lumber trade in the salt regions of Michigan and elsewhere, we furnish, as I have intimated, in the refuse slabs and dust free fuel for making salt and refining salt, hereby destroying the glycerine manufacture. You propose to convert that which is the material first for crude glycerine and then refined glycerine into offensive and possibly fatal nuisances, as the piles of slab and dust will become in the neighborhood of saw-mills. You determine to make waste; to retrograde in arts and productive power by reducing to waste that which science, capital, and energy have converted into commercial commodities and utilized as sources of profitable employment to labor.

Just in proportion as the majority of this committee pursues this retrograde course they will reduce our country from its industrial independence and the position of the proudest nation of the world, having the largest capacity for production, with the grandest means of transportation, and the greatest power of consumption by its producing classes. The whole policy of this bill is to travel back toward barbarism by reducing from the elements of manufacture the waste that we now convert into utility of inestimable value. Yes; the protest against striking this clause from the free-list can not be made that the duty on crude glycerine is an embarrassment to free foreign trade, for, as I have said, we imported 1,245,356 pounds more in the last fiscal year than we manufactured, though the duty was 2 cents per pound.

Why should that 2 cents be taken off? Why should we say to the manufacturers of explosives, of an element in the preparation of chewing tobacco, of an ingredient in medicinal purposes, in anti-freezing compounds by which fruits and meats are transported in safety across our continent, for color-making, for use in the manufacture of the finest and firmest of our colors for textiles, all the coal-tar, colors, and anilines, that we will make waste of a material used profitably in all these elements of life? Why strive to reduce our country to colonial dependence at a time when she is advancing far before the next manufacturing nation of the world?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, supposing the pro forma amendment to be withdrawn.

The question having been put, the Chair was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. KELLEY. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 59.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fish-glue or isinglass.

Mr. McMILLIN. I offer the following amendment:

Page 3, strike out line 55.

Mr. BAYNE. I was about to make that motion.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am glad I shall have the gentleman's co-operation.

Mr. BAYNE. I knew, of course, this should be included with glue, gelatine, and similar preparations; that they both came from the same factory, and the only commentary I now have to make upon the bill is to ask how it was that glue, gelatine, and similar preparations represent lines 50 and 51, and that lines 52, 53, and 54 represent glycerine, crude, brown, and yellow. Then in line 55 we have fish-glue or isinglass. The only suggestion that want of juxtaposition makes to my mind is that the committee evidently did not understand at the time they prepared this bill that glue, gelatine, fish-glue, and isinglass all came from the same factory, or they would not have interpolated glycerine, crude, brown or yellow, etc. It affords an inference simply of the want of knowledge on the part of the committee when the committee prepared this bill. That is all the commentary I have to make.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Provided your statement is correct.

Mr. McMILLIN. Those who know the gentleman will not treat this side of the House very severely on account of his criticism.

I wish to state in connection with these amendments what I intended to state on the amendment that was offered to lines 50 and 51. It was passing strange to me that the very gentlemen who had moved to strike it out or desired it stricken out, and in their speeches so announced, would turn with such fierceness and criticise us for proposing to strike it out. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], who I am happy to see in his seat, quoted what would be regarded as poetry if rhyme alone made poetry. In this connection I will be permitted to quote a suggestion that Junius once made to a certain individual he was writing against.

Mr. WARNER. I will say to the gentleman that if Cowper is not much of a poet he is at least better than the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. It may be the poetry was ruined by the quoting. Junius, on an occasion the gentleman will remember, and I quote for his particular edification and instruction, said:

> Masks, hatchets, racks, and vipers dance through your mind in all the mazes of metaphoric confusion. These are the gloomy companions of a disturbed imagination—the melancholy madness of poetry without its inspiration.

I was surprised at the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] for the attack he made; at the same time saying this amendment ought to prevail and criticising this side of the House for making it. What are the facts concerning this manufacture? One grade bears a duty of 20 per cent., another 25 per cent., and another 30 per cent.

Mr. McMILLIN. It was represented to the committee after the bill was framed that the retention of the present rate of duty would make it possible to use in this manufacture a very large amount of the trimmings of the skins of animals, and the cartilages and those portions that go into the composition of glue and gelatine, and that the manufacture could not be maintained without the retention of the duty.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The cartilaginous matters that the gentleman speaks of do not enter into gelatine at all. Gelatine is made from the clear hide.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am speaking of the three commodities. They are of a somewhat analogous nature, but the one which the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] speaks of is a refined product, and those that I am speaking of are made from certain portions of fish that are used for that purpose. Now these are the facts, and yet the very gentleman who said that the amendment was right rises now to criticise this side of the House for making it. As I have already said, compared with the other rates of duty in the existing law, or proposed by this bill, this is a very moderate duty, and the committee stood ready in this case, as they stand ready at all times, to adopt whatever amendment may seem to be necessary to the enactment of a law that shall be just and wise in all its parts.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, during the progress of this tariff debate, I have not quoted any poetry whatever, and I should not now undertake to quote even a couplet were it not for the severe criticism made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] upon the recitation which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] gave us from Cowper. But, since the gentleman from Tennessee has criticised Cowper's poetry by calling it "rhyme," I wish to quote back at him an old stanza, simply substituting "Mac" for "John." With that substitution it will run in this way:

> Mac his own merit sees:
> This give him pride;
> For he sees more
> Than all the world beside.

[Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLIN. I make no reply to a personal reflection.

Mr. BAYNE. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the Chair will regard the formal amendment as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment to strike out the line.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Phosphorus.

Soap stocks, fit only for use as such.

Soap, hard and soft, all which are not otherwise specially enumerated or provided for.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, almost everything which I said in regard to crude glycerine a few minutes ago will apply with equal force to soap, which is the article now under consideration.

Almost everything which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] has said in regard to fish-glue and isinglass will also apply to soap, as well as to glycerine.

I wish I could place on the same page, in parallel columns, side by side, the remarks which fell from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] in regard to crude glycerine, and the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] in regard to fish-glue, isinglass, and gelatine. The arguments in the two cases are almost precisely similar. They apply to soap and glycerine as closely as they apply to fish-glue and gelatine.

Yet the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and his colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee will put fish-glue, isinglass, and gelatine on the dutiable list, while they put soap and glycerine on the free-list.

The gentleman from Tennessee says that the substances used in the manufacture of fish-glue and isinglass would not be used at all unless this duty is retained. The same is largely true of crude glycerine. For years in a large soap factory in my district it ran waste into the Chicago River. Now it is utilized, and the duty gives a motive to utilize it.

The gentleman says the duty on fish-glue and isinglass is a moderate duty. So is the duty on crude glycerine and on plain soap. He claims that it is consistent in the Ways and Means Committee to retain a moderate duty on an article when there is some probability that the manufacture of that article will be maintained and increased.

Then they ought to have retained the moderate duty on soap and crude glycerine, especially as they had determined to retain the duty on the caustic soda of which soap and crude glycerine are made.

It is altogether useless for the gentleman from Tennessee to endeavor to justify the amendment which he himself has proposed striking fish, glue, isinglass, and gelatine from the free-list and at the same time to oppose either the amendment which I proposed a little while ago with regard to crude glycerine or the one which I now propose in regard to soap.

One thing further. In the existing law a distinction is made between plain soaps, which may be reckoned among the necessaries of life, and toilet or fancy soaps, which are the luxuries of the rich and appertain to the toilets of the fashionable.

In this bill all are included in one class and put on the free-list. In the existing law the provision reads as follows:

Soaps, hard and soft, all which are not otherwise specially enumerated o provided for in this act, and castile soap 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Then comes another class, "fancy, perfumed, and all descriptions of toilet soaps, 15 cents per pound."

But in this bill the luxuries and the necessaries all go together. They are all placed upon the free-list while the main material which is used in their manufacture is still kept on the dutiable list.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] offer an amendment?

Mr. ADAMS. I moved, or intended to move, to strike out "soaps."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sheep-dip.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like some gentleman to tell the committee what "sheep-dip" is; and therefore I move to strike out this clause. I want to get precise information as to what the article is.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I can tell the gentleman what it is.

Mr. KELLEY. Do you oppose my amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I am opposed to the motion to strike out.

Mr. KELLEY. Then the gentleman is in order to speak on the question.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. It is a chemical preparation for the dipping or washing of sheep. The purpose of dipping them is to destroy parasites upon the skin, causing "scab," and others which adhere to the wool. This article is one of the necessaries of a sheep ranch where large numbers of sheep are kept together. The most approved preparations are not made in this country. A considerable amount of it is imported, and the use of it is increasing. In the list of the expenses of one of the large sheep ranches in Texas, on which five thousand sheep were kept, the expense for "sheep-dip" for one year was $150. It is essential to the health of large flocks, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania can not object to putting it on the free-list.

Mr. DORSEY. What are the ingredients?

Mr. MORSE. It is a patent preparation. How does my colleague know the ingredients?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. The ingredients of "sheep-dip" are not known to me. It is a strongly concentrated preparation, comparatively cheap, a great deal cheaper than any of the old-fashioned dips which were made by shepherds. It is mixed with about a hundred parts of water. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] in his speech referred to "sheep-dip" as a composition of tobacco, salt and sulphur. That was the composition of the dips which were formerly used, and are still made by small flock-masters, men who keep from fifty to one hundred sheep. But where large numbers of sheep are kept, they have to be driven through a tank for the purpose of dipping them; and it is impossible to prepare suitable dips in the old-fashioned manner. Consequently, in the interest of the large ranches and the business of the production of wool, we should place sheep-dip on the free-list. There can not be the slightest objection to doing so.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, in moving to strike out this line, I had no special desire to see the motion agreed to, nor any hope, if such had been my desire, that we could do it. My object was to learn something about the constituents of "sheep dip" and the mode of its manufacture. I have been informed that we get our "sheep dip" from a foreign "trust," which consists of one man, the owner of a patent for its manufacture; and until American genius discovered a substitute for the foreign article, that "trust" furnished the supply of dip for our great flocks.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a foreign patent which gentlemen propose to recognize in an American tariff.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir. Now I have heard—some of my friends from Kentucky can probably tell me what is the fact—that a very worthy gentleman residing in Louisville or Covington, Ky., the pleasure of whose acquaintance I have had for some years, but whose name I can not recall at this moment, had discovered a process for removing nicotine from fine tobacco and has greatly improved the quality of our cigars and smoking tobacco by extracting the nicotine, and has, in doing this, absolutely established an American competitor with the European "trust" in the matter of sheep dip. If this is so, of course he ought to be overthrown. The foreign article must, of course, be a great deal better for American sheep than any which may be got from Kentucky. If I have been misinformed in this matter, I would be glad to hear a contradiction of the statement.

Mr. MCMILLIN. When the gentleman asserts that it is true, we will investigate the matter. Does he claim that it is true? As I understand, he does not claim that he knows the man, or even his name.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir; I do know the gentleman.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have not heard of any such "trust," nor has any other member of the committee.

Mr. KELLEY rose.

Mr: MCMILLIN. The gentleman will pardon me if I decline to yield at this moment. I suppose I would not exaggerate if I were to say there are thousands of preparations used for this purpose. Some parties make their own preparations; many of them, possibly most of them, do so. The gentleman on my left says that most of them do. The committee, while proposing to put wool on the free-list, thought that this, being a chemical product used extensively and necessarily by the owners of flocks, should also properly be placed on the free-list.

Mr. FARQUHAR. In the list prepared at the Treasury Department this preparation is called sheep-dip. Now it is really crysilic wash. It is, I understand, a patented article.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does not the gentleman know there are very many different kinds of sheep-dip?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I merely wish to know whether this "sheep-dip" which gentlemen propose to put on the free-list covers all the preparations of sheep-dip, or does it merely admit free some particular foreign patented preparation?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think that any commodity coming under the designation of "sheep-dip" would, under this clause, be admitted free; I should suppose so. There is no disposition on the part of the committee to give an unequal advantage to any particular foreign article. The only object is to furnish as cheaply as possible to the owners of flocks whatever is necessary to their preservation.

Mr. LODGE. In this valuable work prepared at the Treasury Department, of which I trust we shall soon all have a copy, I find sheep-dip described as "crysilic wash"—nothing else. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee to say that the name covers a great many preparations.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I stated that a number of different kinds of sheep-dip are used. This is my information. Tobacco mingled with certain chemicals is extensively used for this purpose. There is no one commodity exclusively used. That work is the work of the Treasury Department and——

Mr. LODGE. But I suppose is describes what is the dutiable article. It appears that the duty raised upon it amounted to last year $801.80.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his amendment?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir.

By unanimous consent, formal amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. BAYNE. I renew the motion to strike out the last word, and I wish to ask my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] a question. I understood my colleague to say we are now manufacturing sheep-dip in this country which answers the purpose very well, but before we got to manufacturing it in this country we purchased from abroad because there seems to be one man who has an entire monopoly of this article if I understood him correctly.

Mr. KELLEY. Yes; my authority is the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BAYNE. He sustains that proposition, then.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Do you refer to me?

Mr. KELLEY. You said the owners of small flocks, owners of few sheep, make their own wash.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Generally.

Mr. KELLEY. But not so with owners of large ranges, who use the imported article.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. They use the imported dip.

Mr. KELLEY. You could not tell the material, because it is protected by a patent.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I did not say that; some one said it was protected by a patent. I have seen several chemical combinations. They are not expensive. It is a great deal more profitable to buy them than to make the dip for any large number of sheep.

Mr. KELLEY. Are those articles imported?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I know of three of them which are imported. I have seen in use at least three. One has been mentioned by one of the gentlemen on that side. There is another, but I can not recall the name of it at this moment; I can not give the names, but the names are not descriptive. They are generally used one part to a hundred parts of water, and they are exceedingly convenient.

Every sheep man on this side and on that—and I know there are sheep men on that side as well as on this—will agree they are used on all sheep ranges and add greatly to the health of the flocks.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say, with your permission, now in answer to the acting chairman of the committee and to my friends in Kentucky, that a Mr. Robinson, of Kentucky, a cultivated and highly-bred gentleman, spent nearly a long session here in endeavoring to secure the passage of an act that would make free alcohol for use in the arts that he might bring into favor his patent for improving tobacco, a by-product of which would be a sheep-dip superior to any known to the shepherds of this country.

My friend from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] was mistaken in saying I did not know the man and did not know his name. My memory for names is singularly treacherous. This one has come back to me. His name is a distinguished one in Kentucky, and the family name was applied to him.

He did not get the legislation he wanted, but I have had some letters from him thanking me for my efforts in his behalf. And when I was recently in Kentucky I grieved to learn he was not there, because I heard from Mr. Harry Weissinger, of the great tobacco house in Louisville, and others that by his invention he had enhanced the price of Kentucky tobacco many per cent. and had at the same time given to the flock-masters a better sheep-dip than any other, the chief element of which was nicotine; which his process extracted from the leaf.

So I did know what I was talking about, and I did know whom I was talking about. I was talking about that which I did know and understand.

Mr. BAYNE. I want now to occupy the balance of my time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to make a personal explanation. I was merely calling attention to what the fact was, and had no other disposition than to present the fact properly. While the gentleman from Pennsylvania stated he heard there was a trust, as I understand it he did not vouch for the existence of any such trust. I did not mean any reflection on the gentleman from Pennsylvania at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, formal amendments will be withdrawn.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to strike out the last word.

I wish to make one observation. If to put sheep-dip on the free-list benefits a trust in this country, it ought to be there in this bill, and if it benefits a foreign trust, a fortiori, it ought to be there, because this bill seems to be in that direction for the benefit of the great monopolies and trusts in this country, and if it can not do it in this country it reaches out to those in foreign countries.

Mr. RAYNER. There is no foreign trust in it. I wish to say to the gentleman I know all about it.

Mr. KELLEY. Goldsborough Robinson is the name of the Kentucky gentleman to whom I have referred. Gentlemen from Kentucky must know him and his family and of his valuable discovery.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I renew the pro forma amendment for the purpose of calling attention to the words uttered a few moments ago by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means. He said, if I heard him correctly, and I am satisfied I did, that the committee having put wool upon the free-list, that they conceived they ought to put sheep-dip upon the free-list also. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the duties upon sheep-dip amounted last year to about $800, and the duties upon wool reached $6,390,054.73. Therefore the American farmer gets $6,389,254.73 the worst of the bargain at the hands of the Committee on Ways and Means. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

62. Indigo, extracts of, and carmined.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to move an amendment to line 61.

The CHAIRMAN. But that has been passed over.

Mr. PARKER. It was read, but the debate has been upon sheep-dip, and there has been no opportunity to amend that line.

The CHAIRMAN. But it was open to amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The line was not more than half read when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was on his feet and made the amendment with reference to line 60.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment.

Mr. PARKER. I move to strike out line 61.

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out line 61.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But that line has been passed over.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It has not been passed. It was not more than half read when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] was upon his feet claiming recognition upon the preceding line. I observed it closely.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the line was read; but will entertain the amendment.

Mr. PARKER. I move to strike out line 61; "extract of hemlock and other bark used for tanning."

This, Mr. Chairman, is the first opportunity that has been afforded for submitting that amendment. Putting this item upon the free-list is one of those singular but marked illustrations of the methods of those who control this bill of taking care of the poor man and the workman and the farmer of this country.

When this subject was once before pending in Congress we found the great tanners of this country—the Shaw Brothers of the country—and the great millionaires of the leather-producing interest here, asking that the duty be taken off hemlock extract.

Then we looked to see who the men were that would be benefited by repealing the duty on hemlock extract. We found them not to be the poor workingmen living upon the poorer farms in Maine and New Hampshire, New York and Pennsylvania, and in Ohio, where we meet the competing bark sections, but that such men would be injured by making this extract free, while the millionaire leather makers and dealers and the millionaire tanners would be benefited by the proposition to make it free; therefore the duty was kept up at 20 per cent. ad valorem; and what was the effect? The last year—that is, during 1887—for that fiscal year the whole quantity of this commodity imported was valued at $51 only, and the duty derived from it $10.20. Why? Because the duty was practically prohibitory.

Now, in order to show the necessity for the protection of this industry I will read first the process of making this commodity:

Hemlock extract is the product obtained by grinding and leaching hemlock bark and reducing the liquor to about the consistency of sirup or molasses by evaporation, either in vacuo or openly, as you would boil down maple-sap to make maple-sugar.

Then the further statement is made that—

A cord of bark, weighing 2,000 pounds, worth $1 to $2 on the tree—

Depending upon its distance from the markets—

is peeled, dried, and hauled to the factory, where it brings $5 to $7. Its tannin is there extracted and reduced to a fluid form and to the bulk of 40 gallons, and its weight to 400 pounds, and sells at the factory for about $12. This, except the bark on the tree, is the product of labor.

Now as to the localities and the magnitude of that interest. The great tanners and lumbermen interested in the lowering of this duty have said to us in a memorial submitted to Congress:

We would respectfully ask your attention to the following petition for protection to our hemlock forests, which are rapidly being depleted by one of the largest interests in our country, namely, the leather interest.

* * * * * * *

We would most respectfully ask to have it put on the free-list, coming under the head of protection to our hemlock forests.

That is, the hemlock extract.

We ask this as owners of 1,500,000 acres of land and as manufacturers of 72,000 barrels of extract, which is two-thirds of all the extract manufactured in North America.

We own and control 1,500,000 acres of bark-land and operate 23 tanneries, own 9 extract works, and employ 5,000 men part of the year, 2,000 men all the time, and make 72,000 barrels of extract a year, the entire product of North America being but 100,000 barrels.

These forests and manufactories being in Canada, and they are used for the benefit of Canadian producers and workmen.

We are told in the testimony taken before the Tariff Commission that they were then shipping a great deal of this bark extract from Canada.

The question was asked:

Q. Do they ship it also in the form of ground bark?

A. They do that to some extent; but they have a system of extracting the tanning material by evaporation—quite an ingenious process—making a liquid very similar in appearance to molasses. They claim to get the strength of a ton of bark in an ordinary barrel of the liquid.

Another witness says:

We run four extract works in the United States and five in New Brunswick and Canada.

To show you the quantity of bark used, I can remark that last year we peeled over 150,000 cords of hemlock bark, or enough to make a pile 4 feet high and 4 feet wide that would reach from Boston to New York. We tan 750,000 hides per year in the United States, making 1,500,000 sides of hemlock sole-leather.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I wish now merely to emphasize the position exhibited by these facts. Hemlock bark is a commodity handled by small farmers in the poorer portion of the country where the men have hard work to get money to pay the necessary cash expenses that come upon them. They are the owners of the small farms. They can have their bark peeled at the proper season, and at times of the year when they are not employed in putting in or harvesting their crops they can go into the woods, haul it out, take it to the tanneries, and by its sale obtain money to pay their taxes and to pay for the commodities that require payment in cash. I am aware this is not an interest or a business that attracts either by its magnitude or brilliancy the attention attracted by some of those great industries of the nation. It may not excite the imagination or touch the fancy; but I appeal to you on behalf of these poor men of the newer and less productive farming districts of the country that lie upon the borders of the great forests that this protection which is now allowed to them shall not be taken away. If the gentlemen upon the other side of the House see fit to rob these poor men of the small protection which they have now in the interest of the great tannery and lumber owners who have invested their millions in Canada, they will be proving, what has been often alleged against them, that while clamoring against capitalists, monopolies, and trusts they show themselves to be the very base servants of the people and the organizations they condemn. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will withdraw his amendment I will renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may oppose the amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I will have to oppose it by advocating it. The other would seem to be the more logical way.

Mr. PARKER. I will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. I renew the amendment. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill to hear what I have to say. Either this clause should be stricken out or an amendment, which I should be very sorry to see made, should be made. I think the question will have to be tried when we get near the end of the free-list. If Canada is to be allowed to provide from her forests our extract of hemlock for use in tanning and other purposes, certainly sumac should also be put on the free-list. I do not ask that sumac be put on the free-list. I was one of those who placed it on the dutiable list, and maintained the duty when pleas were made that it should be put on the free-list.

A good many years ago a distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. Tucker) said: "I can not vindicate the maintenance of a duty on sumac logically in accordance with my opinion, but I can appeal to my friend, who believes in the doctrine of protection for protection's sake, to give to the poor old mammies and picaninnies of the hills of Virginia and North Carolina the five or six hundred thousand dollars that are derived from their collection of sumac." The sumac grows, it may be said, as a weed upon unfenced and almost untaxed lands, and the old colored women and the young colored children at that time collected it all and brought it to cross-road stores in the sumac districts of those two States, from five to six hundred thousand dollars' worth a year. The business has greatly increased. It is an immense source of income to the poor people of that region of country; but you propose to strike down the production of extract of hemlock in favor of Canadian land and forest owners.

As the gentleman from the interior of New York [Mr. PARKER] has rightly told you, this industry is largely in the hands of the small farmers, the owners of bits of land on which hemlock trees are found. They cut trees for winter fuel and the bark is sold to the neighboring storekeepers, who collect it for the currier, tanner, and manufacturer of leather. The two things, sumac and extract of hemlock, are allied industries. You should put them together on the dutiable or the free-list. Make the bill equitable. Remove the charge of sectionalism from it by letting the poor people of the wintery regions of the far north have this source of income as we have been allowing it to the mammies and picaninnies of Virginia and North Carolina to have sumac. Deal fairly with both sections of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to strike out line 61.

Mr. BURROWS. Is debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not, except to oppose the amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I am not aware that any information has been furnished the Committee on Ways and Means upon this subject. The only information I have been able to secure is that furnished the Tariff Commission. I desire to send to the desk to have read (although it need not be printed in the RECORD) the passages I have marked touching this industry, showing how destructive it would be to place it on the free-list and how it will inure to the benefit of our Canadian friends across the border. This paper is from L. Crawford & Co., of Philadelphia.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I simply want to say, in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] about the producers of hemlock bark and the workers in the sumac industry, that the very tariff law under which we are now operating, the act of 1883, which was engineered through the House by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, has on the free-list both hemlock bark and sumac wood, dried. It would seem, therefore, that the gentleman's disposition in regard to these articles must have changed recently.

Now, what is the question concerning the item under discussion? The present duty is only 20 per cent., and notwithstanding that fact there was imported last year into the whole United States only $51 worth of this article, the duty on which was $10.20. In view of this small amount of importation under a 20 per cent. duty, does any sane man believe that making this article free, as proposed by the committee, will destroy the industry?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Mr. PARKER. I wish to answer directly the gentleman's question. He stated the amounts correctly. The importation is so small because the present duty is practically prohibitory, but take off that duty and from the regions of Canada where their factories are already built and have been running for years, there will come in an amount which will take the place of the whole supply of bark produced in the Adirondacks and the other regions that have been mentioned. It is because the present duty is prohibitory that it should be kept unchanged, and it is for that reason that it is a benefit to the class of poor men I have mentioned.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chair declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 64.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indigo, extracts of, and carmined.
Iodine, resublimed.
Licorice-juice.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to strike out line 64, "licorice-juice," stating that the purpose is to introduce it on the dutiable list at a reduced rate further on.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is that article produced in this country? Undoubtedly the amendment is a good one, but I would like to know the reason for it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The article is produced in this country. A part of what we use is produced here and a part comes from abroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Oil, croton.
Hemp-seed and rape-seed oil.
Oil, cotton-seed.
Petroleum.
Alumina—alum, patent alum, alum substitute, sulphate of alumina, and aluminous cake, and alum in crystals or ground.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out lines 69, 70, and 71.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let them be reported, so that we may know what they are.

The Clerk read as follows:

Alumina—alum, patent alum, alum substitute, sulphate of alumina, and aluminous cake, and alum in crystals or ground.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, from the experience I have had here as to amending this bill in any way that does not suit the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, I rise with some reluctance to offer this amendment; but I hope these lines will be struck out, upon the ground that in this country we are producing these articles to a great extent, and that the manufacture of them here can not be continued unless the present duty is retained. The methods of making these articles are very expensive indeed. The machinery and the processes are costly, and our ability to compete with the foreign articles has been gained only after many trials.

But now, sir, the American manufacturers have completed such machinery and have developed such processes as they think will enable them to produce articles not merely equal, but superior to the foreign products, and they ask to have the duty remain as it is, because they have been at great expense in procuring machinery and bringing to perfection their methods of manufacture. I make this appeal to the committee in behalf of what is not exactly an infant industry, but such an industry as we ought to take care of if we desire to encourage our manufactures. We are putting on the free-list a great many articles, many of which the friends of protection do not seek to have removed from that list, but occasionally we come to some which ought to be stricken from it, and I hope this amendment will be agreed to, unless the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means can give some good reason why this industry should be destroyed.

I feel interested in this matter because in the locality from which I come these things are manufactured largely. Indeed, many articles in the drug and chemical line are manufactured in the city of Philadelphia, and I have personal knowledge of the magnitude of those establishments and of the enormous outlay that has been incurred in building them up and perfecting the methods of manufacture. I do not know what good reason there can be for striking down the industries which produce these articles here at home, and I therefore appeal to the committee to strike out these lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the lines indicated.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I would like, for the information of the committee, to state a few facts respecting the articles named in this paragraph. In 1887 the amount imported into this country was 198,419 tons; in the same year the quantity made here was 194,000 tons; so that the importation and the home manufacture are about equal. The rate on alum in the existing tariff is six-tenths of a cent per pound, and it is now proposed to put it on the free-list. The same proposition is made in regard to sulphate of soda, on which the present duty is 20 per cent. ad valorem.

I wish to refer to the reasons which have been laid before members by gentlemen engaged in this chemical manufacture. I take the liberty of reiterating these reasons, because possibly many gentlemen may have mislaid the circular which they doubtless received. I have no particular interest in my district which I wish to help in this regard, and none which I think will be hindered by our action on this question; but the reasons presented here are very plain:

Because we are on the eve of the extension and adoption of the ammonia process for making soda, and it is hoped that this important chemical reagent will not be annihilated at the outset.

Because we are about erecting plants at the great coke works with a view of catching the sulphate of ammonia contained in the escaping gases, all of which is now wasted.

Because we are now working the vast deposits of native sulphate and other forms of soda existing in the Western States and Territories, notably, Wyoming, Nevada, and Utah.

Because we are working the Pyrites mines of Virginia, Massachusetts, and Vermont for sulphur ores, in place of Sicilian sulphur, formerly used in making sulphuric acid.

Because we do not want to resume the humiliating position of obtaining our consumption of alum and alkali from foreign sources.

Because labor is a most important item in the cost of all forms of soda and alum, as large masses of material have to be handled and dealt with. The average labor paid here amounts to 39 per cent. of value of product, against an average of 15.6 per cent. in similar establishments in Europe. The above labor includes only that paid at factories. The contingent industries, which amount to a very large sum, are omitted.

Because the grinding down of wages (as we should be compelled to do) is a most objectionable feature, and can not commend itself to enlightened citizens of the United States. We aim not only to pay sufficient wages for mere existence in providing food and clothing, but also to allow of the education and bringing up of the children of the operatives in a proper manner, thus making them better and more enlightened citizens of the Republic.

Because the amount of duties on soda and alum since their original imposition is considerably less than was paid at first, owing to the fact of the foreign manufacturers being quick to perceive that by concentration of those articles the duties might be considerably reduced.

Because the glass, soap, and paper manufacturers, who are the largest consumers, are united on the propriety of the present duties, as lower rates would tend to prevent an increase in their manufacture in this country, and the saving in cost of production of glass, soap, and paper by the reduction in duty would come to so small a fraction as to be quite inappreciable, and would hardly find its way into the pocket of the consumer.

Because the alum and sulphate of soda manufacture would cease entirely, as those articles are placed on the free-list. The revenue from the other forms of soda would be greatly increased in consequence of reducing the duty one-half, as England is forwarding half our supply under the present duty.

Because $10,000,000 are invested in the alum and soda works and half as much additional in contingent and allied industries. Fifty thousand people are dependent upon them for support. The manufacturer, the laborer, the consumer, the mine-owner, and the carrier would see their money drained out of the country, and their requisites would be vastly diminished.

Because the alum-clay deposits of Indiana, Alabama, South Carolina, and Virginia are now being developed, and this would cease with alum on the free-list.

Because the British manufacturers are deeply concerned over the threatening evils to their alum, alkali, and soda industries by reason of the rapid development of those industries in this country. Mr. Weldon, in a paper read in London in 1883, gave the soda production of the world at 710,000 tons, of which 432,000 tons were made in England. The United States, by long odds, is the heaviest consumer.

Because, in consequence of the permanent depression in market values, owing to sharp and active competition, the profit on soda and alum in the old established factories amounts to less than 6 per cent. upon invested capital. Several of the new companies, although in operation two or three years, have paid no dividends at all.

Because heavy chemicals are brought to the United States as ballast, the freight costing only the expenses of handling. These vessels are sent over for grain and petroleum cargoes; hence, sea freight affords no protection.

Because there are many towns that were brought into existence and the people and neighboring farmers supported solely by the chemical industries established in their midst. In view of the evil results that must follow the placing of alum and sulphate of soda on the free-list and the reduction in duty on sodas, we most earnestly request that no change or alteration be made in the existing duties, as it will, in reduced wages and reduced employment, seriously and vitally affect the interests of the respective communities, and without any commensurate gain to any American interest.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that the reasons here given are sufficient to impress the judgment of any member of Congress who is not an expert, and ought to have been taken seriously into account by the Committee on Ways and Means before deciding to place alum on the free-list. I hope that before the debate on this paragraph closes some gentleman of the committee will give us some good and sufficient reason why from seven millions to ten millions of American capital should be hazarded upon a chemical schedule which no man can explain.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph is now exhausted.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, to strike out lines 69, 70, and 71, embracing "alumina, alum, patent alum, alum substitute, sulphate of alumina, and aluminous cake, and alum in crystals or ground," the amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 48, noes 78.

The Clerk read as follows:

All imitations of natural mineral waters, and all artificial mineral waters.
Baryta, sulphate of, or barytes, unmanufactured.
Boracic acid, borate of lime and borax.

Mr. VANDEVER. I move to strike out the line last read. Mr. Chairman, California and Nevada are the only States which produce this salt. Prior to the imposition of a duty upon it, and when our main supply of it came from abroad, the price had run up to something like 35 cents a pound. Upon the imposition of a duty, stimulating the domestic industry and promoting the production of the article in our own country, the price declined in a short time to 6 or 7 cents a pound in San Francisco. It is now proposed to put the article on the free-list, the inevitable consequence of which will be to raise the price of this salt, which is necessary in a great many lines of manufacture and production.

I do not know any particular reason that can be assigned by gentlemen on the other side for putting borax on the free-list. Its production is an industry in which a very large amount of capital is invested in our portion of the country, employing a large number of persons. It is a matter of very great importance upon the Pacific coast to stimulate, develop, and protect this industry so as to supply our own community with the product of our own soil. Hence I have moved to strike out the pending line of the bill. I trust that some other gentleman on this floor will support this amendment with appropriate observations, so that the Committee of the Whole may see how entirely useless it is, so far as revenue is concerned, to place this article upon the free-list at the present time, and how direct a blow such a measure must be to a very important industry which is now developing to a large extent upon our coast.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. Chairman, I have a communication I want to read in continuation of the stand I propose to take in connection with these combinations to control these products:

Borax.—About two months ago the producers of borax in this country formed a combination to regulate both supply and prices. The tariff duty—three cents a pound on crude and five cents a pound on refined—is virtually prohibitory and was imposed for the protection of the owners of borax mines, who have now united to prevent competition. We take the following from the Boston Commercial Bulletin, a well-known protectionist trade journal, which publishes the statement simply as news:

The combination includes the sixteen producers of the Pacific coast, and under its influence the price of borax has been advanced; first, to 6½ cents for refined and 5½ for concentrated. After that it was advanced to 7½ cents a pound for refined and 6½ for concentrated. Prices were again advanced to 7¾ for concentrated and 7¾ for refined. They afterward were further advanced to 7 to 7½ (sic) for concentrated and 8 to 8½ for refined. They now (February 18) stand at 7¾ and 8 cents for concentrated and 8½ to 8¾ for refined. Those interested are confidently looking forward to a 9-cent market quantities, an advance to this point being permitted by the duty of 5 cents per pound upon boracic acid for the Mediterranean. The cost of putting up stock in packages for family trade is placed at 3 cents per pound, and this has been selling to jobbers at 10½ to 12½ cents, as to brand, for what is termed ordinary goods, but a higher range will probably now be established.

There was imported last year $439 worth of borax, on which a duty of 5 cents per pound was equal to 42½ per cent. As the value of this borax was more than 11 cents a pound, duty excluded, there seems to be room for further advances in addition to the four made by the ring in two months. There is room on the free-list for borax.

If this combination has not had the effect of putting up the price from 5½ to 8 cents, gentlemen who know all about it can explain. I say it has.

Mr. FELTON. There is much truth in what has been read by the gentleman from Maryland, that I do not deny; but if the gentleman will look into the history of the production of this article in this country he will know that before the tariff was put on it, which only enabled the article to be produced here, the lowest price it ever was sold for was 28 cents a pound—a striking exemplification of the doctrine as laid down by Mr. Hamilton, and which has proved to be universally true: if you protect an industry only fairly the inevitable result will be a competition severe enough to prevent monopoly and bring down prices to consumers.

Now, borax is produced in this country under adverse circumstances. In the alkali plains under various disagreeable and expensive surroundings, with a large amount to be paid for transportation, by reason of their peculiar location, I do not believe they can profitably produce it to-day and sell it for 6 cents a pound. They are losing money. Three or four of the producers (and one of them the largest) of this article have gone to the wall by reason of the competition being so severe as to make its production unremunerative; hence the combine for raising the price. There is no doubt as to the fact that if these men could they would put the price on this product higher, because, as shown, the severe competition which they have and are enduring will not permit them to carry on their business at present prices.

Now, put borax on the free-list and you then will see what will have to be paid for it without the home competition, as, I am informed and believe, most of the product abroad is controlled by one man.

I do not wish to say more or to farther supplement what has been said by my colleagues.

Mr. RAYNER. Does the gentleman say boracic acid is controlled by one man?

Mr. FELTON. I am talking about what I understand. I am talking about borax and not about boracic acid.

Mr. VANDEVER. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that before the duty was imposed on this article the price ran up as high as 35 cents a pound. When the duty was levied there was a combination by foreign producers of borax to precipitate it on the market and run the price down, and it was run down to 6 cents. This low price produced the change designed. It broke up a number of American producers.

It is an industry now struggling for existence, and I know no industry in this broad land which appeals to Congress more strongly than this industry, which now suffers severe competition with the foreign product. I can not better conclude than by calling attention to the following letter from General Rosecrans:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, REGISTER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 14, 1888.

MY DEAR SIR: I see that the committee's tariff bill proposes to put all borax products on the free-list. It involves no great sum of money, and I believe that if the committee had been as familiar with the subject as circumstances have compelled me to be, they would have refrained from putting these products on the free-list.

The production of borax from the desert alkali lands of California, Nevada, and Colorado has become quite an industry, and employs a good many people, scattered all over the country. Only in the new States and Territories, however, can the raw material be found. It seems desirable, therefore, to show as much favor as possible to this industry. It is especially incumbent upon the Democratic party.

But that is the least of the reasons why the business should not be meddled with. The history of the importation of borax into the United States, and of the various tariffs thereon, shows that legislation in favor of a single person or single house has been the constant rule since 1842, or at the latest since 1845. I had occasion to thoroughly examine and verify the accuracy of this statement, and in 1882 I earnestly urged on the members of the House Committee on Ways and Means whose attention I could get at least to do something for our own home industries, instead of building up the wealthy monopoly to which I have alluded, and which slyly procured legislation in its favor all these past years. This combination had placed and kept boracic acid on the free-list, until in 1882, when the tariff discussion revealed the game, and then only the inadequate tariff of 4 cents was imposed. The last change procured was to have boracic acid put on the free-list.

* * * * * * *

We had no relief until our borax producers began to compete with them. If this combination be permitted to do as it has been doing in the past since the tariff of 1882 it will destroy competition, and then go back to its old ways, our own producers will be ruined, and our consumers will then be worse off than under the present tariff.

* * * * * * *

W. S. ROSECRANS.

Mr. MORROW. If necessary, Mr. Chairman, I will offer a formal amendment. The discovery of borax was first made in California in the year 1856. There was no production, however, of any consequence until the year 1865, when a few hundred tons were placed on the market at about 25 cents per pound in San Francisco. At that time and for forty years previous an importing firm in New York, representing a prominent English house, controlled the market of this country, receiving the supply either as refined borax or boracic acid, the latter being the essential ingredient in the borax of commerce.

It was not until 1872 that the production of borax on the Pacific coast was of sufficient magnitude to exert any influence upon the price in this country. Prior to that time the article ruled from 28 to 50 cents per pound. The production was about 1,000 tons in 1873 from the States of California and Nevada. The tariff at that time was more than it is now, and encouraged our people who were engaged in exploring for mines and minerals to search for borax deposits.

In 1872 some important borax fields were discovered in the desert regions of California and Nevada from which borax was taken in considerable quantities. The result was, as I have just stated, that a large amount was placed on the market in 1873. This domestic product induced the foreign importer to come to Congress for a reduction of the tariff, in which he was successful; and in 1874 borate of lime, crude borax, and boracic acid were placed on the free-list. The effect of the removal of the duty was to discourage the producers, and the industry was accordingly restricted.

It would probably have been abandoned had it not been that in 1883 the matter was fully considered by Congress and the protective duty partially restored, as we find it in the present tariff. The act of 1883 again gave encouragement to the producers, and the product has increased until some 5,000 tons of borax were placed on the market in 1887, and the price last year in San Francisco for concentrated borax, a commercial grade, was less than 7 cents per pound, or a reduction of 28 cents from 35 cents per pound when the domestic article entered the market in 1872.

But it must be remembered that at the time when the tariff of 1883 went into effect the importer holding a monopoly of the foreign product imported an immense quantity of boracic acid. I believe the amount was 4,178,737 pounds, as I find it reported. This large importation was in anticipation of the action of Congress in placing borax on the dutiable list, and the effect has been such that the market has been carrying a large surplus ever since, or until quite recently. The domestic producer has been suffering from this unfortunate competition, designed as a means to secure his utter destruction.

For the forty years prior to 1872, when the borax market was entirely in the hands of a foreign monopoly, the American consumers were never able to buy a pound of borax for less than 28 cents. The lessees of the Duke de Lardrell, controlling the great Tuscany product, were able to fix the price to suit themselves. Boracic acid is nowhere found in a pure state in any quantity except at the boracic springs in Tuscany, owned by the titled gentleman just named.

It is, however, manufactured from borate of lime, found in many parts of the world, but especially in Asia Minor, where there is a deposit covering some 13,000 acres, or 20 square miles, and of remarkable richness. It is well known that boracic acid produced at the springs in Tuscany and the borate of lime in Turkey are the result of very cheap labor.

Formerly this article of boracic acid was admitted free of duty under the mistaken notion that it was a crude or unmanufactured product, and refined borax was taxed 10 cents per pound. Now, while it is true that boracic acid is converted by a chemical process into refined borax, it is by no means a crude article. It is in fact the product of labor, and cheap labor at that. With boracic acid on the free-list the foreign importer will control the market more effectually than he could in an even competition with crude borax. There is no boracic acid produced in this country.

We find the crude borax in the ground, and, as stated by my colleague [Mr. FELTON], its production is at a considerable disadvantage for the reason that it is found largely in the desert regions. It requires expensive transportation to get it to market, and while perhaps that is not a sufficient reason for a protective duty, it is still an incident in the cost of production. The principal reason for retaining the present tariff is that it is the product of our own well-paid labor, that must find other employment if borax is placed on the free-list.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORROW. The real ground upon which this tariff should be continued, and why boracic acid and borax should not go upon the free-list, is the fact that we are employing the labor of this country at an advanced rate. We are paying more for our labor than is paid in Italy, Turkey, or elsewhere, and for that reason alone we think the industry is entitled to a continuation of the present rate of duty.

Incidentally there is another feature of this industry which I presume the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], who sits before me, knows something about, and that is, in one place at least, where this substance is found the producers employ the Indians in the borax fields. The employment of the Indians there has relieved the Government from maintaining that particular tribe or band of Indians, which would probably be required if the Indians had not this opportunity for employment. Now, if you will destroy this industry you must provide for the support of these Indians at the Walker River Indian reservation in Nevada. Therefore, as a matter of economy in this direction, it would be well to encourage the industry, in order that the Indians may have suitable employment.

The shadow of this bill, the prospect of its becoming a law, and the removal of the duty on borax, have already had a disastrous effect upon the borax industry in the United States; in one case at least it has contributed to the suspension of a large house in San Francisco, and threatens to destroy the business altogether in this country.

Mr. RAYNER. What were our importations last year?

Mr. MORROW. I believe I have not the figures at hand, but they were not very large, because, as I have said, in 1883 over 4,000,000 pounds of boracic acid was imported in advance of the tariff going into effect, in order that the importer might have the advantage of the raise in the market, and that has affected the American market until quite recently. But it is very likely that the gentleman will find in the schedule which he holds in his hand a report showing the amount of the importation of borax and boracic acid up to the present time. It is probable that the importation of boracic acid will be continued in competition with domestic borax, unless Congress is prepared to place still higher duties upon the acid and encourage the further development of the mineral resources of the United States in the article of borax.

Mr. Chairman, there is another feature to which I wish to call attention. The borax fields are located on lands designated in our land laws as "mineral lands," and the people who have taken up these fields have done so in good faith, supposing that the industry had the friendship of the Government. They have gone on and expended their money, paying $2.50 an acre for the land; and the borax being a scattered product, they have found it necessary to take up quite a large quantity of land otherwise worthless, for which they have paid the price for mineral land. Now, having made these purchases, I submit they had the right to suppose that the law would not be changed so as to destroy the value of their lands.

It can not be too emphatically stated that the price of borax in all the markets of this country has been lower under the tariff of 1883 than was ever known before; that the supply has been constantly increasing and is now equal to the demand, thus insuring moderate prices to the consumer for many years to come, unless adverse legislation should cripple this new and important industry. Many an industry in this country has been warmed into life and built up by the fostering care of the Government until it has attained strength and vigor to compete successfully with competition from any and every quarter, and has thus been the means of adding largely to the wealth of the country and the happiness of its people.

When these borax producers shall have better and cheaper facilities by means of rail and other modes of conveyance to our leading marts, and are compelled to give all or nearly all of the output of their fields in exchange for freights, hauling by teams, and expensive supplies, it may then do possibly to talk of placing our borax deposits on an equal footing with those worked by insufficiently paid labor, whether in Italy, Turkey, or elsewhere.

The supply of borax materials, whether of boracic acid, borate of soda, borate of lime or tincal, outside of the United States lie almost wholly in the semi-civilized nations, none being found in any country of Europe, except Italy; consequently, in the working of these deposits, we are brought in direct competition with the laborer of those countries, whose position is often little better than a serf. The working of our deposits where the grade of the material is low, compared with those of Asia Minor and elsewhere, requires skilled and intelligent men and the application of any new developments in science, no matter how expensive. To place our laborers by legislation in competition with the teeming hordes of Asia is not wise statesmanship. In my judgment there is not a single article upon the tariff-list to-day that so well justifies the tariff duty as these particular articles of boracic acid, refined borax, and crude borax.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the formal amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the question will be put on the motion to strike out line 75 of the bill.

The question was put; and the Chair being in doubt, a division was called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 62.

Mr. MCKENNA. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKENNA] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN.]

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 80.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Copper, sulphate of, or blue vitriol.
Iron, sulphate of, or copperas.
Potash, crude, carbonate of, or fused and caustic potash.
Chlorate of potash and nitrate of potash, or saltpeter crude.
Sulphate of potash.
Sulphate of soda, known as salt-cake, crude or refined, or niter-cake, crude or refined, and Glauber's salt.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I offer the following amendment:

Page 4, line 84, insert "nitrite of soda."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the words "nitrite of soda" insert "hyperoxide of lead."

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have no remarks to make further than this: The article is not manufactured in this country, and it is very material to the dyeing industry and all that class of work.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out——

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If the gentleman states the article is not made in this country and offers it upon his own responsibility I have no objection to it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I simply say that if it is manufactured it must certainly be in very small quantities. It is a very material product.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to give the subject more careful examination. It has never been brought before the committee. If the gentleman had brought it before the committee we would have looked into it with a great deal of interest and care, and under these conditions we would undoubtedly have accepted it. I would like to have an opportunity to look into the matter. I think the better course is to pass it for the present.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will state to the gentleman from Arkansas, to refresh his memory, that I did call his attention to it once before.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I do not question the statement of the gentleman, but the incident, if it occurred, has passed out of my mind.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I merely mention it to refresh the gentleman's recollection.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I want to state in this connection that none of the provisions in this chemical schedule have been agreed upon until after very careful conference with manufacturing chemists. No gentleman on this floor on either side will pretend for a moment to be thoroughly and practically acquainted with the details of this schedule. It is the most difficult of all the schedules in the tariff list. I have not myself—and I think this has been the experience of every member of the committee—ventured to take any step until after careful conference with experts. I do not like to depart from that rule. As long as we stand where we now stand I feel that our position is safe on this list.

Mr. NUTTING. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. NUTTING. I see you have just passed line 78, in which I find the words "caustic potash." I want to know whether that would include soda ash?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It would not. We refused to put soda ash on the free-list, although a very necessary article, very important in many of the industries. We found soda ash in this country was now being largely produced. There is a large amount of capital invested in it. It has only been produced with any degree of profit in the last five or six years. The rate of duty now is small. The ad valorem equivalent is about 23 per cent. We consider that, in the first place, it could not now stand being put on the free-list; and, in the second place, as a young industry with very large interests, it was too quick and rash a step to take with reference to it.

Mr. NUTTING. The gentleman and I think exactly alike. The only fear I had was that this word might be held to include soda-ash. There are two sorts of soda-ash.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I understand the gentleman's point. The question has been gone over very thoroughly, and we are satisfied that it does not include that article.

Mr. NUTTING. Very well. All I desire is that it shall not include soda-ash or caustic soda made from soda-ash.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally to receive a message from the Senate, and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3133) providing for a bust of the late Chief-Justice, Morrison Remick Waite, to be placed in the room of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Joint resolution (S. R. 90) granting leave of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 9345) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; and

A bill (H. R. 10233) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

TARIFF.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out lines 83 and 84.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We have passed from those lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The lines were read, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] rose at the same time to address the Chair, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Tennessee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, who rose to move to strike out these lines, was not then recognized, so the Chair will recognize him now to make the motion.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I make that motion. I listened to what the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] said about getting information in regard to the schedule of drugs and chemicals. If I had been consulted by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means I could have advised them where to get information upon that subject. The manufacture of drugs and chemicals has been carried on very largely for very many years in the locality which I represent, and the perfection that has been attained there in the manufacture of such articles is very great. I have moved to strike out these lines because very large amounts of money have been invested in those industries and the existing tariff simply enables the manufacturers to carry on the industries.

In almost every instance the articles have been reduced to the lowest point of cost. They are in competition with the foreign articles of the same kind, and there can be no one seeking the placing of these articles upon the free-list except the importers. I do not know whether or not the Committee on Ways and Means has consulted with those who are interested in the American manufacture of drugs and chemicals, but I do know, and I say it because I can not be contradicted, that within the limits of the city in which I live these manufactures have been very extensive and very successful for many years past in all cases where there has been tariff enough to protect them against foreign competition.

In regard to the particular articles under consideration, I will say that those industries have been cherished there not very long, but very carefully, and at very great outlay. They are articles which are in common use, and the consumer gets them at very low prices indeed. Now, I contend that it is not right to put upon the free-list articles which we can manufacture and do manufacture in this country under such conditions, and I do hope that the committee will strike out these lines. If any of the gentlemen of the committee desiring information on this general subject had let me know, I could have put them in communication with people who are entirely familiar with the whole range of these subjects, the people who have built up the manufacturing establishments, who know the cost of manufacturing, the effect of a fair duty upon the business, and the disastrous effects which would result upon putting such articles on the free-list.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, and the Chair declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 66.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will designate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 68.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I think I must raise the question of "no quorum." I do not do this for the purpose of breaking up this afternoon's session, which must at all events close in a very few minutes, but my colleague [Mr. KELLEY], who has left the Hall, would, I think, like to be heard on that question, and I do not wish the matter to be passed without his having such an opportunity.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us have the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is the taking of the vote on this question. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Upon consultation with gentlemen here I have decided to withdraw the point of "no quorum."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" being withdrawn, the amendment is rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sulphur, refined, in rolls.
Wood-tar.
Coal-tar, crude.

Mr. FORAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole recur to line 77, to which I wish to offer an amendment. A gentleman came to my desk and asked a question at the moment the Clerk was reading that line, hence my attention was momentarily diverted.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have declined similar requests so often that I do not see how I can assent in this case, though I very much dislike to be unable to oblige my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FORAN. I would not make this request but for the fact, as I have said, that a gentleman came to my desk and was asking me a question while the Clerk read the line. I think, under the circumstances, the gentleman from Tennessee ought not to offer objection to my request.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, objection is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Aniline oil and its homologues.

Mr. FORAN. Mr. Chairman, is objection made to my request?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have declined to accede to every similar request.

Mr. FORAN. It was through no negligence on my part that I lost the opportunity to offer the amendment when the line was read.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand that.

Mr. FORAN. Well, if there are to be no courtesies here—if there is to be an iron rule——

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would rather suffer an injury than have any gentleman suppose me capable of being discourteous. The gentleman can make his proposition, and if no one else objects, I shall not.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the amendment which the gentleman from Ohio desires to offer?

Mr. FORAN. I move to strike out line 77, which reads:

Iron, sulphate of, or copperas.

Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say on this question may be said in a very few words. The manufacture of this product in the United States amounts to 22,000,000 pounds or about 11,000 tons per annum, aggregating, at $7 a ton, $77,000. Of this amount of copperas 40 per cent. is made in my district. There are people in my district who are compelled to make this copperas. The State laws of Ohio, sections 6921 and 6924, imperatively compel the Rolling Mill Company of Cleveland, Ohio, to make copperas; in other words, that company, or any other manufacturing establishment, is by law prevented from allowing any refuse matter to run into any stream, creek, or river.

Copperas is made from sulphuric acid. When the law to which I have referred was passed, the Cleveland Rolling Mill Company designed to transport its sulphuric acid into a field somewhere, and in that way comply with the law. Thereupon, some of the employés of the company said, "If you give us this sulphuric acid, we will utilize it;" and it was given to them. About seventy-five men are employed in making this copperas. The Cleveland Rolling Mill Company has no interest in the plant, and does not own a pound of the product. It is made by these sixty or seventy men.

Now, the duty on copperas is $2 a ton. It can be landed on our seaboard at $5 per ton. It can be made by our people for $7 a ton at the works. The duty yielded only $240 last year. If you take off this duty you do not affect the Cleveland Rolling Mill Company, but you do affect these sixty or seventy workingmen employed in this industry, because the Cleveland Rolling Mill will be compelled to make this copperas; they must do it; and if they can not compete with the foreign manufacture the difference comes off the laborer, and will amount to 50 cents a day.

There being only $77,000 worth of this product made in this country, it being all made by laboring men, the product being theirs, the margin being theirs, the profit being theirs, and as the removal of the duty would affect nobody and injure nobody except these workingmen who are now making this copperas, I submit in all candor and sincerity that my amendment ought to be agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. FORAN's amendment.

Mr. FORAN asked for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 53.

Mr. FORAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. FORAN as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 60.

Mr. FORAN. No quorum.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the tariff bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, the amendments of the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill were ordered to be numbered, printed, and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

At 5 o'clock p. m., in pursuance of previous order, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 15, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Calendar the bill (S. 1931) to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices in San Francisco, Cal., and put it upon its passage.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Regular order.

Mr. MORROW. I hope the gentleman will permit this bill to be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order cuts off all requests for unanimous consent.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1233) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and, with the bill, ordered to be printed and numbered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8989) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the bill, ordered to be printed and numbered.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill and joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles; which were read twice and referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 3133) providing for a bust of the late Chief-Justice Morrison Remick Waite, to be placed in the Supreme Court room of the United States—to the Committee on the Library; and Joint resolution (S. R. 90) granting leaves of absence to certain persons employed in the service of the United States—to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution and bill of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

Joint resolution (S. 42) extending the provisions of an act entitled "An act relating to arrears of taxes in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1887; and

A bill (S. 1507) providing an additional associate justice for the Territory of Utah, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, the regular order is the call of committees for reports on bills of a private nature.

Mr. LANHAM. I move to dispense with that call, and accompanying the motion, I ask unanimous consent that members having reports to make from committees be allowed to file them at the desk.

Mr. PETERS. I think we had better have the regular order, as the call of committees will not take long, and saves confusion.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I submit the motion to dispense with the call of committees.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE TENNESSEE RIVER, KNOXVILLE.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUK. Some days ago, in my absence, a bill was returned from the Senate with certain amendments which were non-concurred in. I entered a motion to reconsider that non-concurrence. I now move to reconsider the action of the House so taken, with a view to concurrence in the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7783) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River at or near Knoxville, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the House non-concurred in the Senate amendments. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to reconsider that action with a view to concurring.

The Clerk had better report the Senate amendments.

The amendments were read at length.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was adopted.

Mr. HOUK. I now move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUK moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIMS FOR EXTRA BOUNTY.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10521) providing for an extension of time for filing claims for extra bounty, and the payment thereof, under the act of July 28, 1866, providing for the payment of additional bounty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House dispense with the consideration of private business for to-day and resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

The SPEAKER. But one motion can be entertained at a time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well. If the House shall dispense with the private business for to-day, it is my purpose to ask consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Is the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider business on the Private Calendar not first in order?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois is first in order; otherwise the House could never dispense with private business by a direct vote.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope the House will not dispense with the Private Calendar for to-day.

Mr. RYAN. Does that require a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. It does not, but a majority only. Formerly the rule required a two-thirds vote, but that was changed by the Forty-ninth Congress.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, the House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 50.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that no quorum has voted, merely for the sake of having tellers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. LANHAM were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 67.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The attendance is so thin this morning that I must insist, for the present, at least, on the point of no quorum, in order to test the sense of the House, which can be done readily by waiting for a few minutes until other members are in their seats.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will retain their places.

REPRINT OF BILLS.

Pending the count by tellers,

On motion of Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to have reprinted bills of the following titles, namely:

A bill (S. 905) to incorporate the District of Columbia Suburban Railway Company; and

A bill (S. 2252) to incorporate the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company.

REFERENCE OF PRIVATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of members of the House to the fact that twenty-two private bills have been placed in the petition-box, under the rule of the House, without the name of any member upon them and without any indorsement indicating the committee to which they should go. The Clerk is of course unable to make any disposition of them. Gentlemen who have introduced bills can examine them at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RANDALL. If they are not identified and referred, no action can be taken upon them.

The SPEAKER. Nothing whatever can be done with them.

Mr. BREWER. I will suggest that the titles be printed in the RECORD, so that gentlemen can see what the bills are.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the titles of these bills will be printed in the RECORD to-morrow morning, so that members can see what the bills are.

They are as follows:

A bill for the relief of Nathaniel K. Sawyer, deceased;

A bill for the removal of charge of desertion from record of John Ryan, Company H, Fortieth New York Volunteers;

A bill granting to the Montezuma Canal Company the privilege of constructing a reservoir on certain public lands in Arizona, and for other purposes;

A bill granting an increase of pension to Charles N. Lapham;

A bill to place the name of Edwin L. Drake on the pension-roll;

A bill granting a pension to Rose Goodwill, mother of Alexander Goodwill, Company G, Eighteenth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry;

A bill granting a pension to Susan West, widow of Michael C. West, Company D, Eightieth Regiment Ohio Volunteers;

A bill granting a pension to Nancy Hamilton;

A bill granting an increase of pension to Andrew Casey;

A bill for the relief of T. F. Riley;

A bill for the relief of Frederick Ford;

A bill for the relief of Willis N. Arnold;

A bill granting a pension to Carolina Thompson;

A bill granting a pension to Frederick P. Hardy;

A bill granting a pension to Martin Haas;

A bill granting a pension to Augustus G. Wyeth;

A bill granting a pension to James M. Page;

A bill granting a pension to William B. Bishop;

A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to Anson Rudd, of the State of Colorado, certain real estate in the county of Fremont, in said State;

A bill granting a pension to Christian Kembeck;

A bill granting a pension to Thomas B. Arnold;

A bill for the relief of the heirs of Myra Clark Gaines; and

A bill for the relief of Napoleon B. Giddings.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places and continue the count.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In order that we may have time for members to come in I shall be content if the yeas and nays are called.

The SPEAKER. If the yeas and nays are ordered and show no quorum present, and are entered on the Journal, it will break up the business for the day.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us go on with the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that by insisting upon the point of no quorum he is delaying the business of the House.

Mr. NELSON. I rise to ask a parliamentary question. Can we not by unanimous consent pass a few small local bills while this count is going on?

The SPEAKER. The House can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. NELSON. Up in my district they are very anxious to build a railroad through a little reservation 20 miles across. They are all ready to go to work. In view of that fact I now ask unanimous consent to consider the bill I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill now sent to the Clerk's desk. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have no objection to the reading of the bill; but consent is not given for the purpose of consideration.

Several MEMBERS demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and we will proceed with the count.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 72.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will not proceed any further in demanding a quorum, but give notice that to-morrow morning I shall call up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TAULBEE. Pending that I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the morning hour has not been dispensed with.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE. I now ask unanimous consent that members having reports to file may be permitted to hand them to the Clerk.

Mr. PETERS. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to present a memorial from the American Medical Association in connection with a resolution requesting certain action. I ask that it be printed.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, which prevents the Chair from entertaining requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. LANHAM. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar.

The question having been put, the Chair was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. LANHAM. I call for a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 63, noes 14.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The Clerk will report the first bill.

ELLEN P. MALLOY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6348) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen P. Malloy.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. Ellen P. Malloy, the sum of $700.

With the following amendment:

After the word "dollars" insert "in full for all demands against the United States."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LAWLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6348) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen P. Malloy, reported as follows:

This claim was presented to the Forty-ninth Congress, and a report was made in regard to it by the Committee on War Claims. As the examination by your committee has let them to the same results with those arrived at by the committee of the Forty-ninth Congress, they do not think it necessary to recapitulate the facts, but refer to that report, and herewith annex a copy for information.

Your committee adopt the said report as their own, and recommend that the bill referred to them do pass.

[House Report No. 3037, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being fully and clearly advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding of the facts under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1883.

Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims with the following findings of fact, filed June 7, 1886, which findings have been referred to the Committee on War Claims of the present Congress, to wit:

"In the Court of Claims. Congressional Case No. 108. Mrs. E. P. Malloy vs. The United States.

"FINDINGS OF FACT. FILED JUNE 7, 1886.

"The claim in the above-entitled suit having been transmitted to this court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, on the 22d day of May, 1884, and the Attorney-General having appeared for the defendants, and the suit having been brought to a hearing on the 22d day of April, 1886, the court, upon the proofs and evidence, and after hearing Gilbert Moyers, esq., of counsel for the claimant, and H. J. May, esq., of counsel for the defendants, finds the following facts:

"I.

"On the 12th November, 1864, the military authorities in Memphis, Tenn., took possession of the dwelling-house in that city known as No. 65 Union street, the separate estate and property of the claimant. The house was used and occupied as a portion of the military headquarters in that city for upwards of seven months. The fair and reasonable rent of such a house for the period named was $100 per month, amounting in the aggregate to $700, which has never been paid to the claimant.

"II.

"At the time the military authorities took possession of the said house, as set forth in the preceding finding, it contained the furniture of a private residence. A bureau of the quartermaster's department in Memphis, termed the rental office, at the time of occupancy took a full inventory, with apparently great particularity and care, of every article of furniture in the house. The said inventory contained upward of sixty entries and enumerated several hundred items. It was duly returned by the officer of the rental office to Col. R. E. Cleary, deputy quartermaster-general at Memphis, and was filed in his office. Of the furniture so inventoried a large part was removed by the quartermaster's department from the house, and articles of the value of $1,200 were never returned to the claimant, nor has she been compensated for them.

"III.

"So much of the claim as relates to the furniture was submitted to the Quartermaster-General, but was not paid.

"By the Court.

"A true transcript of record.

"Test: This 8th day of June, A. D. 1886.

"[SEAL.] JOHN RANDOLPH,

"Assistant Clerk Court of Claims."

Your committee therefore report a bill herewith providing for the payment of the amount found by said court for rent of said property, amounting to $700, and recommend that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], which will be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Insert after the word "dollars," in the sixth line of the bill, the following: "in full for all demands against the Government of the United States."

Mr. SPRINGER. That amendment was for the purpose of concluding legislation regarding this case. This claim arose during the war. After the capture of Memphis, the Government occupied a private residence there for military headquarters. An inventory of the furniture in the building was made—no receipt was given, but simply an inventory. It is alleged by the claimant that $1,200 worth of the furniture was removed to some other place and never returned to the owner, and the amount provided for in this bill is intended as payment for that furniture.

The claim for the rent of the premises was rejected, or at least was not passed upon favorably by the Court of Claims. The only payment recommended by the Committee on War Claims is for the estimated value of the furniture which was not returned. My amendment provides that the appropriation in this bill shall be in full for all claims of this party against the Government, so that we may not have another bill brought in at the next session to pay for the claim for rent.

Mr. McMILLIN. If I remember the case correctly, the appropriation in this bill is for the rent, the remaining claim being for the furniture.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the bill be read again.

The bill was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill does not say for what the payment is to be made.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The report shows that it is for the rent.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The findings in the case explain that.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask to have again read that part of the report which embraces the finding showing what this amount covers.

The portion of the report indicated was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I see that I was wrong.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois has simply reversed the matter. The whole claim was made up of the elements which the gentleman has stated; but about $700 of the claim is for rent, and this is what this bill is intended to pay for. The occupation is not disputed; the use of the property is not disputed; the value to the Government is not disputed; the title to the property is not disputed; and I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. The rest of the claim being regarded as spoliation, for which the Government was not responsible.

Mr. McMILLIN. The question of spoliation was not adjudicated. The balance is not spoliation. It is not claimed that the furniture was not taken and used by the Government. It certainly was used by the Government. What use it was put to afterwards, or what became of it, does not appear from the report, but even that was not ordinary spoliation. The Government ought to pay this claim.

Mr. SPRINGER. My amendment simply provides that this shall be in full for all demands of this claimant against the Government for any account whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. McMILLIN, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there are on the Calendar two bills of the same title as that just acted on for the relief of Ellen P. Malloy. If there be no objection, the bill which came over from the Forty-ninth Congress will be laid on the table. The Chair hears no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that members be permitted to call up cases out of their regular order on the Calendar. So many members are absent and the attendance here is so small that it is evident that if a bill be objected to, the point of "no quorum" will defeat it, while by taking the other course we can dispose of a good many bills to which there is no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER]?

Mr. McMILLIN. I think we had better take the regular order.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask unanimous consent that bills be called in their regular order upon the Calendar, but that when a bill is called, unless some member asks for its consideration, it be passed over, not losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. WARNER. I trust that suggestion will be acceded to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]?

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I want to make a suggestion with regard to this matter, which it seems to me the House ought to regard. There are only two more cases on the Calendar that have come over from the Forty-ninth Congress; they are cases that have been considered by the Forty-ninth Congress and by the Court of Claims and by the committees of this House, and what I suggest is that the House first dispose of those first two cases.

Mr. BRUMM. Do I understand that the gentleman proposes to call up bills out of their regular order? Because I shall object to anything of that kind.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that order will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition again, so that the Committee of the Whole may understand it. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] asks unanimous consent that the bills on the Private Calendar be called in regular order by title, and that when any bill is reached, if its consideration be not asked by some member of the committee, it shall be passed over. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Let it be understood that bills passed over shall retain their place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be understood as a part of the proposition.

Mr. OATES. If the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana goes only to the extent of proposing that when a bill is reached it may be passed over without losing its place on the Calendar, unless some member calls for its consideration, I have no objection; but if there are other conditions coupled with the proposition, I do object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to add as a modification of the proposition that when any member has called for the consideration of one bill, he shall not be entitled to make a similar request in regard to any other bill until all other members of the Committee of the Whole have had an opportunity to have their bills considered.

Mr. OATES. I must object to that proposition as unfair, because its effect would be to change the order of bills on the Calendar. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Does the gentleman from Alabama demand the regular order as against the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM]?

Mr. OATES. I think we are consuming time unnecessarily in these attempts to agree upon something else than the regular order of proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama object to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. OATES. I do not see any necessity for it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. COMPTON. I rise to a point of order. My recollection is that on the last day when we had private bills under consideration preference was given to bills which had the indorsement of the Court of Claims, and we proceeded in that order.

Mr. LANHAM. There are only two of those bills now on the Calendar. I hope we shall proceed in regular order until we get through with those cases reported from the Court of Claims and coming over from the last Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. OATES. I have no objection to the proposition that when a bill is reached in its regular order it shall not be considered unless some member calls for its consideration; but if amendments are to be made to that proposition, I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the gentleman wish to be understood as objecting to the proposition that the right of calling for the consideration of a bill shall not be exercised more than once by any member until every other member of the Committee of the Whole has had the same opportunity?

Mr. OATES. That would not operate fairly, as it would practically change the order of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana. It is a request for unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar be called in their order; and that when any bill is reached, if no member asks for its consideration, it shall be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now, I give notice that I shall object to any member calling up more than one bill until every other member of the Committee of the Whole has had an opportunity to call up a bill.

PEREZ DICKINSON.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9872, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, surviving partner of Cowan & Dickinson.

Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. HOUK asked for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Inasmuch as there is on the Speaker's table a Senate bill similar in purport to this House bill, and appropriating, as I am informed, the same amount, I ask consent that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the one of which the title has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that will be done. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will read the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 94) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, surviving partner of the late firm of Cowan & Dickinson.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Perez Dickinson, surviving partner of the late firm of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, Tenn., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $96,192, being the amount found due him by the Court of Claims for 256 bales of cotton taken by General Burnside and used in the construction of fortifications about Knoxville, in November, 1863.

The report (by Mr. STONE, of Kentucky) accompanying the House bill was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6346) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, surviving partner of Cowan & Dickinson, report as follows:

The Committee on War Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress, not being fully and clearly advised of all the facts in the case, referred it to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, known as the "Bowman act."

Said claim has been returned by said Court of Claims with the following findings of facts, to wit:

In the Court of Claims. Congressional case No. 357. Perez Dickinson, surviving partner of Cowan & Dickinson, vs. The United States.

FINDING OF FACTS. FILED APRIL 5, 1886.

This case, involving a "claim for supplies or stores taken or furnished to the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion," was referred to this court March 3, 1885, by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, under the provisions of the Bowman act (22 Stat., 485).

QUESTION OF LOYALTY.

The court, on a preliminary inquiry (both parties being represented by counsel), found from the evidence that the claimant and his deceased partner were loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

FINDINGS OF FACTS.

Subsequently, the case having been heard upon its merits, the Attorney-General, by his assistants, appearing "for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States," the court, from the evidence, finds the facts to be as follows:

I.

The claimant and his deceased partner, James H. Cowan, resided during the war in Knoxville, Tenn., and carried on a large business as merchants under the firm name of Cowan & Dickinson.

II.

About the 1st of September, 1863, Knoxville was occupied by United States forces under the command of Maj. Gen. A. E. Burnside.

In November following a Confederate army under the command of General Longstreet was on a march to attack it.

A large amount of military stores had in the mean while been deposited there, but no sufficient fortifications had as yet been constructed.

In this emergency General Burnside took from the warehouse of the claimants 256 bales of cotton belonging to the claimants to be used in works of defense. He delivered to James Cowan, one of the members of said firm, the following receipt:

"Received, Knoxville, Tenn., November 25, 1863, of James H. Cowan, 256 bales of cotton, for use on fortifications, the correctness of the above estimate of number of bales subject to the approval of Brig. Gen. S. P. Carter and Capt. ——— ———, provost-marshal, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps.

"A. E. BURNSIDE,
"Major-General, Commanding."

OFFICE OF PROVOST-MARSHAL-GENERAL OF EAST TENNESSEE,
Knoxville, December 19, 1864.

The within receipt of Major-General Burnside, given in the name of "James H. Cowan," is understood to be for cotton taken in November, 1863, from the firm of "Cowan & Dickinson," of this place, and is approved.

S. P. CARTER,
Brigadier-General and Provost-Marshal-General of East Tennessee.

He also took for the same purpose from other citizens small amounts of cotton, making in all about 57 bales.

III.

The cotton so taken was effectively used for the defense of the city.

After the repulse of the enemy the claimants applied to General Schofield, who had succeeded General Burnside in command, for the return of their cotton. But instead of returning it, it was disposed of, as appears in Finding IV, under the following order:

[Special Order No. 57.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
Knoxville, February 26, 1864.

5. * * * The chief quartermaster of this department will proceed to collect all cotton that has been used in the construction of the fortification and for other purposes in the vicinity of Knoxville, not absolutely necessary for the public service, and ship the same to Louisville, to be turned over to the chief quartermaster there, to be disposed of for the benefit of the Government, according to existing regulations. He will also take the necessary steps to ascertain the parties to whom such cotton may have belonged, the amount taken from each party, their loyalty, and give proper vouchers therefor, according to the loyalty of each.

Brigadier-General Tillson will render such assistance as may be in his power to the chief quartermaster, to enable him to carry out this order.

By command of General Schofield.

HENRY CUSTISS,
A. A. G.

Capt. J. H. DICKISON,
Chief Quartermaster, Department of the Ohio.

At the same time, and in pursuance of said order, a military commission was organized, with General John Williams president and Capt. N. G. Franklin recorder, to ascertain the ownership of the cotton and the loyalty of the claimants. After hearing, the commission made the following report:

"The military commission on claims, to whom the claims for cotton taken for the use of the fortifications of Knoxville, Tenn., were referred, respectfully report that they have examined the account of Cowan & Dickinson for cotton thus taken; that they are satisfied that the number of bales as specified (256) were taken from them. The average marketable weight of same was 501 pounds; that James H. Cowan and Perez Dickinson, composing the firm of Cowan & Dickinson, always have been, and are, consistent and strictly loyal citizens of the United States Government; that the said Cowan & Dickinson are entitled to payment for the cotton thus taken from them.

"JOHN WILLIAMS,
"N. G. FRANKLIN,
"Captain and Recorder Claim Commission.

"Official:

"L. A. GRAUTZ,
"Major and A. A. A. General."

IV.

The cotton was taken by General Burnside November 25, 1863, but the order of General Schofield to gather it up from the fortifications was not issued until February 26, 1864. Nearly four months elapsed from the first taking before this order was fully executed. The waste in the meanwhile was found to be large. Of the 313 bales originally taken from all the citizens, only 218 bales were saved. What became of the 95 bales of deficiency does not definitely appear. Some had been taken by the soldiers to fill their bunks; some used to calk pontoons; some lost by pillage, and much worn out and used up in the work. Of the 218 bales recovered, 40 were used by the medical department, 158, stored by the quartermaster near the railroad depot awaiting shipment, were accidentally set on fire by boys playing in its vicinity, and all, with the exception of about 20 bales, consumed. Twenty bales were shipped to the chief quartermaster at Louisville. What became of the other 20 bales does not appear, nor does it appear from which one of the citizens the cotton lost, burned, sold, or used had been originally taken.

The two hundred and fifty-six bales of cotton furnished by or taken from the claimants were never returned to them, nor any part thereof; nor have they ever received any compensation therefor.

The bales would average 501 pounds each. The market value of the cotton at that time and place was 75 cents a pound, amounting to $96,192.

Test: This 6th day of April, A. D. 1886.

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

The committee report back the bill and recommend its passage with the following amendment: Strike out the word "Coman" wherever it appears in the bill and insert in lieu thereof "Cowan."

Mr. HOUK. I move that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Are there not amendments to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The report which has been read is the report accompanying the House bill, and the amendments proposed are to that bill, not to this Senate bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that I caught correctly the amount proposed to be appropriated by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the amount is $96,192.

Mr. BUCKALEW. From the reading of this report it seems to me that the questions of fact are not very definitely or clearly found. It does not appear what became of this cotton or of particular portions of it. It appears that a portion was burned by some accident in which some boys were concerned.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. It was burned in a warehouse in charge of the Government.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This case, so far as a portion of the cotton is concerned, appears to be very much like a case we had before the Committee of the Whole at a former stage of the session, in regard to cotton burned at Savannah——

Mr. HOUK. Mobile.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Or at Mobile, the cotton in that case having been burned by accidental fire while in the custody of the United States and before it could be shipped to New York, which I think was intended to be its destination, under the arrangements then made for the disposition of captured or abandoned cotton.

I do not wish to arrest the progress of the consideration of bills on the Calendar to-day, as I know there are a large number of claims which do not require prolonged debate, and which gentlemen are anxious to have passed. I think that under the circumstances this case ought to go over until we can have an opportunity to examine more carefully the matters of fact reported by the Court of Claims, and until the case can be considered in a full House.

Mr. HOUK. This case has been pending for over twenty years, passing one House and failing in the other. There never was a juster case, and I hope the gentleman will not object, but will allow it to be passed.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, I propose to consider bills and pass upon them on their merits, and to take no notice of any action of former Congresses in either branch. We know in the pressure of business a great many bills pass through with imperfect consideration and without adequate information as to their merits.

The point I present so far as a large portion of this cotton is concerned is, that it seems to be on the same footing exactly as the case presented by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER], as to the destruction of property in Mobile. If there can be a distinction made between that case and this it should be presented.

Mr. HOUK. There is a distinction, which I will present if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Certainly.

Mr. HOUK. It is in evidence that they went to this man and borrowed this cotton to make breastworks with, promising to return it; but they never did return it. It was receipted for, that it was taken for the purpose of constructing breastworks for the defense of Knoxville.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The commanding officer, according to the report in this case——

Mr. HOUK. The commanding officer gave a receipt for the cotton which was taken.

Mr. BUCKALEW. The commanding officer, according to the report in this case, took this property for military purposes, and gave a receipt to the owner that he had received it. That is the whole transaction. It does not show whether the Government should account for it or not, or whether the claimant was a loyal person or not, or what were the legal rights of the owner.

Mr. HOUK. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that there are many persons on this floor who will corroborate the truth of the testimony in this case that this man was a loyal man, as loyal as Abraham Lincoln himself.

Mr. BUCKALEW. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is nothing more than an ordinary case of an appropriation of property within the theater of war. Here were actual breastworks; the Confederate forces were advancing against Knoxville, and this cotton was taken and used for the purpose of military defense in time of war. The country where the cotton was taken was both in theory and fact a theater of war.

If we are to pay this claim we will pay for cotton incidentally destroyed when in possession of the United States authorities, and we will also pay for cotton used in actual conflict between the respective armies. If this bill should pass, both those propositions are involved, and as we are considering these bills by unanimous consent I shall insist that this bill shall go over for the present.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will allow me to make a statement I think he will withdraw his objection. It is not like any other case, and I believe the gentleman himself voted for it in the Forty-first Congress. The military authorities at Knoxville took this cotton for breastworks to be used in defense of that city. I was there myself. My command was outside and I was inside. As the report shows, they went to the owner of this cotton and asked that it should be given for the purpose of making breastworks, promising that it would be returned; but it was never returned to him. In fact, they did not return it to him, but shipped it North, saying to him that he would get the benefit of it. They did not return it to the owner, but shipped it, and some of it was destroyed.

In the Forty-first Congress the bill was passed by both Houses. The gentleman himself, according to my recollection, voted for it on the floor of the Senate. The last night of the session, when the bill was about being signed by the President, Secretary Fish, because of the matters growing out of the Geneva award, suggested to the President in my presence that he would rather the President would not sign it, as it would complicate matters. If it had not been for that suggestion on the part of the Secretary it would have become a law.

General Hurlbut came over to see me, and said there was a hitch about signing the bill, and I went over to the Senate with him. The President was familiar with the case. He knew Mr. Dickinson. He had staid in his house when in Knoxville. He wanted to sign the bill, but was persuaded not to do it because at the time, as Secretary Fish said, it might complicate matters in reference to English claims under the Geneva award. The Secretary said to the President, "I would rather you would not sign it." If it had not been for that suggestion it would have become a law in the Forty-first Congress.

If the gentleman will examine the record I think he will find that he himself voted for it.

Mr. SPINOLA. Read General Burnside's receipt.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the particular attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to this, as appears in the findings of the Court of Claims:

After the repulse of the enemy—

And I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will please give me his attention for a moment—

After the repulse of the enemy, the claimants applied to General Schofield, who had succeeded General Burnside in command, for the return of his cotton. But instead of returning it, it was disposed of as appears in Finding VI, under the following order:

"[Special Orders, No. 57.]

"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
"Knoxville, February 26, 1864.

"5. * * * The chief quartermaster of this department will proceed to collect all cotton that has been used in the construction of fortification and for other purposes in the vicinity of Knoxville not absolutely necessary for the public service, and ship the same to Louisville, to be turned over to the chief quartermaster, there to be disposed of for the benefit of the Government according to existing regulations.

"He will also take the necessary steps to ascertain the parties to whom such cotton may have belonged, the amount taken from each party, their loyalty, and give the proper vouchers therefor, according to the loyalty of each."

Now, that was done according to the order which I have quoted, and here is General Burnside's receipt:

Received, Knoxville, Tenn., November 25, 1863, of James H. Cowan, 256 bales of cotton, for use on fortifications, the correctness of the above estimate of number of bales subject to the approval of Brig. Gen. S. P. Carter and Capt. ——, ——, provost-marshal, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps.

A. E. BURNSIDE,
Major-General Commanding.

I tell my friend from Pennsylvania that this is not a similar case to that which he has mentioned. The cotton was taken from these parties, and they made application for its return in the manner stated and in accordance with the order quoted, but were told, "No; we will take it for the benefit of the Government, but will give you receipts, so that each man can come up hereafter and obtain what properly belongs to him under the Treasury regulations in force in regard to such matters."

Now, here is the finding of the Court of Claims, showing the number of bales of cotton belonging to the claimant in this case. I appeal, then, to my friend from Pennsylvania that after this long time these parties have been kept waiting, after this bill has been time and again passed by each House of Congress, and by both Houses in the Forty-first Congress, but failed to become a law for the reason that I have already stated, to let it go through and let these people have that which is so manifestly their own. As to loyalty, why, Mr. Chairman, Abraham Lincoln himself was no more loyal than this man Perez Dickinson. When Mr. Dickinson was taken before the Confederate court, and was asked the question, to disclose the amount of the indebtedness of his firm to the wholesale merchants in New York and Eastern cities, he absolutely refused, and said: "No, I will not give the information," and suffered banishment rather than disclose those to whom he was indebted, in order to save that indebtedness from confiscation. I hope, therefore, that my friend will not enter any objection now to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I wish to make response to what the gentleman from Tennessee has just said. I have no recollection of this bill having been pending in the Senate during my service in that branch of Congress. But I think the gentleman is mistaken in saying that I voted for any bill on this subject.

I beg leave also to reply to the gentleman from Tennessee upon another point. He has made reference to the Mobile case, which was debated at the present session. In that case the property was taken by the Government authorities and the owner demanded its return. The owner of the property went to General Canby and requested the return of the property, but got a similar answer to that given to the claimant in this case, namely, that the property would be shipped to New York City and disposed of there, and the rights of owners would be adjudicated by the Treasury Department, as was usual in such cases. This is plainly a like case.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I want to call attention to the distinction between the applicants in these cases. It is a well-known fact that there was scarcely a loyal man in the city of Mobile at that time.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I do not doubt the loyalty of the claimant in this case.

Mr. HOUK. Whereas in East Tennessee all people were loyal.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I accept without question the finding of the Court of Claims upon the question of loyalty.

Mr. MCMILLIN. As appears from the record which has been read here, in 1863 the forces of the United States operating in the vicinity of Knoxville, Tenn., had a large amount of military stores collected at that point. As is known historically, and as is stated in full in the report accompanying this bill and in the findings of the Court of Claims, the Confederate forces were approaching that city and there was imminent danger of the loss of all of the stores gathered there, as well as the loss of the city itself and the community to the Federal forces, which would have necessitated a retreat to a very considerable distance to find another point where another stand could be made and suitable defenses in the way of collecting stores, etc., provided. In that state of affairs—the rapid approach of the Confederates—the Federal authorities thought it necessary to fortify the city of Knoxville and protect the accumulated stores. Materials for fortifications were not of easy access or in such condition as could be quickly and properly utilized to meet the impending danger, and hence it became necessary to take possession of this cotton. The cotton was taken, was used in the construction of the fortifications, and, so far as we know from the history of the transaction, it did perform the office which the Government intended it should.

The stores of the Government were saved; its Army was saved; this post was saved; and after twenty-odd years, lying out of not only the original value of the property but the interest thereon, we are called on now to consider and determine the question, and the only question, whether the Government will return, not any interest upon the funds of which they have been deprived, but pay only the assessed value of the property itself.

It seems to me that the patriotism which, as is well known, characterized this man, Perez Dickinson—and let me say here that he is not a constituent of mine; I live a very great distance from him—I say, in view of that patriotism, by reason of which he was entirely willing that the Government should have the use of this property, which was promised to be returned to him, but which, when the danger was over and he made application for it, was refused him, there can be no just ground for refusing to pay him for the loss.

But instead of giving him the cotton, as demanded, the Government said, "We will keep the cotton; we will convert it to a different use from that originally intended;" and the Government kept it, and it was converted.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But for what?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will read the order under which it was done. Although this is reiteration, it is well for the facts in this case to be known, and I will be pardoned for reading what has been read by my colleague from Tennessee. Here is the receipt:

Received, Knoxville, Tenn., November 25, 1863, of James H. Cowan—

He was the partner of the claimant now living—

two hundred and fifty-six bales of cotton, for use on fortifications, the correctness of the above estimate of number of bales subject to the approval of Brig. Gen. S. P. Carter and Capt. —— ——, provost-marshal, Second Division, Ninth Army Corps.

A. E. BURNSIDE,
Major-General, Commanding.

Now, the finding of the court said: After the repulse of the enemy the claimants applied to General Schofield, who had succeeded General Burnside in command, for the return of their cotton; asking nothing for its use; asking no damage for wear and tear or for the detriment it might have suffered by exposure. Instead of returning it, it was disposed of, as appears in Finding IV, under the following order:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE OHIO,
Knoxville, February 26, 1864.

* * * The chief quartermaster of this department will proceed to collect all cotton that has been used in the construction of fortification, and for other purposes, in the vicinity of Knoxville, not absolutely necessary for the public service, and ship the same to Louisville, to be turned over to the chief quartermaster, there to be disposed of for the benefit of the Government, according to existing regulations. He will also take the necessary steps to ascertain the parties to whom such cotton may have belonged, the amount taken from each party, their loyalty, and give the proper vouchers therefor, according to the loyalty of each.

Brigadier-General Tillson will render such assistance as may be in his power to the chief quartermaster to enable him to carry out this order.

By command of Major-General Schofield.

HENRY CUSTISS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Capt. J. H. DICKISON,
Chief Quartermaster, Department of the Ohio.

Finding his loyalty unquestioned, the voucher was given to this party. Now, instead of returning this property to Messrs. Dickinson and Cowan, the Government kept it under this order, stated what it would do, and gave the voucher. The only question here is, whether under all the circumstances the Government can afford to refuse to pay the claim.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will you read the second voucher, the voucher given when the property was sold?

Mr. McMILLIN. I will read it. Do you want to ascertain as to the loyalty of these parties?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. No; I do not care about that. You have read a voucher that this cotton was taken and used for breastworks. I understand that. Now, if any subsequent voucher was given, I want to hear it.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not remember to have seen it.

Mr. BUTLER. There was an order by the quartermaster to give it.

Mr. McMILLIN. The receipt of the cotton by the Government is not denied. Its retention by the Government upon subsequent demand is not denied. Its use by the Army as a fortification is not denied. It performed a faithful service for the Government when so used. That is not denied. That this man ever got one dollar's worth, one pound, one ounce, or one fiber again is not claimed by any living man; not by any one. It was taken from him by force and kept. It does seem to me if there can be any state of facts that would make an obligation upon the Government to pay a citizen, such a case is presented here. The Government had more force than he had. His loyalty prevented him from complaining of anything the Government did. All he asked then was the return of his property when the Government no longer needed it for fortification. The Government failed to return it. All he asks now is, not the interest on his money, but the original price that he could have obtained for his cotton if it had not been taken or if it had been returned.

Can we afford to decline to pay under the circumstances? We represent sixty millions of as noble people as the sun shines on. If an individual had taken this cotton for his individual use and at the end of twenty-odd years had refused to pay one dollar for that which had saved his life and his property, what would mankind say of that individual? Can we afford to establish a system of morals for the citizen that is too rigorous for the Government? I hold we can not afford to fail to pay the citizen who is ready to sacrifice his life, his property, his all for the Government after his property has been taken and has saved the Government in its dire extremity.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, my main purpose in rising is to say something of the analogy, if any, between this case and the case that we had some time since with reference to cotton in the city of Mobile. I do not remember the name of the claimant in that case, but I remember taking part in the discussion. If I remember the substantial facts in that case, in the first place, Mr. Chairman, the cotton was in a city that was in the lines of the Confederacy. It was in a State that had seceded. This cotton was in a State that was not within the lines of the Confederacy and had not seceded. In the Alabama case—and I call this to the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW]—one of the points was that the owner of the cotton claimed to be a citizen of Great Britain. He had remained in the city of Mobile during those trying days. He took no part in the war, as the evidence shows, but he was speculating on the misfortunes of those among whom he then resided. The port was blockaded. He purchased cotton and stored it in a warehouse at Mobile, Ala. When General Canby took possession of Mobile all the commanding officer did with reference to that cotton was to station guards around the warehouse for its better protection and preservation. While all the guards were so stationed this claimant claimed the cotton, producing no papers, no evidence. Either that night or within a short time thereafter the ammunition from some cause was exploded and destroyed the warehouse and the cotton. That was the claim presented to the Government in the Mobile case. The difference, it seems to me, is very plain. In the present case we have a loyal citizen. The cotton was his property as much as if it had been a mule or a horse. It was taken by order of the commanding officer. It was used by order of that officer in building breastworks.

That it was taken from the owner there is no question, and I submit to my friend from Pennsylvania that in no court would it be required for him to do anything further. The cotton was beyond his control.

He was entitled to the value of the cotton when it was taken from him. They used this cotton in the breastworks. After the breastworks were abandoned the owner went to the commanding officer and asked for the return of his cotton, but instead of the cotton being returned an order was issued for the quartermaster to collect all of the cotton that had been taken from the parties and ship it to Louisville for the purpose of being sold, an account being kept of the owners and the value of the cotton. It further appears in this report that 40 bales of this cotton were used by the Government. For what purpose? For hospital purposes in the hospital at Knoxville, Tenn. That certainly could not have been returned to him. A portion of this cotton also, while it was in use by the Government, had been abstracted from the bales by the soldiers (as is very apt to be the case under such circumstances) for the purpose of making themselves better bunks than the "soft side" of a white-oak board. Of course they were not to be blamed for that. The cotton was beyond the owner's control. He could neither assent to nor dissent from that use of it. After this had been done, then they took the remaining part of the cotton down to a warehouse for the purpose of shipping it to Louisville. While it was there it is said that some boys started a fire in the neighborhood, and the warehouse took fire and the cotton was burned.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Was not the liability of the Government just as great then as it would have been if that cotton had reached a warehouse in New York and been burned there?

Mr. WARNER. I am coming to that. I have stated that there is no question in my mind as to the duty of the Government in the first instance. They got it to this warehouse, and I submit that the liability of the Government was just as full and complete then as though they had put it aboard the boat and the boat had sunk upon the river, or as though they had gotten it to Louisville and it had been burned there. It seems to me that it is plain upon the evidence that this man is entitled to payment for his cotton; and I am willing to go further than many persons in cases of this kind, for I hold that it is the duty of the Government to protect the citizen who is loyal to his Government in his life and in his property, and when it takes the property of the citizen for its own uses, then whenever the Government is abundantly able to pay the citizen for that which it has taken from him, its duty is plain, more especially when the citizen is denied the right of going into court and enforcing his claim against the Government. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the payment of this claim.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, it is well for us to keep certain general principles in view. If we do not we may make great mistakes in this and like cases, and as this case is a somewhat difficult one it is well to consider it carefully before we act. In the first place, let us eliminate from the case those matters which are unimportant and which touch no principle. For instance, the receipt given for this cotton when it was originally taken by the commander of the United States forces cuts no figure. If the United States were not liable that officer could not make them liable, and if they were liable he could not relieve them from their liability. Therefore, let us throw out of account the language of that receipt given by the commanding officer.

Mr. BUCKALEW. That would merely be evidence of the fact of the taking.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. As suggested by my learned friend on the right [Mr. BUCKALEW], that would be mere evidence of the fact of the taking of the cotton, but it could not fix the law. We come, then, to the question which first confronts us, to wit: If a general in command of the United States forces in the face of the enemy uses the property of an individual for the purpose of resisting the opposing army, are the United States liable therefor? No gentleman has argued that question. No authority has been cited to show that the United States would be liable in such a case, and on general principles I venture to assert that the United States would not be liable, and that to hold otherwise would lead to the most alarming consequences.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHINGTON. If they had used stone or timber, or any material that is ordinarily used for such purposes—if the stone or timber had been left near there and the United States forces had used it for the fortifications, perhaps there might be something in your point; but in this case they used an article of merchandise, an article of very great value, and after using it for defense they took it in charge and started it off to market. Does not that fix the liability?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. It is always confusing to mix up a number of questions. Let us look at the questions in this case in the order in which they arise. If the United States be liable for the taking of a bale of cotton to be used in a breastwork, the United States should be liable for taking a stick of timber or a cord of stone for the same purpose. There is no difference of principle between the cases cited; and no lawyer on the floor, I think, will say that there can be a difference of principle.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If my time is not limited, I am willing to yield to any one; for if the Government of the United States is liable in this case I want to vote to make payment.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I want to suggest to the gentleman that this bill presents no claim for liability on the part of the Government until the cotton was placed in the Government warehouse. All this preliminary argument about the liability of the Government while the cotton was in the fortification is not relevant, I submit to the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am following regularly in the line of argument of those who preceded me in favor of this bill. They insisted that the United States is liable because of the use of the cotton for a breastwork.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. But I desire to point out to you a shorter line.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will yield for anybody's question provided my time is not limited.

Mr. SPINOLA. I will give you my time. I wish to ask this question: If this property had been located in the city of New York and forcible possession had been taken of it by the Government for similar purposes, would the Government have been liable or not?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Not at all, if it was not taken possession of for the purpose of defense against the enemies of the United States, and I may add—for that was this case—in the face of the enemy.

Mr. SPINOLA. Oh, yes; if it was taken from loyal citizens.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. This question stands in my judgment on just this principle: Suppose a fire were raging in the city of New York, and suppose it should be necessary for the purpose of arresting the fire to blow up or destroy the buildings of A, B, C, or D, would there be any liability on the part of the State or municipal government, in the absence of a statutory law creating such liability?

Mr. SPINOLA. They had to make such payment in 1835.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The public safety is the supreme law of this land.

Mr. McMILLIN. Right there let me make a suggestion to my friend. Suppose that his proposition is true, and that, in order to provide for the public safety, the Government has supreme power to take, without compensation, the property of its citizens. But suppose, after the use for which the property is taken is completed, the individual goes to the Government and says, "Now you are through with my property, and I want it back," and suppose the Government should thereupon say, "No, we will not return your property, but will sell it and appropriate the proceeds for other uses," does there not then accrue a liability which the Government can not evade?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If the gentleman had waited a moment I would have reached that point. I shall be very glad to discuss the question when I reach it. Perhaps the gentleman and myself will not differ upon it very much. But let me make myself understood on the other point. If, as gentlemen here claim, the taking of this property for a breastwork made the Government of the United States liable, then the Government is liable in every case where it digs up the earth for the purpose of throwing up an embankment or breastwork, because that is an injury to your field or mine. The difference is one of circumstances, not of principle. Liability in the one case necessarily implies liability in the other.

Mr. WARNER. Will you pardon me a question? If the Government should throw up a breastwork on your field as a matter of necessity under the supreme law of the public safety, and then after the necessity for that breastwork had passed should still keep possession of your field——

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Wait until I get through. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen are trying to blend two ideas. As the learned gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] on my right suggested, when we meet them on one position they suggest another. If the gentleman will wait a moment I will answer his question.

Let me say that the question which arises in my mind is not whether the man that owned the property was loyal or not. I am talking about principles of law which touch every man's property, because the safety of the Government is the supreme and highest law of every land, and whatever is necessary can be taken for the purposes of the Government.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would like to ask my friend this question: Where is the principle, either of international or municipal law, which relieves the Government from the obligation to pay when, after having used the property of the citizen, it converts it into money and appropriates it to general purposes?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is the question you asked me before. I was coming to that. I did not propose to sit down without answering that question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Government of the United States does convert to its own use property of a loyal citizen, and it does sell it and put the money in the Treasury, I am not here to say that it is not liable for that money. But that stands on a different position, as my friend will see. I do not argue, and my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] does not argue, that the Government in such a case is not liable. We stand on that legal position as I have stated it, and I am very glad to have him agree with me, for he is usually right.

If there is evidence in this case showing how much property the Government of the United States did convert to its own use, which belonged to this man, and the amount of money which the Government realized from that property, I say let us pay that amount back; but because there is a general statement that they converted some of the property let us not pay for all that was used for breastworks. If we do so we will establish a precedent which will rise up against us year after year to our great annoyance and expense.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there not a liability on the part of the Government for that cotton which was destroyed by fire while it was in the possession of the United States Government?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If during the time this cotton was being used by the Government for breastworks it was ignited by a shell and entirely destroyed I am of opinion there was no liability on the part of the Government to pay for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But after it was used for the purpose of defense in these breastworks and it was taken possession of by the Government authorities, who refused to return it to its owner, and while in possession of the Government authorities it was destroyed by fire, is not the Government then liable for the payment of this property?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I want to know all the circumstances attending the possession of the property before I can answer that question. The Government is not bound to give up the possession of such property the moment a battle ceases. It may be necessary to have these breastworks to resist some other attack on the part of the enemy. It is for the Government to say whether its possession is necessary for the public defense or not. But if after it is necessary for actual defense against the enemies of the Government it converts the property to its own use or realizes money out of it then it does become liable.

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will yield now to the gentleman from Tennessee to ask his question.

Mr. ENLOE. I wish to say to the gentleman from Minnesota that the report shows that after this demand had been made for the return of this cotton it was taken possession of by the Government and removed from the breastworks and put into the Government warehouse.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Permit me to say that must be more fully shown than in this case to establish legal liability on the part of the Government. It is just as my friend from Pennsylvania pointed out in the Mobile case. In that case the cotton was in the warehouse of the Government, and yet there was no liability. In this case the putting of this property into the Government warehouse may have created liability. But the report in this case does not show, except as to a part of this property, any such conversion as would create a liability on the part of the Government to the owner.

Mr. ENLOE. But they declined to return it to the owner of the cotton.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. You say it was converted not for military purposes. I admit, if that be true, the Government is liable for the money realized from the sale of it. What I say is, that this report does not show that the whole of it was so converted.

Mr. SOWDEN. Let me ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. SOWDEN. Supposing after this property had been warehoused by the Government it was destroyed by being struck by lightning; the gentleman from Minnesota would not then hold the Government was liable for the destruction of that property in such a case?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I say now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the statement of the single fact that it was in warehouse of the Government is not sufficient for the purpose of showing that the Government is liable. More facts must be found in order to establish the liability of the Government.

Mr. SOWDEN. Is it not the same when property is destroyed by explosion of a shell while being used as breastworks?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SOWDEN. There would be no liability?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. There would not.

Mr. ENLOE. Now, there is the additional fact shown in this case that this cotton was in the warehouse of the Government, and while there was destroyed by fire caused by boys in the neighborhood, and does the gentleman say the Government was not liable to the owner of this cotton for its destruction?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If it was in its possession for other than military purposes against the will of the owner, no matter how destroyed, the Government would be liable.

Mr. WADE. If property is taken possession of by order of the chief officer and that property is destroyed pending a battle and the battle does not occur, if that property is destroyed while the battle is going on, is the Government responsible for that?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Not at all, for property taken by the United States authorities for the purpose of resisting a hostile force and which is destroyed while being so used there is no liability, I think.

Mr. WASHINGTON. When this property was taken by the Government and warehoused to be shipped away, and the proceeds of the sale of that property turned into the Treasury—is not the Government liable in such a case?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That would be satisfactory evidence of conversion.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That is exactly the case here. They went as far as they could to convert it.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do not misunderstand me. That might be satisfactory evidence of conversion; but I want to know the facts in connection with that conversion; and whether they are sufficient on which to base the action sought here. If this property was converted by the Government to its own use, after it had been used for the military purpose designated I admit the liability.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That is just the case here.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. That is not so shown. But if used for other purposes than those of war, then the Government was liable, provided the owner was a loyal man.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Now, right there I want the gentleman to examine the findings of the Court of Claims and the report, which show that after this cotton had been used for the purpose of the fortifications it was shipped by the Government to Louisville, Ky., was sold there by the Government and the proceeds applied to its own use, not for purposes of defense, but was turned into the Treasury. Therefore the Government is liable to that amount.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The report shows that to be true of some of this cotton, but not of all; you must show the amount so taken and sold. I do not mean the amount used in the fortifications, but the amount that was taken and actually shipped and sold——

Mr. HOUK. That has been established and shown by half a dozen authorities. There is no question as to the amount of cotton that was taken.

Mr. WASHINGTON. And let me say to the gentleman that if he will look at the concluding portions of the report in the findings of the committee, he will ascertain that they originally took 313 bales, of which quantity 218 bales were saved, which is the amount involved in this bill which the Government took possession of, shipped, and sold.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not so understand it.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That is the report.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I have stated, as I believe, the legal principles which lie in the way of the passage of bills of this character, and have stated also the principle which would allow the owner to recover. That is my judgment at this time without having examined the law books upon the question.

Mr. BUTLER. If you stand by that logic the report shows that the amount claimed by the bill is covered by the principle that you say should apply to this case.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If it does show it then I will follow my logic to its legitimate consequences.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That is all right, and that is all that is asked in this case. Has the gentleman read the report?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I have not read all of it. I have read sufficient to show me that this bill should not pass for the amount claimed.

Mr. BUTLER. I will state the case again so plainly that nobody need to err if the gentleman will give me his attention.

This cotton was seized and put into the fortifications at Knoxville. Afterwards the parties to whom it belonged went and asked its return. It was not returned, but a direct refusal to return it was made, and an order issued that it should be turned over to the Quartermaster-General and shipped to Louisville under the Treasury regulations, and the gentleman knows what they were, that all cotton should be turned over to the Treasury authorities.

After the Government seized it and took it from the fortifications 20 bales of it were burned. The balance, 256 bales, was saved, as the report shows. Now the Court of Claims have held, and so also the committee of the Senate and of the House, as shown in the unanimous report made by both bodies, that the Government was liable for the 256 bales.

Mr. HOUK. But not for the twenty.

Mr. BUTLER. The Government had taken it from the fortifications, and while in transit under the order for its shipment, and while stored near the depot, some boys set a lot of cotton on fire, and they suppose that 20 of the 256 bales so stored was consumed. Remember that this was after the siege had been raised and the cotton was taken possession of by the Government.

Mr. ENLOE. I wish to correct my colleague by a citation from the report. I think if he will examine, it will appear that all but 20 bales were consumed.

Mr. BUTLER. No, I think not.

Mr. ENLOE. The report says:

Of the 218 bales recovered, 40 were used by the medical department; 158 stored by the quartermaster near the railroad depot awaiting shipment were accidentally set on fire by boys playing in the vicinity, and all with the exception of about 20 bales were consumed.

Mr. BUTLER. The report says "20 bales were shipped to the chief quartermaster at Louisville. What became of the other 20 does not appear," etc.

Now, the commission found that the receipt was for 256 bales and that these were the 256 bales that the Government had gotten possession of. This commission was organized by the commander of the division there, and they found the facts which are set forth in the report and which are familiar to the committee; and if the gentleman is to be governed by his own premises, which I do not think are correct by any means, there can be no question as to the attitude he will pursue in this case.

But, Mr. Chairman, if this character of claim is not to be paid by the Government, then the Government ought not to pay anybody.

The gentleman has referred to the case of the destruction of buildings in New York. Let me illustrate his own position. Suppose they blew up a building there under the circumstances he asserts, and the doors and the sash and the windows were saved and afterwards the owner came and said, "let me have that part of the building back," and was refused. According to the gentleman's theory he could not recover. But I understand that citizens did recover from citizens for property destroyed in that very conflagration. I appeal therefore to my friend from Pennsylvania to consent to allow this bill to be passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to have read a message from President Grant of June 1, 1872, on a similar case.

Mr. HOUK. It does not amount to anything at all in this connection. I know the case the gentleman refers to, the Best case.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I have examined the bill (S. No. 105) entitled "An act for the relief of J. Milton Best," and, being unable to give it my approval, return the same to the Senate, the House in which it originated, without my signature.

The bill appropriates the sum of $25,000 to compensate Dr. J. Milton Best for the destruction of his dwelling-house and its contents by order of the commanding officer of the United States military forces at Paducah, Ky., on the 26th day of March, 1864. It appears that this house was one of a considerable number destroyed for the purpose of giving open range to the guns of a United States fort. On the day preceding the destruction the houses had been used as a cover for rebel troops attacking the fort, and, apprehending a renewal of the attack, the commanding officer caused the destruction of the houses. This, then, is a claim for compensation on account of the ravages of war. It can not be denied that the payment of this claim would invite the presentation of demands for very large sums of money; and such is the supposed magnitude of the claims that may be made against the Government for necessary and unavoidable destruction of property by the Army that I deem it proper to return this bill for reconsideration.

It is a general principle of both international and municipal law that all property is held subject, not only to be taken by the Government for public uses, in which case under the Constitution of the United States the owner is entitled to just compensation, but also subject to be temporarily occupied, or even accually destroyed, in times of great public danger, and when the public safety demands it, and in this latter case, governments do not admit a legal obligation on their part to compensate the owner. The temporary occupation of, injuries to, and destruction of property caused by actual and necessary military operations is generally considered to fall within the last-mentioned principle. If a government makes compensation under such circumstances, it is a matter of bounty rather than of strict legal right.

If it be deemed proper to make compensation for such losses, I suggest for the consideration of Congress whether it would not be better, by general legislation, to provide some means for the ascertainment of the damage in all similar cases, and thus save to claimants the expense, inconvenience, and delay of attendance upon Congress, and, at the same time, save the Government from the danger of having imposed upon it fictitious or exaggerated claims supported wholly by ex parte proof. If the claimant in this case ought to be paid, so ought all others similarly situated, and that there are many such can not be doubted. Besides, there are strong reasons for believing that the amount of damage in this case has been greatly overestimated. If this be true, it furnishes an illustration of the danger of trusting entirely to ex parte testimony in such matters.

U. S. GRANT.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will only say a single word. The statement there is of just the principle that underlies all this matter. A great many persons go wrong on this idea. In the constitution of the several States, or most of them, it is provided that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation; but, as I said in my previous remarks, unless there is such a law, private property may be taken for public use, and there is no liability whatever.

Mr. HOUK. I simply want to call attention to the absolute lack of analogy between this case and the bill vetoed by the message read in opposition to this case. Why, sir, we destroyed forts, houses, and other places where the enemy had secreted themselves in order to resist the Federal forces, but who ever thought of paying for them? Not less than several dozen houses were burned in my town, but I have stood here, and this House, Congress after Congress, persistently refuses to pay for them. I believe in the very act of war the Government had a right to destroy that property in order to make it possible for the United States forces to resist the enemy.

Mr. WASHINGTON. There were nearer twelve dozen houses destroyed.

Mr. HOUK. Yes.

What else is there in this matter? General Grant refers to the fact that you have a right to take private property, but there must be just compensation. What is this case? Let us look at it in the light of reason for a moment. The Army needed this property. Suppose it seized it in the very act of prosecuting a battle and resisting the enemy? At such time they would have a right to seize it in the line of war, and no claim would lie against the Government for compensation. But the very moment the war ended, the very moment this property accomplished the end in the struggle between the two armies for which the Government seized it, if the Government of the United States then converted it and diverted it from its owner, it was a conversion in law for which the Government of the United States is liable, as I believe every good lawyer on this floor will say.

Another thing. I would like to know if these gentlemen did not vote the other week to pay for a college over in Virginia? If they did I would like to have an explanation of how they can reconcile that vote with their fight against this measure.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I voted against that bill.

Mr. HOUK. There is a difference between this case and the one referred to by General Grant—the Paducah case. The Paducah case is a sweet morsel the gentlemen who refuse to vote for this bill roll under their tongues. We always hear of that case, although it has no more application than to the case of the man in the moon. What is the difference? That was a stationary piece of property. An actual battle was going on. The property was destroyed by our forces. General Grant did exactly right in vetoing the bill. But in this case the property was seized and used for the purpose intended. There was no necessity for destroying it. The United States, after it was through with it, refused to give it back to the owners, and started to transport it to market. Part of it was lost and part of it got there. I believe the Government has the money in the Treasury.

I want to say another thing. I have been as liberal on this subject, and have tried to discriminate as fairly as possible; but if this House is going to reject this claim and pay for colleges in Virginia, what are we coming to? I repeat, Mr. Chairman, what I have said before. I would rather have the note of any pauper forty years of age in the United States than a claim on the Government, unless it was in the shape of a bond, because there is always some one who must assume to be the watch-dog of the Treasury and resist honest claims that come up for payment.

The committee then informally rose, and Mr. HOLMAN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 5,000 copies of the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations relating to the fisheries treaty, together with the views of the minority.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 3025) to provide for the reconstruction of the Government dam at Rock Island arsenal, and for the immediate construction of a temporary dam to furnish water-power for said arsenal; and

A bill (S. 2922) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Alvarado Cemetery Association of Georgetown, Colo.

PEREZ DICKINSON.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

Mr. SPRINGER rose.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for one moment?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to ask if it is not possible to limit debate upon this question? If we are to make any progress at all in the consideration of private business it does seem to me absolutely necessary we should fix some limits upon the discussion of this question. We have now had it under consideration for an hour and a half. If we go ahead in this way we will spend all day upon this bill and thus make no advance in the consideration of other bills on the Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this proposition be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to that.

Mr. HOUK. Make it ten minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have the floor. After I have addressed the committee I presume we will be ready to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending bill be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. BUCKALEW and Mr. LYNCH objected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW].

Mr. LAIDLAW. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that there is great misapprehension about the law, or what has been laid down as law, in this case. It would seem to me, sir, that no lawyer, after he had examined the question, would say that the Government was not liable for this cotton, even under the circumstances of the commanding officer taking it for breastworks. I would not say this if I had not had occasion to examine the question with some care; but if any gentleman will take the pains to read a case that is reported in the first volume of the Court of Claims Reports, a case covering a great many pages, where this whole question is discussed, I think he will come to the conclusion that if the law there laid down is good law (and the authorities are numerous), it is nonsense to say that the Government can take a private citizen's property for the purposes of war and not pay him for it, if he is a loyal man. That idea is neither ancient nor modern law, as the law is laid down by the court in this case.

The case was this: A citizen of the United States had a contract to furnish flour and supplies for the Army. It became necessary to retreat, and the commanding officer, thinking that if this property fell into the hands of the enemy it would be very useful to him, issued an order for its destruction. The question was whether the man was entitled to be reimbursed for the property so destroyed. The court go on to discuss the case, and they say that it makes no difference whether the property is taken for consumption or whether it is taken for destruction, if it is taken for a public benefit, or a supposed public benefit, by some one having authority to take it, then, under the provision of the Constitution that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, the man is entitled to be paid for his property.

Why, the Government is nothing but all of us; and has it come to this, that all of us can take the property of one of us? Is that just? It is not Grotius; it is not Vattel; it is not international law; it is not the law of any civilized country in the world. What does the court say?

> The taking of private property for use or destruction, when the public exigency demands it, by a military officer commanding any part of the public forces is an exercise of the right of eminent domain. Whenever the officer is justified, the Government is liable. The state of facts as they appeared to the officer when he acted must govern the decision.

That is the syllabus. Here are some extracts from the opinion of the court:

> Every civilized state recognizes its obligation to make compensation for private property taken under pressure of state necessity and for the public good. The state is the transcendental proprietary of all the property, real and personal, of its citizens or subjects. This transcendental right—the eminent domain of the state in all countries where rights are regulated by law—is so exercised as to work no wrong and inflict no private injury without giving to the party aggrieved ample redress.
> Whenever, from necessity or policy, a state appropriates to public use the private property of an individual it is obliged, by a law as imperative as that in virtue of which it makes the appropriation, to give to the party aggrieved redress commensurate with the injury he has sustained.

And here is a quotation from Vattel:

> Is the state bound to indemnify individuals for the damages they have sustained in war? We may learn from Grotius that authors are divided on this question. The damages under consideration are to be distinguished into two kinds—those done by the state itself, or the sovereign, and those done by the enemy. Of the first kind some are done deliberately and by way of precaution, as when a field, a house, or a garden belonging to a private person is taken for the purpose of erecting on the spot a town rampart or any other piece of fortification; or where his standing corn or store-houses are destroyed to prevent their being of use to the enemy. Such damages are to be made good to the individual, who should bear only his quota of the loss.

That is Vattel.

I have seen the veto message of General Grant that has been referred to here. There is no necessity of having any law in a veto. It is the last place you expect to find law. A veto does not have to convince anybody. Main strength and stupidity are just as good for a veto as common sense. [Laughter.] General Grant does not quote a particle of law or authority in that veto except by way of parenthesis, and this is the first time I ever knew lawyers or judges to go to veto messages to learn what the law of the land was. [Laughter.]

I read now from Grotius:

> We must observe this, that the king may in two ways deprive his subjects of their right, either by way of punishment or by virtue of his eminent power. But if he do so in the last way, it must be for some public advantage, and then the subject ought to receive, if possible, a just satisfaction for the loss he suffers out of the common stock.

Now that is not what a judge of the Court of Claims says; it is a quotation from the text of Grotius; it is what you will find on every page of Vattel. You will find nothing to the contrary of this statement in either of those authorities.

The state has an eminent right of property over the goods of the subjects, so that the state, or those that represent it may make use of them, and even destroy and alienate them, not only on extreme necessity, but for the public benefit, to which we must add that the state is obliged to repair the damages suffered by any subject on that account out of the public stock. Neither shall the state be absolved from this obligation, though for the present not able to satisfy it; but whenever the state is in a capacity this suspended obligation shall resume its force.

In this article—

That is the article of the Constitution—

it is declared that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation to the owner.

Do you suppose, without looking the question up at all, that this provision has reference only to a time of peace? If your doctrine were good for anything the Government in the recent war need not have paid for a dollar's worth of property at the North or anywhere else; it might simply have gone and taken possession of whatever it found necessary. This Constitution is for times of war as well as for times of peace, and I insist that the Government has no right, and no lawyer ought to say that it has, under the Constitution, to take the private property of a citizen without compensation.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Whenever it will not interrupt the gentleman, I would like to ask him a question. I hope he will indicate his own time.

Mr. LAIDLAW. All right; any time.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Let me ask you this: Suppose the armies of the Government, finding it necessary, for the purpose of resisting the public enemy, should dig a man's field for the purpose of throwing up breastworks, then, as soon as the war was over, would the Government be liable for the injury it had done in that way to the man's field just as if it had been done by a private person?

Mr. LAIDLAW. I get your idea. You mean to ask me whether, in every case where the soil was disturbed during the recent great conflict by digging up a shovelful of dirt, the Government would be liable to the private owner of that soil?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Would it, or would it not?

Mr. LAIDLAW. Wait a minute.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will wait.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I never was wiser than the law. I do not make the law; and I do not get it out of vetoes, but I go to the recognized books for it. I say to the gentleman, "go and be diligent; gainsay the quotations I have made, if you can."

I would rather talk about the case I have before me than one which is not before me. I am discussing the question of this cotton. I say it is the law to-day—and the gentleman would come to the same conclusion if he would take the trouble to look into it—that if the Government took my property, I being a loyal citizen, put it in a breastwork and used it for the purpose of public defense, there is no law, human or divine, recognized in any civilized country, which would justify the Government in refusing to compensate me, if able to make compensation.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. You have not answered my question yet. You are answering one which you asked yourself.

Mr. LAIDLAW. I was answering the question which covers the case we were talking about. I do not wish to have any conundrums about a case of this kind.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. You will not answer my question. I thought you would not.

Mr. LAIDLAW. It is a principle of law that a judge never answers conundrums. I never could get a judge to answer any of mine.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Let me ask the gentleman a question which will come a little nearer——

Mr. LAIDLAW. Wait a little; not now.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I thought not.

Mr. LAIDLAW (reading):

Whether or not a law authorizing the destruction of private property for public benefit or safety is to be esteemed a taking of it for public use, such a law is nevertheless an exercise of the right of eminent domain. The right to take or destroy private property by an individual in self-defense, or for the protection of life, liberty, or property, is of a widely different character.

Then this authority goes on to show that the taking of property by the public is an exercise of the right of eminent domain, and does not fall at all within the other principle which has been referred to by the gentleman.

Now, I would like to get the attention of my friend, Judge WILSON, to this proposition; this is a good conundrum for him to answer.

A vessel may in time of war be taken from the owner when the interests of the Government demand it; or it may be destroyed to prevent its falling into the hands of an enemy, and thereby increase its power of aggression or resistance; and the owner would be entitled under the Constitution to be paid a just compensation.

Do you agree to that (addressing Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota)? If you had a vessel lying in port down here on the Potomac and the Government, being afraid that the vessel might fall into the possession of the enemy, should order its destruction, would you be entitled to any compensation?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the gentleman seems to be in the midst of explaining a point, I will yield him five minutes further.

Mr. LAIDLAW (reading):

Upon the authority of the cases cited and others that might be adduced, as well as on the principles which distinguish a case of public necessity, utility, or good, from the overruling necessity which regulates the law of individuals, we are of opinion that the rightful taking of private property for use or destruction when the public exigency demands it, by a military officer commanding any part of the public force, is an exercise of the right of eminent domain, and that such a case is not governed by the law applicable to individuals.

The court holds, after full argument on the part of the Government, after full argument on the part of the claimant, that the taking of a private person's property even destroyed comes within the right of eminent domain, and that clause of the Constitution which says, "private property shall not be taken for public use."

The letter and spirit of the public law, and of the constitutional provision in this regard, require just compensation to be made in every case when private property is rightfully taken for public use, whether it be by legislative authority or under the powers necessarily exercised by those commanding our land and naval forces in time of war or imminent public danger.

Then it goes on and says it may—that by his commission and situation of his case he may rightfully take it, and if he may rightfully take it the Government must pay for it.

Whenever the officer is justified the liability of the public is established.

Now, I have no personal interest in this business, except I do not like to see so much of this kind of loose law knocking around. [Laughter.]

Property is taken without legislative authority, but by official warrant, and under urgent necessity and for the general good. Courts approve the conduct of the officer and the Executive rewards him with promotion for faithful and efficient performance of duty. The exigencies of war forbid that the legislative authority should provide for the precise circumstances under which the eminent right of the state may be called into action. The fundamental law provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. Is this provision of the Constitution answered when compensation is made for property taken under legislative authority and denied when taken by military officers acting rightfully under the proper functions of their office? We think not. The obligation to make compensation is co-extensive with the right of the state to take private property for public use, and whenever it is taken by competent authority the obligation of the state can not be evaded.

I am not reading that to convince you, but to show what a judge that was who got it off. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCKALEW. What judge.

Mr. LAIDLAW. There seems to be a lot of them. The judge who delivered the opinion, I do not know him myself personally; Judge Wilmot. Watts & Dunnell—those are the attorneys.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. There were two of these cases, and one of them was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States. Do you know whether this is the one which was reversed by the Supreme Court?

Mr. LAIDLAW. You will know which one. This was never reversed so far as I know.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, this is not a new question in the House. It has been up many times before. At the commencement of my Congressional service a similar case came up from Virginia. It was a meritorious case in many respects. It was in behalf of an educational institution which appealed strongly to the feelings of the people of this country, who desired to preserve one of the oldest of the collegiate institutions established in the United States, that of William and Mary College, in Virginia. The bill was introduced in the Forty-fifth Congress, I think, for the purpose of appropriating some $65,000 to pay for the use of the college buildings, which had been destroyed while in the occupation of the United States.

That bill, Mr. Chairman, was debated during two sessions of Congress, and the strongest arguments for and against it were made. It was one of the most thoroughly discussed cases in this House since I have been a member. I wish gentlemen would look up the debate in that case. It concluded January 10, 1879, when the question was taken in the House on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and the yeas and nays were ordered. The yeas were 87, nays 127, and those not voting 75, nearly all of whom, I see, were paired one way or the other on the question.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That was for the use of a building and its destruction during that use.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the college of William and Mary, in Virginia, the sum of $65,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse said college for the destruction of its building and other property destroyed without authority by disorderly soldiers of the United States.

Mr. CATCHINGS. But that was an act of devastation.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was a case of the destruction of private property growing out of its occupation by Federal troops, and that was the question discussed, and if gentlemen will examine the debate in the House they will see.

Mr. ROWELL. But was there not a discussion growing out of something else than the legal attitude of the Government to the parties?

Mr. SPRINGER. The question discussed was as to the legal liabilities of the Government.

Mr. ROWELL. But there were other questions discussed as bearing upon the claim.

Mr. SPRINGER. The debate is given here, and gentlemen can see for themselves the questions presented.

Mr. ROWELL. But was not the question there that this was claimed to be a propagating college for Confederate ideas?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think so.

Mr. ROWELL. I think the question presented was that this was a rebel institution and was used for propagating such ideas.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That could not possibly be, because this institution was established during the Revolutionary war.

Mr. BUTLER. But the question presented here refers to the position occupied by that institution during the late war.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Was not the claim to which reference is made there one for rent and damage—use and occupation of the property?

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill says what it was:

To reimburse said college for the destruction of its building and other property destroyed.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That was for the occupation of the building.

Mr. SPRINGER. For damage growing out of occupation during a large portion of the war.

Mr. CATCHINGS. If it will not interrupt the gentleman from Illinois, I would be glad to ask him a question for information.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Have you any authority or decision of any court holding that the Government is not in all cases liable where it appropriates to its own uses the personal property of the citizen, whether such seizure be in time of war or in time of peace?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer that when I come to it. I am referring now to the college of William and Mary, and do not desire to be diverted from the line of argument I wish to pursue. That question was discussed in its broadest aspect to determine the liability of the Government for property taken, damaged, or destroyed during the war, in the midst of hostilities, and the liabilities of the Government were decided in the negative by the vote upon the bill, and many leading members of Congress participated in the discussion. If gentlemen will look at the yeas and nays upon that vote as recorded here, they will see amongst the names of the Representatives voting against it the great majority both upon that side of the House and upon this, or a large minority on this side of the House, at least, I may say.

That is not exactly the case presented here and covered by this bill, but the principle involved is the same. So also with the case of Best, vetoed by President Grant. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAIDLAW] seems to think that a President of the United States knows nothing about law or anything else, and that lawyers and judges do not go to Presidents to find out anything about the law or facts in any given case. I think in writing this veto message President Grant was in all probability, in fact we may consider it as absolutely certain, advised by his Attorney-General, and that this veto message was the act of his Administration, representing the policy which Grant's Administration pursued or intended to pursue with regard to such cases.

Now, the general principle as laid down by President Grant is a correct one, and to that I want to call the attention of gentlemen on both sides of this House. It was admitted at that time not to be a settled question, and I undertake to say that the policy laid down by the President then has been the policy that has governed in regard to such cases from that time until the beginning of this Congress. The President says:

It is a general principle of both international and municipal law that all property is held subject not only to be taken by the Government for public uses, in which case, under the Constitution of the United States, the owner is entitled to just compensation, but also subject to be temporarily occupied or even actually destroyed in times of great public danger and when the public safety demands it, and in this latter case governments do not admit a legal obligation on their part to compensate the owner.

Mr. COBB. How did this destruction occur?

Mr. BUTLER. In a fight.

Mr. SPRINGER. By order of a military officer, it being the destruction of certain houses within the range of the guns of the United States troops at Paducah, and they were destroyed to give a complete range to the Federal artillery. It was the destruction, in the face of the enemy, of property to carry on the operations of war.

The temporary occupation of, injuries to, and destruction of, property caused by actual and necessary military operations, is generally considered to fall within the last-mentioned principle.

The principle being that the Government is not liable to pay. And he further says:

If a Government makes compensation under such circumstances, it is a matter of bounty rather than of a strict legal right.

Now I do not need or wish to discuss the question as to what opinion gentlemen may now entertain, but I place President Grant and his Attorney-General and Cabinet against their opinions, and undertake to say that the opinion which I have quoted of President Grant was recognized as the law at that time, and has been regarded as good law by the Government from that time to this.

But there is another feature to which I wish to call attention. President Grant stated in this veto message as follows:

If it be deemed proper to make compensation for such losses, I suggest for the consideration of Congress whether it would not be better, by general legislation, to provide some means for the ascertainment of the damage in all similar cases, and thus save to claimants the expense, inconvenience, and delay of attendance upon Congress, and, at the same time, save the Government from the danger of having imposed upon it fictitious or exaggerated claims supported wholly by ex parte proof.

If you are to pay for such cases as this, why not establish a general principle and have some way by which all persons under like circumstances can present their claims against the United States and have justice done to them?

This special legislation, this selecting out favored individuals who may have friends in Congress to further their claims, this occupying the time of three hundred and twenty-five Representatives in the adjudication of private claims, is not worthy of the Congress of the United States, and ought not to occupy the time of the Representatives of the people. If the Government is liable, it is liable to all. Let us provide for all. Let us make a general law that will bring within its provisions all the persons who are similarly situated; and in that general law lay down the principles upon which the liability of the Government shall be ascertained.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will.

Mr. MACDONALD. Do I understand the facts stated in the report of the committee in this case are admitted to be true?

Mr. SPRINGER. They were found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. MACDONALD. I read from the Senate report, beginning with the statement of the facts:

It seems to be clearly established that when Knoxville was threatened this property of a loyal citizen, in full sympathy, was taken, not by capture, but by agreement between the parties and a receipt given.

Are those facts admitted?

Mr. SPRINGER. That was what was found and reported in the case.

Mr. MACDONALD. Do you mean to say the cases you refer to are parallel to this?

Mr. SPRINGER. I mean to say that this property was taken in the very midst of war; that this property was used for the purpose of making breastworks to prevent the enemy from approaching the city of Knoxville. If there ever was property taken in the midst of war for military purposes, this property was taken under those circumstances.

Mr. MACDONALD. If the Government had bought munitions of war in the city of New York and given a receipt for the same, would there be any difference?

Mr. SPRINGER. The principle running through every adjudicated case shows the difference.

Mr. MACDONALD. That is not an answer.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state to the gentleman there is a difference.

Mr. MACDONALD. Wherein?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is this: The Government of the United States is not liable for property taken in the midst of war.

Mr. MACDONALD. They were not fighting.

Mr. SPRINGER. Here is what General Grant said was the law and it is the law——

Mr. MACDONALD. I admit it; but what he said is not applicable to this case.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is applicable to this case.

The temporary occupation of, injury to, and destruction of property caused by the actually necessary military operations of the war is such as not to create a legal obligation on the part of the Government.

That is the law laid down by President Grant, and that is the case here. It was property taken while the war was in progress; while the enemy was approaching, while the armies were marshaled against each other. There can be no stronger case of actual hostilities than this. It is just as strong as the case at Paducah, where houses were leveled for the purpose of allowing a range of the guns of the forces. It is just as strong a case as the case of the William and Mary College, where property was occupied for months by the Government and injured in the occupation.

A MEMBER. That bill was passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; it was voted down by a very large majority.

This is as strong a case as has been before Congress. I undertake to say that of all the cases of this kind where there has been full investigation and discussion, none has been passed since the Best veto from President Grant.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Do you know what the report of the committee was on that veto?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not sure as to what it was. The committee may have differed from President Grant on the subject. But the bill was not passed over the veto, was it?

Mr. BAKER, of New York. No.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then Congress acquiesced in the veto by refusing to pass the bill over the veto of the President.

Mr. ROWELL. That veto was given without full knowledge of the facts as they were afterwards developed in the case.

Mr. SPRINGER. General Grant stated enough facts to satisfy me as to what the law was, and to satisfy Congress at that time. So far as I know Mr. Best has never been paid the amount of his claim.

Mr. HOUK. This Government does not pay anybody.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I am justified in my statement that no money has been paid in a similar case after full and careful consideration. Some bill may have slipped through without being noticed.

One fact further. If this case had come within the provisions of the captured and abandoned property act, as some gentlemen claim, then the claimant had a forum, a place erected by the Government of the United States, where he could have gone and set up his claim. In that case, if he had proved his case, and that he was a loyal citizen, he could have recovered in the Court of Claims the value of the property.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not the Government just as liable for the property taken from a loyal citizen and used as it would be if the property was sold and the money covered into the Treasury?

Mr. SPRINGER. The liability of the Government was fixed and limited by the act known as the captured and abandoned property act. Whenever a case comes within the provisions of that act all the courts of the United States have adjudicated that the Government is liable. If the case does not come within the provisions of that act the Government is not liable.

Mr. BUTLER. General Grant recommended a commission.

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; he recommended that Congress should pass a general law.

Mr. BUTLER. The Bowman act does that. Is not this in compliance with the Bowman act?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Bowman act simply provided for a settlement of the claims transmitted to the Court of Claims for the ascertainment of the facts, and it especially provided that there was to be no assumed liability on the part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. HOUK. What part of the act provided that? Tell me the page or the section.

Mr. SPRINGER. If you will give me the act I will show it to you.

Mr. HOUK. I am not waiting on you now. But if you make an assertion you ought to be able to support it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] has the Bowman act in his hand, and I will ask him to read the provision presently.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is well understood that the Government admitted no liability by the reference of these cases to the Court of Claims for the ascertainment of the facts. The court had no authority to enter judgment, and it does not express any opinion as to whether this claim should be paid or not. It simply reports the facts to Congress.

Mr. WARNER. I have not the Bowman act in my hand, but I have the report upon the veto message of General Grant.

Mr. SPRINGER. Who submitted that report?

Mr. WARNER. No less a person than Senator Howe, probably one of the best lawyers in the United States Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. He took issue with the President, did he not?

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. One more point, Mr. Chairman, and then I am through. If this property came within the provisions of the captured and abandoned property act, a forum was provided where the claimant could have obtained judgment against the Government for the value of the property; but it did not come within the provisions of that act. The facts reported by the Court of Claims do not show that the proceeds of this property were ever covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LYNCH. Was the property either captured or abandoned?

Mr. SPRINGER. It was not, within the provisions of that act. It was simply taken in the midst of war. This report does not disclose where the property went, or what was done with it, or whether the proceeds of it went into the Treasury of the United States, does it?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, yes; it shows what was done with the property.

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not show that the proceeds were ever covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then unless it can be shown that it was paid into the Treasury there is no pretense, even, of a right of recovery against the United States. If the property was simply stolen or gotten out of the way by some mysterious jugglery and the Government did not come into the possession of it and the proceeds were not covered into the Treasury, and if the fact does not appear that the proceeds were covered into the Treasury, then I say there is no pretense, even, of a right of recovery against the United States. This is a bill for nearly $100,000. That is a large sum of money, and if the Treasury had received it the books of the Treasury would show that fact, and the claimant could point to the books and show that the money was in the Treasury. If he could do that he would have some claim, but if he can not do that he has none.

This is not a question of further adjudication; it is the appropriation of an amount of money for this claim to be paid out of the Treasury on the assumption that the Government got the proceeds of that property, although there is no proof whatever that the Government ever got a cent of it.

Mr. LYNCH. Part of the property was destroyed by fire.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then we would not be liable. Under the captured and abandoned property act we are liable for nothing except the proceeds that have come into the Treasury of the United States. If gentlemen will show that any of the proceeds of this property went into the Treasury, then they will have some claim upon the Government, but without it they have none.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the words "ninety-six thousand one hundred and ninety-two dollars" and inserting "sixty-six thousand eight hundred and eighty-three dollars and fifty cents."

Mr. LANHAM. I believe we have under consideration by agreement the Senate bill, which proposes to appropriate in payment of this claim the sum of $96,192. It seems to be conceded by gentlemen who have expressed their legal views on this subject that the Government is liable for so much of this property as was converted to its use after the necessity for its use for military purposes had ceased. By adopting the amendment which I have offered, this bill will conform to a bill which was reported in the Forty-ninth Congress by a majority of the Committee on War Claims. I find in their report this statement:

Now, allowing to the claimants their portion of the amount saved, to wit, one hundred and seventy-eight bales at the price fixed by the court, makes the sum which your committee think should be allowed the claimants.

It seems that upon investigation the Committee on War Claims in the Forty-ninth Congress believed that the Government was liable for one hundred and seventy-eight bales of cotton, which, at the rate found by the Court of Claims, would make the sum of $66,883.50, the sum named in the amendment I have just sent to the desk.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire again to seek unanimous consent that debate be closed on this bill. If an agreement can not be reached by unanimous consent, I shall move that the committee rise in order that debate may be limited in the House.

Mr. WARNER. I would like a few minutes to reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] in regard to the case of Dr. Best, from the State of Kentucky.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman please indicate how much time he desires.

Mr. WARNER. Say ten minutes, at the outside.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and the pending amendment be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Let there be ten minutes on each side.

Mr. LANHAM. I am willing to accept that proposition.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Before that question is decided I wish to make a statement. I do not desire any time for myself; I have no wish to discuss the question further. In my opinion the proper course with reference to this bill (because the principles which underlie it are as important as any that will come before this House) would be to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report it at an early day. In that way we should be able to settle definitely the law on this question which will reach a thousand other cases coming before this House.

Mr. LANHAM. It is not necessary to make that proposition now. That can come in as a separate motion at a suitable time.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I understand that the gentleman's amendment rests on a calculation which takes for its basis 218 bales of cotton instead of 178.

Mr. LANHAM. No, sir; 178 bales, which, estimating 501 pounds to the bale, would make $66,883.50.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That was the amount named in the majority report in the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I merely wish to say that I am in favor of paying one or two items embraced in this claim, but I desire that the bill go over until we can ascertain exactly what should properly be paid. I do not object to the proposition to limit further debate to ten minutes on a side, but I shall not consent that this bill be passed to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition that debate on this bill and the pending amendment be closed in twenty minutes, ten minutes to be allowed on each side? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to control the time.

Mr. WARNER. Possibly we are both on the same side, although an imaginary line divides us.

Mr. LANHAM. It is not material to me how the time is occupied; but I want the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE] to have five minutes.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that some general law should be passed to meet all these cases. When I came into the Forty-ninth Congress I was innocent enough to believe it possible to accomplish that purpose. I spent many a day and many a week in the framing of a bill looking to that end, and in the preparation of a very elaborate report showing the injuries done to claimants from lack of such a measure. I was able once to get that bill before the House for consideration, but it was talked to death so effectually that it was never resurrected.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think that bill ever contemplated the consideration of war claims.

Mr. WARNER. Yes, sir; as finally amended it included the consideration of war claims.

Sir, I wish to say, in reference to the veto by General Grant of the Dr. Best claim, of Paducah, Ky., that while my admiration for General Grant and my respect for his judgment are equal to those of the gentleman from Illinois or any other man on this floor, I hold in my hand the able report of Senator Howe opposed to the veto, but in the limited time allowed me will not undertake to read the report made by Senator Howe on behalf of the Committee on Claims of the Forty-second Congress on the veto of General Grant. This report was made by Judge Howe, then a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, giving the law which governs in such cases. I challenge any gentleman on the floor to refute it. He cites all the leading writers on the law of nations and he cites also the Supreme Court of the United States as carrying out the principles he lays down.

Judge Howe says the committee has not found any such general principles affirmed as have been contended for either in international or municipal law. Let me read from the report:

A general principle of both international and municipal law, that all property is held subject not only to be taken by the Government for public uses, in which case, under the Constitution of the United States, the owner is entitled to just compensation, but also subject to be temporarily occupied or even actually destroyed, in times of great personal danger and when the public safety demands it; and in this latter case governments do not admit a legal obligation on their part to compensate the owner.

Among the text-writers, Vattel discusses the very question, "Is the state bound to indemnify individuals for the damage they have sustained in war?" "Such damages," he says, "are of two kinds; those done by the state itself, or the sovereign, and those done by the enemy. Of the first kind some are done deliberately and by way of precaution, as when a field, a house, a garden belonging to a private person is taken for the purpose of erecting on the spot a town rampart or any other piece of fortification, or when his standing corn or his store-houses are destroyed to prevent their being of use to the enemy. Such damages are to be made good to the individual, who should bear only his quota of the loss."

The same author speaks of damages caused by inevitable necessity, and he instances "the destruction caused by the artillery in retaking a town from an enemy. These are merely accidents. They are misfortunes which chance deals out to the proprietors on whom they happen to fall."

* * * * * * *

The state has an eminent right of property over the goods of the subjects, so that the state, or those that represent it, may make use of them, and even destroy and alienate them, not only in extreme necessity, but for the public benefit, to which we must add that the state is obliged to repair the damages suffered by any subject on that account out of the public stock.

This report cites a case of damage during the Revolutionary war which was paid for. In 1784 a resolution was adopted, from which the following is an extract:

That it be referred to the several States, at their own expense, to grant such relief to their citizens who may have been injured as aforesaid as they may think requisite; and if it shall hereafter appear reasonable that the United States should make any allowance to any particular State which may be burdened much beyond others, that the allowance ought to be determined by Congress.

In accordance with that resolution, when, in 1818, Mary Brower and others petitioned for compensation to be made to them for property burned and destroyed on Long Island by the American army on the advance of the British forces in August, 1776, the Committee on Revolutionary Claims of the House denied the prayer, not upon the ground that compensation should not be made, but upon the express ground that the sufferers ought to have appealed to the State of New York for such compensation. And notwithstanding the resolution of 1784 Congress did pass an act for the relief of an academy in Wilmington, of which the following is a copy:

"That, as an indemnification to the corporation of trustees of the public grammar school and academy of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, for the use and occupation of the said school, and the damages done to the same by the troops of the United States during the late war, there be granted to the said corporation of trustees a reasonable compensation, payable out of any unappropriated money in the Treasury of the United States, which compensation shall be ascertained by the accounting officers of the Treasury."

Here is another case, on the Potomac:

An appropriation was made to William H. Washington to compensate him for a house situate near the west end of the Potomac bridge, and which was "destroyed by order of an officer of the United States." The facts of the case, briefly stated, were that a corporal was placed in charge of the house, containing a quantity of public stores, with directions from his superior officer to blow up the house in case of an attack by the enemy. Hearing guns fired on the opposite side of the river, he apprehended an attack, and accordingly blew up the stores. The committee reported that, being of opinion "the officer to whose care the public stores were committed thought it prudent and proper to destroy the house and stores to prevent the latter from coming into the possession of the enemy, the petitioner should be paid the value of his house." He was paid accordingly.

I will append, if there be no objection, the entire report to these remarks, and I ask for its careful consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER. The full report of Judge Howe is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to which was referred the message of the President of the United States, of June 1, 1872, returning to the Senate without his approval "An act for the relief of J. Milton Best," having considered the same, ask leave to submit the following report:

The objections of the President are not based upon the ground that the act is unconstitutional or that it was inconsiderately passed. Neither of those objections could be well urged against it. The constitutional authority of Congress to provide for the payment of a private claim can not well be denied by any one. That the act in question was passed upon due and upon careful deliberation will not be denied by any one familiar with its history.

The bill was first reported to the Senate from the Committee on Claims on the 15th of March, 1870. It was debated on the 26th of April, the 12th and 14th days of December, 1870, and on the the 4th and 5th days of January, 1871. On the last-mentioned day it passed the Senate, upon a call of the yeas and nays, by a vote of 28 to 15. It failed to pass the House of Representatives during that Congress. It was again reported to the Senate during the present Congress, and on the 8th of April, 1872, it was again briefly debated, and passed by a vote of 27 to 12. In the House of Representatives it was considered on the 8th of May following, when, after a brief debate, it passed the House without a division.

Some statesmen and some jurists have maintained that the proper use of the veto power was limited to the cases of unconstitutional and rash legislation. But the text of the Constitution as well as the usage of the Government sanctions a broader use of the power.

There can be no doubt that the President may interpose his veto to the passage of any bill, however constitutional it may be, and however maturely it may have been considered by the legislature; and there can be no doubt that when he does interpose his veto it can only be overcome by the concurrence of two-thirds of each House of Congress. Thus, in our governmental system, the negative of the President countervails the vote of one-sixth of each House of Congress. With the assent of the President a majority of each House can enact a law. Against his dissent two-thirds are required to enact a law.

Since, therefore, the Executive veto paralyzes so large a portion of the Legislature, it would seem that it ought not to be interposed but upon substantial and well-considered grounds. And it would seem quite evident that if the Executive assumes the task, with the help of seven Secretaries, of reconsidering the expediency of all the laws which Congress matures, with the aid of all of its committees and all its members, while he may sometimes correct mistakes, he may also sometimes make mistakes.

The principal objection urged against the act is that it provides for a claim arising on account of the ravages of war. The message states the circumstances under which the claim arose, as follows:

"The bill appropriates the sum of $25,000 to compensate Dr. J. Milton Best for the destruction of his dwelling-house and its contents, by order of the commanding officer of the United States military forces at Paducah, Ky., on the 26th day of March, 1864.

"It appears that this house was one of a considerable number destroyed for the purpose of giving open range to the guns of a United States fort. On the day preceding the destruction, the houses had been used as a cover for rebel troops attacking the fort; and, apprehending a renewal of the attack, the commanding officer caused the destruction of the houses."

This destruction the President calls the "ravages of war." That in some sense it was the ravages of war can not well be denied. That in the same sense, the forage and subsistence consumed, the powder burned, the balls fired the shells exploded, the guns burst, were the ravages of war, can not be denied. But the Government has never yet denied its obligation to make compensation for all such ravages.

In the opinion of the committee the house taken from the claimant was taken for the use of the Government. It was torn down and not occupied because the destruction of the house was deemed more advantageous to the Government than the occupation of it would be. At the same time its destruction was more injurious to the claimant than its occupation could have been. And since the Government made that disposition of the house which was most beneficial to the Government and most detrimental to the owner, it is difficult to see why the claimant should not be compensated for its destruction as much as for its occupation. The message asserts, as "a general principle of both international and municipal law, that all property is held subject not only to be taken by the Government for public uses, in which case, under the Constitution of the United States, the owner is entitled to just compensation, but also subject to be temporarily occupied, or even actually destroyed, in times of great personal danger and when the public safety demands it; and in this latter case governments do not admit a legal obligation on their part to compensate the owner."

The committee has not found any such general principle affirmed either in international or municipal law, but has found the very reverse of that to be affirmed by all law, international and municipal.

Among the text writers, Vattel discusses the very question, "Is the state bound to indemnify individuals for the damage they have sustained in war?" "Such damages," he says, "are of two kinds: those done by the state itself, or the sovereign, and those done by the enemy. Of the first kind some are done deliberately and by way of precaution, as when a field, a house, a garden, belonging to a private person, is taken for the purpose of erecting on the spot a town rampart or any other piece of fortification, or when his standing corn or his store-houses are destroyed to prevent their being of use to the enemy. Such damages are to be made good to the individual, who should bear only his quota of the loss."

The same author speaks of damages caused by inevitable necessity, and he instances "the destruction caused by the artillery in retaking a town from an enemy. These are merely accidents. They are misfortunes which chance deals out to the proprietors on whom they happen to fall."

The distinction between the two kinds of damages is clear; one is the result of accident, the other is the result of design. The sovereign, clothed with the right to make war, has the right to march troops and fire guns. Damages which are the accidental result of such lawful acts do not constitute a ground of claim. But whatever property the Government takes from its own obedient subjects for the more efficient prosecution of the war should be compensated for, no matter whether it be forage fed to the cavalry horses, powder burned, timber used on fortifications, houses removed to make way for such fortifications, or houses destroyed to make them more secure.

Grotius asserts the same doctrine. He says:

"The king may in two ways deprive his subjects of their right—either by way of punishment or by virtue of his eminent power; but if he do so in the last way, it must be for some public advantage, and then the subject ought to receive, if possible, a just satisfaction for the loss he suffers out of the common stock."

Again he says:

"The state has an eminent right of property over the goods of the subjects, so that the state or those that represent it may make use of them, and even destroy and alienate them, not only in extreme necessity, but for the public benefit, to which we must add that the state is obliged to repair the damages suffered by any subject on that account out of the public stock."

Mr. William Whiting has discussed the subject of war-claims with direct reference to the liabilities of the United States growing out of the late war. He writes with extreme caution, but even he asserts that—

"If the private property of loyal citizens, inhabitants of loyal States, is appropriated by our military forces for the purpose of supplying our armies and to aid in prosecuting hostilities against a public enemy, the Government is bound to give a reasonable compensation therefor to the owner."

Again he says:

"When individuals are called upon to give up what is their own for the advantage of the community, justice requires that they should be fairly compensated for it. Otherwise public burdens would be shared unequally."

Again he says:

"Public use does not require that the property taken shall be actually used. It may be disused, removed, or destroyed, and destruction of private property may be the best public use it can be put to. Suppose a bridge owned by a private corporation to be so located as to endanger our forts upon the banks of a river. To demolish that bridge for military purposes would be to appropriate it to public use."

Dr. Best's house was so located as to endanger Fort Anderson. For that reason it was demolished by military authority That demolition Mr. Whiting declares to have been a public use. If so, the Constitution imperatively requires that the public shall make compensation for it. Judicial authority is not less explicit than that of the text-writers.

In Grant vs. the United States (1 N. & H. Reports) the court says:

"It may safely be assumed as the settled and fundamental law of Christian and civilized states that governments are bound to make just indemnity to the citizen or subject whenever private property is taken for the public good, convenience, or safety."

In that case the United States was held to pay for the property destroyed in Arizona, merely to prevent it from falling into the hands of the enemy.

In the case of Mitchell vs. Harmony, reported in 13 Howard, page 115, Chief-Justice Taney, delivering the opinion of the court, says:

"There are, without doubt, occasions in which private property may occasionally be taken possession of or destroyed to prevent it from falling into the hands of the public enemy; and also where a military officer charged with a particular duty may impress private property into the public service or take it for public use. Unquestionably, in such cases, the Government is bound to make full compensation to the owner."

If, as the above authorities declare, the state must pay for the property of a citizen destroyed to prevent it from falling into the hands of an enemy, à fortiori should the State pay for property destroyed to prevent a garrison from falling into the hands of an enemy.

Justice Randolph, in the case of The American Print Works vs. Lawrence, 1 Zabriskie, 248, says that in—

"Cases where the state, by virtue of its right of eminent domain, reserves the property of a citizen and appropriates it to the use of the public; or in prosecuting some great public work, such as a canal or railroad, even in its sovereign capacity, or through the power delegated to an incorporated company, finds it necessary not merely to take the soil and property of the citizen, but to destroy his mill-seat, divert his water-course, or commit other irreparable damage to private rights in order to effect the great object in view, in such case not only must private rights yield to the interest and wishes of the state, but it is a positive evil suffered by an individual for the supposed gain of the whole community, at the will of that community, and upon every principle of justice the public should make compensation."

The uniform action of Congress has been in strict accord with the principles adjudicated by the courts and declared by the commentators. Congress has recognized the principle in a great variety of cases, and so far as can be discovered has never denied it. The war of the Revolution was fought before we had any constitutional prohibition against taking private property for public use without compensation. The troops for that war were furnished by the several States. Congress did not assume the obligation of making compensation for property taken by the military authority; but it clearly recognized the principle that compensation should be made. Accordingly, in 1784, a resolution was adopted from which the following is an extract:

"That it be referred to the several States at their own expense, to grant such relief to their citizens, who may have been injured as aforesaid, as they may think requisite, and if it shall hereafter appear reasonable that the United States should make any allowance to any particular State, which may be burdened much beyond others, that the allowance ought to be determined by Congress."

In accordance with that resolution, when, in 1818, Mary Brower and others petitioned for compensation to be made to them for property burned and destroyed on Long Island by the American Army on the advance of the British forces in August, 1776, the Committee on Revolutionary Claims of the House denied the prayer, not upon the ground that compensation should not be made, but upon the express ground that the sufferers ought to have appealed to the State of New York for such compensation. And notwithstanding the resolution of 1784 Congress did pass an act for the relief of an academy in Wilmington, of which the following is a copy:

"That, as an indemnification to the corporation of trustees of the public grammar school and academy of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, for the use and occupation of the said school, and the damages done to the same by the troops of the United States during the late war, there be granted to the said corporation of trustees a reasonable compensation, payable out of any unappropriated money in the Treasury of the United States, which compensation shall be ascertained by the accounting officers of the Treasury."

The relief granted by that resolution was recommended by Alexander Hamilton, then Secretary of the Treasury.

Subsequent to the war with Great Britain of 1812, a large number of claims for similar injuries were compensated by Congress. Reference is made to a few.

An appropriation was made to William H. Washington to compensate him for a house situate near the west end of the Potomac bridge, and which was "destroyed by order of an officer of the United States." The facts of the case, briefly stated, were that a corporal was placed in charge of the house, containing a quantity of public stores, with directions from his superior officer to blow up the house in case of an attack by the enemy. Hearing guns fired on the opposite side of the river, he apprehended an attack, and accordingly blew up the stores. The committee reported that, being of opinion "the officer to whose care the public stores were committed thought it prudent and proper to destroy the house and stores, to prevent the latter from coming into the possession of the enemy, the petitioner should be paid the value of his house." He was paid accordingly.

Jacob Shinnick was the owner of a rope-walk in Baltimore. It was destroyed by General Smith, commanding at that post. He states the circumstances attending its destruction as follows:

"That rope-walk and two others were so close to the works that, had they remained, and an attack been made by the enemy, they would have afforded such a cover as would have enabled him to have approached close to the works undiscovered. It became necessary to destroy them. Nor did I give the discretionary power to General Forman until the attack of the enemy appeared certain. Their destruction was postponed as long as prudence permitted, nor were they destroyed until it became absolutely and indispensably necessary."

The committee reported "that the destruction of the rope-walks was deemed by the commanding officer prudent and necessary in the defense of the city of Baltimore, then threatened to be invaded by a merciless and vindictive enemy. They are therefore of opinion that the public good, in his opinion, requiring their destruction, the owners of the property should be compensated to the amount of its value."

The principle applied in the case of Mr. Shinnick is precisely the principle employed in the case of Mr. Best. An attack was believed to be imminent in Baltimore, as an attack was believed to be imminent in Paducah. If an attack had been made in Baltimore the rope-walk would have supplied a cover to the enemy. If an attack had been made in Paducah, Best's house would have furnished a cover to the enemy. In order to deprive the enemy of that shelter, both the rope-walk and the house were destroyed. It is impossible to say that a house is not as much within the protection of the Constitution as a rope-walk. It is impossible to say that Paducah is not as much within the protection of the Constitution as Baltimore. It is impossible to say that Dr. Best is not as much within the protection of the Constitution as Mr. Shinnick. Congress has repeatedly recognized the same principle in acting upon claims growing out of the late war.

In 1867 an act was passed to pay J. O. Armes for a house destroyed in Fairfax County, Virginia. That house was destroyed, as the committee reported, by military orders, and to prevent its being used by the enemy as a cover for attack, and also as a point for observation. That act was approved by President Johnson.

In 1871 Congress passed an act making compensation to the Kentucky University for buildings destroyed. The buildings were taken by military authority. They were destroyed by accident; but if the Government is required to make compensation for buildings taken and then destroyed by accident, it is difficult to see why it should not pay for buildings taken and then destroyed by design. That act was approved by President Grant.

In 1870 Congress passed an act to pay Otis N. Cutler $50,000 for cotton taken by military authority to pack the machinery of the steamer Tigris, to enable her the more securely to run the rebel batteries at Vicksburg. The boat and the cotton were sunk on the trip. That cotton was taken by military authority. It was destroyed by the rebels. But if the Government must pay for property taken by its Army and then destroyed by the enemy, it would seem it ought to pay for property taken by its Army and then destroyed by itself. That act was approved by President Grant. The papers in the case show that he examined its merits while acting as Secretary of War, and that although he refused to pay the claim for want of authority, he prononnced it "meritorious," and referred the claim to Congress.

One other legislative precedent is worthy of notice. The case of Mitchell vs. Harmony has already been referred to. In that case the property of the plaintiff was taken by military authority. As a consequence of the taking, the goods fell into the hands of the enemy. The courts held that the taking was unnecessary, and therefore required the officer in command to make compensation for the loss of the goods. But Congress held that inasmuch as the officer acted in good faith, and for what he believed to be the interests of the Government, the Government ought to protect him against the consequences of his mistake. Congress, therefore, assumed the defense of the officer before the Supreme Court, and when judgment was finally rendered against him assumed the payment of it.

To the foregoing precedents a great many might be added. Not a single case has been found in which Congress has denied the liability assumed in the precedents cited. Not a single authority has been found controverting the principle asserted by Grotius, by Vattel, by Whiting, by the Court of Claims, and by the Supreme Court of the United States.

If the doctrine of the message be examined in the light of examples drawn from other countries, the contrast is still more violent. During the war of the Revolution most of the colonists who adhered to the Crown, and were therefore known as loyalists, were made to suffer heavily because of their loyalty. The insurgent authorities drove them from their homes and confiscated their estates. The war terminated in the triumph of the Insurgents. At once the despoiled loyalists appealed to Parliament for indemnification for their losses. A commission was appointed to inquire into the extent of such losses. The "claimants were required to state in proper form every species of loss which they had suffered, and for which they thought they had a right to receive compensation."

None of the injuries complained of were inflicted by the Government of Great Britain. They were inflicted by the action of its enemies. In principle their claims were precisely the same as the claims of our loyal citizens would be if they were to demand compensation of this Government for injuries sustained, not through its action, but through the action of its late enemies. Nevertheless, for such claims Parliament undertook to make compensation, and after a long and careful examination of the claims, appropriated a sum for their settlement amounting, in the aggregate, to more than $16,000,000.

In September, 1871, immediately upon the close of the Franco-German war, France, although defeated and subjected to the payment of a fine of 3,000,000,000 francs to her conquerors, did not ask to avoid the obligation of making compensation to her despoiled subjects. Accordingly the national assembly provided not only for the payment of all private damages inflicted by the French authorities, but also for the repayment of all exactions made upon French subjects in the name of taxes by the German authorities. The same decree appropriated 100,000,000 francs to be placed at once in the hands of the ministers of the interior and of finance, to be apportioned between the most necessitous victims of the war, and appropriated a further sum of 6,000,000 francs to be distributed by the same ministers "among those who suffered the most in the operations attending the attack made by the French army to gain entrance into Paris." A translation of the whole decree is appended to this report.

The President urges, in support of extreme caution, "that the payment of this claim would invite the presentation of demands for very large sums of money, and such is the supposed magnitude of the claims that may be made against the Government for necessary and unavoidable destruction of property by the Army that I deem it proper to return this bill for consideration."

To this it may be replied that the act passed for the relief of Dr. Best does not provide for the payment of property unavoidably destroyed. On the contrary, it clearly discriminates against and disclaims liability for such payment. The injury done to Best's house by firing upon it while in possession of the enemy, was deemed to be unavoidable. For such injury the Committee on Claims held the Government was not obliged to make compensation. What the committee deemed to be the amount of such damages it deducted from the claim, and only reported for payment that which was supposed to be equal to the value of the property which was deliberately destroyed by the military authorities to promote the security of the garrison.

It may be replied, secondly, that if the principle involved in the bill be just, and be, as has been seen, in accordance with the commands of all law and of all precedent, the Government can not be excused from making payment to Dr. Best because of the weight of the burdens such payments would impose upon the Treasury. If it took the last dollar of the Republic to pay such claims, not one of her citizens would be reduced thereby to more abject want than Dr. Best was by the destruction of his house and its contents. The testimony in the case shows that when his house was destroyed he was stripped of everything in the shape of property except the site on which it stood.

Hugo Grotius wrote his treatise upon the "Rights of War" amidst the unparalleled barbarities which attended the thirty-years' war. It is doubtful if war between civilized nations ever before or ever since has been so cruel as that. In the single "Duchy of Wurtemberg, history asserts that eight towns, forty-five villages, and thirty-six thousand houses had been laid in ashes, and seventy thousand hearth-fires completely extinguished; seven churches and four hundred and forty-four houses had been burned at Eichsted. Many towns that had escaped destruction were almost depopulated; three hundred houses stood empty at Nordheim; more than two hundred had been pulled down at Gottingen, merely to serve as fuel. The wealthy city of Augsburg, which contained eighty thousand inhabitants before the war, had only eighteen thousand left when it closed. * * * In 1635 there were not hands enough left at Schweidnitz to bury the dead, and the town of Ohlau had lost its last citizen. * * * Forests sprang up during the contest and covered entire districts which had been in full cultivation before the war, and wolves and other beasts of prey took possession of the deserted haunts of men."

Yet standing in the midst of such widespread, unsparing devastation, Grotius did not hesitate to affirm, in the language already quoted, the obligation of the state to repair all damages suffered by any subject by the destruction of his property for its use, and he added this most significant injunction: "Neither shall the state be absolved from this obligation though for the present not able to satisfy it. But whenever the state is in a capacity, this suspended obligation shall resume its force."

In the light of such stern teachings, he who regards law or loves justice will be reluctant to see a loyal citizen reduced by the deliberate act of his Government to absolute destitution and then turned away from the full tills of the Treasury which carry from year to year unused millions, a single year's interest on which would compensate for every injury coming within the principle of Dr. Best's claim. There is no warrant for believing that the principle recognized by the returned bill would involve the Treasury in large disbursements. It has already been seen that the bill establishes no new precedent. Congress has already paid several claims resting upon precisely the same principle. It has voted to pay every such claim which has been presented.

From the foundations of the Government it can not be discovered that Congress has ever refused to pay a similar claim. If, as some profess to apprehend, similar claims for millions await payment, the question arises, Where are they? During the eleven years which have transpired since the late war commenced, the whole amount of claims of every kind, recommended for payment by the Senate Committee on Claims, excluding those reported from the claims commission, will fall considerably below a million. An examination made upon this point in January, 1871, disclosed the fact that but $555,651.55 had at that date been paid since the close of the war. That sum included $109,000 paid to one firm for property sold, the proceeds of which had been placed in the Treasury, and it included $60,000 appropriated to another individual for legal-tender notes which had been destroyed. So at that date it appeared, and was stated on the floor of the Senate, that the Treasury had not been made poorer by the action of the Committee on Claims to an amount exceeding $400,000.

When we consider the magnitude and the duration of the war through which we have passed; when we consider the munificent appropriations made by France to her subjects, no one of whom could have suffered more from deprivation of property than Dr. Best has suffered; when we consider that Great Britain appropriated to the few loyalists who adhered to her cause during the Revolution more than $16,000,000, the meager appropriations hitherto made by Congress seem quite inconsiderable, and suggest an apprehension to the candid mind that the Government may have done less than justice instead of more than justice.

In conclusion, upon this point, the committee respectfully submit that no claim ever was or ever can be preferred against the Government resting upon more impregnable grounds. All just claims against the Government must be urged upon one or more of three grounds—either that the claimant has benefited the Government, or that he has been damaged by the Government, or that he has been promised money by the Government. But a promise is of slight validity if it be unsupported by a consideration, either of benefit to the promisor or of loss to the promisee. Where such consideration does exist, a promise adds nothing to the obligation to pay. In the case of Dr. Best, his claim is supported both by the consideration of loss to him and of benefit to the Government. He was injured by being deprived of all he possessed. The Government was benefited by the additional security afforded to a weak and imperiled garrison. No promise could add validity to such a claim.

The message suggests a doubt as to the reasonableness of the appropriation made to Doctor Best. It furnishes no evidence upon that point. In estimating the value of the house destroyed, the committee were guided originally by the testimony of those who built the house. Since the reference of the veto message, the claimant has submitted to the committee plans of the building, verified by the affidavit of John V. Gould, city engineer of the city of Paducah. The plans disclose a building 52 feet in width by 40 feet in depth and three stories in height, besides the attic; that the first story was 8 feet high, the second story 15 feet, and the third 13 feet; that it was built upon stone foundations laid in hydraulic cement, 4 feet deep and 2 feet thick; that it had twenty-six paneled doors, six of which were of large size; that it had twenty-six windows of the largest size, besides side-lights to the doorways; that it had twenty-six pairs of window-shutters, twelve fire-places with mantels and grates, eight hearths which were formed and laid of iron slabs, each slab being 4 feet wide by 7 feet long; that it had four flights of stairs; that its roof was covered with copper and sheet-iron.

It seems to have been a large and substantial brick house, elegantly finished. Six witnesses testify that the house, with its contents, was worth over $27,000. The character of the witnesses is attested by the collector of the port. Yet, if the building was worth but half the sum at which the witnesses estimate its value, the appropriation of $25,000 now will scarcely make the claimant whole.

The committee, therefore, report back the bill, and recommend its passage, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

[Official journal of the French Republic, Versailles, September 11, 1871.]

The National Assembly has adopted. The president of the French Republic promulgates the law, the tenor of which is as follows:

Considering that, during the late war, the portion of the territory invaded by the enemy bore exactions and suffered devastations without number; that the sense of patriotism which animates the heart of the French people enjoins upon the government the duty of indemnifying those who have, in the common conflict, undergone these exceptional privations. The national assembly, without intending to depart from the principles laid down in the law of July 10, 1791, and the decree of August 10, 1853, decree:

ARTICLE I. An indemnification will be allowed to all those who have borne, during the invasion, the contributions of war, requisitions either in money or in kind, fines, and material damages.

ART. 2. These contributions, requisitions, fines, and damages will be verified and estimated by the cantonal commissions who act for the time being under the direction of the minister of the interior. A departmental commission will revise the labor of the cantonal commissions and fix the definite sum total of the losses proven. This commission will be composed of the préfet, president, four counsellors-general designated by the council-general, and of four representatives of the ministers of the interior and finances.

ART. 3. When the extent of the losses shall have been thus verified, a law will fix the sum the state of the public treasury will permit to be appropriated for their indemnification, and determine the distribution of the same.

A sum of one hundred millions will be immediately placed at the disposition of the minister of the interior and of the minister of finances, and apportioned between the departments pro rata, according to the losses respectively proven, to be distributed by the préfet, assisted by a commission appointed by the council-general and taken from its number, between the most necessitous victims of the war and the communes the most involved in debt. This first allowance will be part of the sum total assigned to each department to be distributed among all the claimants.

ART. 4. A sum of 6,000,000 francs is placed equally at the disposition of the ministers of the finances and of the interior, to be, without further legislative enactment, distributed among those who suffered the most in the operations attending the attack made by the French army to gain re-entrance into Paris.

ART. 5. Independently of the preceding provisions, the contributions in money, collected under the title of taxes by the German authorities, will be settled as follows:

SEC. 1. The communes that have paid any sums under the title of taxes will be reimbursed their advances by the treasury.

SEC. 2. The tax-payers who will prove payment of any sum under the same title, either into the hands of the Germans, or to the French municipal authorities, will be permitted to apply the whole sum on account of their contributions for 1870 and 1871. They will be required to produce their vouchers within the period of a month.

SEC. 3. The settlement specified above will comprise:

1. The whole sum of the French direct tax.

2. The double of that tax, as showing the indirect taxes levied by the Prussians. All that which in the payments will exceed the direct tax doubled will be considered as simple contribution of war, and governed by the principles laid down in the preceding articles.

Deliberated in public sessions, at Versailles, July 3, August 8, and September 6, 1872.

F. LAMBRECHT.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything about this case, and I suppose it will be needless for me to say to this House that I am not a lawyer. But it does seem to me that every time a lawyer here undertakes to oppose a claim he covers it up with a mass of rubbish, and this case is now as effectually covered with rubbish as any one could possibly demand for the purpose of obscuring it. If gentlemen here can oppose a case by bringing in something about opening the flood-gates and establishing a precedent, then they have done something which they think will be gratifying to their constituents, and which will delay Congress in the consideration of measures of this kind; and whatever injustice it may do to individual claimants will, at all events, have the merit of saving the public Treasury and the Government from paying its just debts.

There is no precedent, sir, established by such a case as this. It has not been argued by any person that there is a precedent established by it, should it become a law, which argument would have the effect of convincing anybody. But there are precedents in favor of its payment. You have paid hundreds of cases exactly like it.

It is a case pure and simple of stores and supplies. You have passed them here by hundreds and paid for rails and trees and brush and rock that were taken and put into breastworks. This cotton was taken and applied to the construction of breastworks. The claim as set forth by the Court of Claims is for stores and supplies—engineer's supplies to build breastworks. The claimant was willing to take his cotton back after the necessity for its use in the fortifications had ceased, as a full reimbursement, and asked the Government to give it to him, claiming nothing for its use, but the Government, as in the case of the rails and timbers to which I have referred, and used for building fortifications in places held by it, refused to return the cotton, but took charge of it preparatory to shipping it away.

It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that when we use the word "cotton" here in this House in reference to any pending claim, there are some gentlemen who become just as much excited as a bull does when a red flag is shaken in his face. This claim does not differ in any particular from claims for rails and timber used in fortifications. It is for stores and supplies and nothing else. The Court of Claims took cognizance and jurisdiction of the case as a case of stores and supplies and have so adjudicated it, and we have paid hundreds of just such cases, and it is not a precedent, but it is following a precedent that has already been followed in many other cases by the Government.

Personally I care nothing whatever about it; I have no interest in it, but when gentlemen talk about the time of the House being taken up in the consideration of private claims they are the very men themselves who have occupied time by fighting the payment of just claims.

They are the men who are preventing any general law being passed here, so that anybody who has a claim could file his claim before the court and have attention given to it and prompt action upon it. I hope then that this rubbish will all be taken off, that we will quit talking about captured and abandoned property, which has nothing to do with this case, and take the case up as it is, for stores and supplies clear and plain, and go on with something else instead of tying up the claims of hundreds of other people who are justly and equitably entitled to relief.

That is all there is in the case. Now, let the members of this House and of this committee look at the case in its proper light.

Talk about "lobbies" in claims cases; why, sir, I am told that there has been a lobby here opposing this case, and it looks like it was going to be effectual—the object being to blackmail the claimant by hindering the passage of this bill until a contract is made paying the lobbyists a large sum of money after the allowance of the claim.

Mr. LANHAM. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. Has the time allowed for debate on this bill expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed in favor of the bill has expired, but there remain ten minutes in opposition to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not intend to say anything further upon the question, but after the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, which, I presume, were intended to apply to me, it is proper that I should say a few words in addition to what I have already said.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I fired into the bush, and if the gentleman happened to get hit, it is all right. It is not my fault.

Mr. SPRINGER. Exactly——

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion to him, which I think may lead to an explanation which will be of service in considering this case?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. I have before me a case determined in the Supreme Court of the United States, decided in 13 Wallace, involving a question of the liability of the United States in cases such as this: a case where the two armies were approaching each other, being divided by a river, and the authorities of the United States took possession of some vessels and used them for the transportation of the troops. The Supreme Court held that the Government was liable for the vessels. If the gentleman will allow me to have this read, I would like to have an explanation of the difference between that case and the one now pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, I am very sorry the gentleman did not get his case in during the general debate——

Mr. BURROWS. Well, let me get it in now. I would like to have an explanation.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What case is that?

Mr. BURROWS. The case of Russell vs. The United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. What page?

Mr. BURROWS. Page 629.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will take some other opportunity of presenting that case.

Mr. BURROWS. It is only six or eight lines.

Mr. SPRINGER. If it is satisfactory to the gentleman it is satisfactory to me. If it convinces him how he should vote that is all that is necessary. He has read it. I do not care to read it.

Mr. BURROWS. If it is squarely against your position would you not like to know it?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am satisfied on this question.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask unanimous consent that I may have one minute to read this decision.

Mr. SPRINGER. Go on.

Mr. BURROWS. The court in that case say:

> The taking of private property by the Government when the emergency of the public service, in time of war or impending public danger, is too urgent to admit of delay, is everywhere regarded as justified, if the necessity for the use of the property is imperative and immediate and the danger as heretofore described is impending; and it is equally clear that the taking of such property under such circumstances creates an obligation on the part of the Government to reimburse the owner to the full value of the service. Private rights under such extreme and imperious circumstances must give way for the time to the public good, but the Government must make full restitution for the sacrifice.

Mr. LAIDLAW. That is sense.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the case?

Mr. BURROWS. Russell vs. The United States.

Mr. SPRINGER. Who gave the opinion?

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Justice Clifford.

Mr. WARNER. Chief-Justice Taney decided the same thing.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now the gentleman is through, I hope I will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BURROWS. I simply wanted that decision explained.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will explain by citing another decision, which is just as good as that, and which I have already cited, the decision of President Grant, acting for the Republican party and for the administration at that time, in which he said under similar circumstances the Government was not liable.

Mr. BURROWS. I did not know an appeal lay from the Supreme Court to President Grant.

Mr. SPRINGER. That decision has been followed by Congress ever since. It has been fortified by a long series of decisions in this House upon similar cases.

Mr. WARNER. Is this a party question?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not a party question.

Mr. WARNER. Is it a legal question?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is a legal question, sir.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want gentlemen on the other side to understand this case as it is. If they propose to vote for this bill I want them to put themselves on record for it, so that when the campaign opens they will not go before the people of the United States, lift up their hands in holy horror, and say, "See what rebel claims these brigadier-general rebel Democrats are passing through Congress."

Mr. WARNER. We will do that for you.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is very proper for the gentlemen on the other side to fix up cases on which to make party capital.

Mr. LYMAN. This is not a rebel claim. This claimant was a loyal man.

Mr. SPRINGER. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have used such claims for party purposes ever since the war closed.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPRINGER. No.

Mr. WARNER. Just one moment.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not yield all my time. The gentleman is so good-natured it would take adamant to resist him. But I must proceed. I can not yield. I want to say to gentlemen on the other side that there has never been a case voted upon by Congress, nor has anybody on this side ever proposed to pay a man a claim where the record showed he was disloyal during the war. So that all the talk on the other side of the House about rebel war claims goes for nothing. No man on this side of the House ever proposed to pay one of them. The contention has always been in regard to claims that arose in the midst of the war.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman does this as a matter of fact for political purposes, does he?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; I do not. But the gentlemen on the other side hope we will pay this claim and similar claims so that for political purposes they can make capital out of our action before their constituents.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That is not fair.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Have you ever favored the passage of any of these war claims?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have favored all those that come within the terms of the law, where the Government liability was clear.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to have you mention one single claim the passage of which you have favored.

Mr. WADE. We will have the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will give you the yeas and nays. There is no doubt but that this man was found to be loyal. There is no dispute about that. That is not the question at issue, and never has been. The question here is as to whether the Government got the benefit of this property. Is this a claim for property during the time of its use for breastworks? It is not. No claim is made for the use of the property during that time. It is for taking the property and converting it to the use of the Government. Where is the evidence that it was so converted? There was no evidence reported to show that a dollar of the proceeds of this property ever went into the Treasury of the United States. The case does not come within the provisions of the act relating to captured and abandoned property. The Government has not received the proceeds. It is not shown how the Government is responsible. Under the principle which has been recognized on both sides of this House from the very close of the war to the present time this measure is entirely inadmissible.

Mr. LANHAM. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for debate has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to further amend by adding at the end of the bill what I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing is in order but an amendment to the amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will be read, after which the Chair will pass upon it.

The amendment was read, as follows:

> Provided, however, That before said money shall be paid it shall be proven to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that the proceeds of the said cotton, to the amount above named, were covered into the Treasury or accounted for by the proper officer; but the sum paid said Perez Dickinson shall not exceed the sum so paid into the Treasury or accounted for.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; it is an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. LANHAM, and it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. LYMAN. Is debate in order on that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. LYMAN. I simply desire to say that it is not claimed that this money went into the Treasury.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 57.

Mr. BUCKALEW. No quorum.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that there is not a quorum present, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. HOUK. There is. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. I suggest that we fix a day when there is a full House to vote upon this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the bill be passed over, not losing its place on the Calendar.

Mr. WARNER. I suggest, if I can have the approval of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] and of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], that this bill be reported to the House, and then the same question can be raised there.

Mr. SPRINGER. No. Let it stay in the committee. If you get it into the House it will have no status, while it has a status in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that this bill be passed over, not to lose its place on the Calendar?

Mr. HOUK. I do not desire to obstruct other business, but after a man has struggled for twenty and odd years to collect a debt I certainly think he ought to have some sort of a fair chance to get his bill through. Let us report this bill to the House and order the previous question on it, and then it will have a status in the House and can be voted on when there is a full House.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object to the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]?

Mr. HOUK. You can have a yea-and-nay vote on the bill in the House when the time comes.

The CHAIRMAN. On the pending question there are ayes 23, noes 57.

Mr. BUCKALEW. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Are tellers demanded?

Mr. LANHAM. I do not believe there is a quorum in the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If no quorum has voted, the Chair ought to appoint tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr RICHARDSON] demands tellers. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be understood as demanding tellers. I simply say I understand that when the point of "no quorum" is made, the appointment of tellers follows as a matter of course.

Mr. BUCKALEW. When the friends of this bill, which is at the head of the Calendar, refuse to have it passed without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar, I make no further concession.

Mr. HOUK. I have not seen where the gentleman has made any concession to-day. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent that this bill be voted on two weeks from to-day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, and that the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. LANE and Mr. BUCKALEW objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK].

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. That proposition has been suggested.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over, not losing its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, the next bill on the Calendar is very similar to the one which has just been under consideration, and in view of the opposition which seems to exist here to this class of claims, in view of the fact that there is no quorum in the House, and also in view of the fact that we have now occupied about three hours in consideration of the case before us, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order from now on until the time fixed for adjournment to-day to call up bills out of the regular order by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRUMM. I object.

JOHN DE BREE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1798, Forty-ninth Congress) for the relief of John De Bree, executor of Margaret T. Higgins.

The CHAIRMAN. If no one calls for the consideration of this bill, it will be passed over.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I know something about this case, being very well acquainted with the family interested. It is a just claim; but the gentleman who has the matter immediately in charge appears to be absent, and therefore I will not insist on its consideration at this time.

Mr. LANHAM. I renew the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BRUMM. I shall object.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 1028) for the relief of Hiram Johnson and others.

Mr. ENLOE. I ask for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. ROWELL. This bill will meet with discussion and opposition.

Mr. ENLOE. I hope the gentleman will not object to its consideration——

Mr. ROWELL. It is an "old chestnut," and will be fought. A quorum will be required to pass it. In the Forty-eighth Congress I insisted upon a quorum in order to defeat it, and I am ready to do so again.

Mr. ENLOE. I hope the gentleman will not object to allowing it to be considered to-day, and a time set for a vote.

Mr. ROWELL. I will fight it by all the parliamentary means within my knowledge.

Several MEMBERS. Then let it go over.

The CHAIRMAN. If the consideration of the bill is not insisted upon, it will be passed over.

WILLIAM E. WOODBRIDGE.

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the Private Calendar, being the bill (H. R. 27) vesting the Court of Claims of the United States with jurisdiction to determine the rights of William E. Woodbridge to certain letters patent for a metallic sabot, and to render judgment in his favor for the use of the same by the Government during the war of 1861.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE], who reported this bill, is not here. I suggest, therefore, that the bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. That will be done, in the absence of any call for the consideration of the bill.

HEIRS OF JOHN H. NEWMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. CATCHINGS) was the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears of record that at its December term, 1874, the Court of Claims in the case of John H. Newman vs. The United States, No. 3162, rendered a judgment in favor of the said Newman for the proceeds of 50 bales of cotton, valued at $177.55 per bale, when under the proof the court adjudged that the claimant was entitled to the proceeds of 239 bales: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representatives of John H. Newman, deceased, late of the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, the sum of $32,679.20 balance due on account of captured cotton, as shown by the said judgment; and that said amount be paid out of the proceeds of captured and abandoned property now in the Treasury.

The report (by Mr. STOCKDALE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman, deceased, report back the same with recommendation that the bill do pass, and submit the following report:

Your committee have before them the record in this case from the files of the Court of Claims. The claimant there, John H. Newman, now dead, gave his power of attorney to B. D. Whitney "to sue for, demand, collect, and receipt for the proceeds of 250 bales of cotton taken from him by authorities of the United States, and the proceeds of which have been turned over to the Treasury Department." Under this power Whitney brought suit by his attorneys under the act of March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property, and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts of the United States," but by some oversight in the petition filed he asked for only 50 bales instead of 250 bales, and dated the taking July, 1864, instead of June, 1863. The ownership of the property, the taking and selling of the same, and the placing of the proceeds in the Treasury, as well as the loyalty of the claimant, were fully established to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims and of your committee; and Commissioner Eben Eveleth made the following report, which we take from a certified copy of "Consolidated copy of the reports of Commissioner Eveleth, filed May 24, 1875," page 11:

"John H. Newman vs. The United States. No. 3162.

"This action was brought to recover the proceeds of 50 bales of cotton, alleged to have been taken from the plantation of the claimant in Warren County, in the State of Mississippi, some time in the month of July, 1864, and sold by the officers of the Treasury Department.

"The proof shows that the plaintiff's plantation was situated in the county above mentioned, near Bovina, and 12 or 14 miles from the city of Vicksburg.

"That in June, 1863, the claimant had on his plantation about 100 bales of cotton in bales, and about 45 bales in lint and seed cotton. He had also transported from his plantation 100 bales of cotton for safety to the plantation of one Kidd, on the eastern bank of the Big Black River. The 100 bales of cotton on his plantation and the lot on the Kidd plantation were taken by Captain Schenck, an officer of the Quartermaster's Department on duty at the headquarters of General Osterhaus, then located at the railroad bridge at the Big Black River, in said county, and near the claimant's plantation. Said cotton was hauled to said headquarters.

"The evidence shows that afterwards some of this cotton was put on the cars and 'started towards Vicksburg;' some of it was hauled in wagons toward Vicksburg, and some of it was taken to the fortifications near the headquarters of General Osterhaus.

"The cotton in lint and seed was taken to a neighboring gin by an agent of the Treasury, where it was ginned and baled. From thence it was transported to Vicksburg by the Treasury agent.

"I find from the evidence that 245 bales of the claimant's cotton went into the Vicksburg cotton, and that he should be charged one-fourth for ginning and baling the 45 bales, or 11 bales, leaving 234 bales to the credit of the claimant.

"But inasmuch as he has claimed only 50 bales in his petition, he can be allowed out of the fund only for 50 bales. And therefore the claimant is entitled to judgment for the value of 50 bales of cotton, at the average rate per bale, payable out of the first fund—50 bales of cotton at $177.55½ per bale, $8,877.50.

"On May 24, 1875, the court made the following order: 'And it is further ordered that the engrossed and consolidated copy of the reports of the commissioner, as amended by this order filed herewith, stand as the findings of fact of the court.'"

This made the finding of Commissioner Eveleth the finding of the court, and the Supreme Court of the United States has held in the "intermingled cotton cases" (92 United States Reports, page 651), where the Court of Claims had adopted the finding of the commissioner, "that the judgments as rendered are the result of the deliberation of the court and not that of the commissioner alone." All the proof required by the Supreme Court of the United States (page 282, 92 Reports) of the claimant that the property "came into the hands of a Treasury agent; that it was sold; that the proceeds of the sale were paid into the Treasury of the United States; that he was the owner of the property and entitled to the proceeds thereof," has been made to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims and of your committee. The money which claimant asks is not the property of the United States, but a trust fund held for him. The United States occupies a strictly fiduciary relation to claimant, and never intended to divest him of his property, but by taking it constituted itself claimant's trustee (13 Wallace, page 128), and from this trust fund the bill provides that he shall be paid.

There is, in the judgment of this committee, neither law, reason, justice, nor policy in withholding this money claimed from its rightful owner, and we therefore urge the passage of the bill herewith reported, with an amendment as follows:

In line 8, strike out the words "said judgment," and insert in lieu thereof, "the opinion of the court in rendering said judgment."

Mr. CROUSE. I wish to inquire, Mr. Chairman, whether there is a minority report in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

The amendment reported by the Committee on War Claims was read, as follows:

In line 8 strike out "said judgment" and insert "the opinion of the court in rendering the said judgment."

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to amend by adding to the bill the proviso which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That a greater amount of money shall not be paid in satisfaction of this claim than the amount received and paid into the Treasury as proceeds of the sale of the cotton alleged to have been taken.

Mr. OATES. I suggest that the word "net" should be inserted in the gentleman's amendment before the word "proceeds."

Mr. CULBERSON. I modify my amendment in that way.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I wish to call the attention of the committee in the first place to the fact that this bill does not seek the payment from the Treasury of the United States of any fund belonging to the Government. It is simply an effort to restore to the claimant his own money, which was turned into the Treasury as proceeds of his cotton which was taken by the Government during the war and sold. It appears from the report in this case that Mr. John H. Newman, whose heirs are here as claimants, had taken from him 250 bales of cotton. Proof was made to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims that the cotton was taken, was sold by the Government, and that its proceeds found their way into the Treasury. The judgment of the Court of Claims, as well as the report of the committee, is clear upon the point that the decedent, whose heirs appeared before the committee, was loyal to the Government throughout the war. Upon the facts as I have just stated them I think all gentlemen will agree.

After the termination of the war Mr. Newman employed a Mr. Whitney, then an attorney representing such cases in Washington, to institute suit against the Government to recover the proceeds of this property. The power of attorney given to Mr. Whitney expressly authorized him to institute suit for 250 bales of cotton, but by carelessness on his part, absolutely inexcusable, and which has resulted in the greatest detriment to the claimant, suit was brought to recover the proceeds of only 50 bales, instead of 250 bales. When the case came on for hearing before the Court of Claims the court found as a matter of fact that the Government had seized and appropriated 250 bales of cotton, but held that inasmuch as the claimant had only sued for the proceeds of 50 bales, he was only entitled to recover the value of that number. In order that this point may be made perfectly clear I will read a few lines from the finding of the Court of Claims. The commissioner to whom the matter had been referred said:

I find from the evidence that 245 bales of the claimant's cotton went into the Vicksburg cotton, and that he should be charged one-fourth for ginning and baling the 45 bales, or 11 bales, leaving 234 bales to the credit of the claimant.

But inasmuch as he has claimed only 50 bales in his petition, he can be allowed out of the fund only for 50 bales. And therefore the claimant is entitled to judgment for the value of 50 bales of cotton, at the average rate per bale, payable out of the first fund—50 bales of cotton, at $177.55½ per bale, $8,877.50.

When the claimant found that his attorney had negligently frittered away his rights before the court he moved that the proceedings be amended so as to make a claim for 250 bales instead of for 50 bales; but the court decided that came too late. Gentlemen will recollect by the captured and abandoned property act it was provided these claims should be brought within two years. The court held that two years had already expired and the motion to amend the proceedings must be treated as an original suit brought after the time had expired, and refused to allow him to amend the proceedings, so that the claimant was barred by the statute of limitations.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is this for?

Mr. CATCHINGS. For the 200 bales which his attorney should have sued for; that is, for 250 bales in all, instead of for only 50 bales.

Mr. HERMANN. He asks for the payment for 250 bales on the same ground that payment was made for 50 bales?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Precisely. The attorney was directed to bring suit for 250 bales, but brought it only for 50 bales. When it came up for trial the Court of Claims decided 250 bales were taken, but as suit was brought for 50 bales instead of for 250, allowance could be made only for 50 bales, and this bill is introduced for the purpose of paying for the remaining 200 bales.

When the Court of Claims found this was the case, as I have already stated, the claimant made a motion to amend, but as it came after the expiration of the limitation provided by the law, he was barred. It is extraordinary, after paying for 50 bales, the Government should now refuse to pay for the remaining 200 bales, when its own Court of Claims has decided he was entitled to be paid for 250 bales.

Mr. LANHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether the price charged for this cotton is considered to be a fair one?

Mr. CATCHINGS. It is $177.55 per bale, as that was the price the cotton sold for. That is what the Government got for it. You understand the claimant was obliged to show what became of the cotton, and in order to do that he was obliged to follow the cotton until its proceeds were placed in the Treasury; the price fixed is the price the Government received for the cotton.

Mr. HERMANN. This was the price the Court of Claims decided the cotton brought in the market and which the Government received for it?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I should like to inquire why this matter has been pending without settlement for so long a period of time? It has been fourteen years since the decision of the Court of Claims.

Mr. CATCHINGS. As I have already stated, this matter has been pending for several Congresses. When the Court of Claims first decided he was paid for 50 bales only, because of the negligence of his attorney in bringing suit for 50 bales, and not for 250 as he ought to have done; and when the claimant moved to amend the proceedings the court held he was too late, and it was treated as an original claim which was barred by the statute of limitations. Mr. D. B. Whitney, a practicing attorney in this city, was employed to institute proceedings before the Court of Claims, but by a sort of carelessness which was unexplainable, he brought suit only for 50 bales instead of for 250 bales. Now the Government has paid for 50 bales, and this claim is made for the payment of the remaining 200 bales.

Mr. HERMANN. And upon precisely the same grounds?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes, sir, and upon precisely the same ground decided by the Court of Claims as to the fifty. I say it is a just and equitable claim, and I hope we will have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. CROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I inquired a few moments ago whether there was a minority report in this case, and was informed by the Chairman that there was not. I wish to say when the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] reported this case, I have a distinct recollection that my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] reserved the right to submit a minority report if on investigation he should become satisfied it was not a just claim. Neither of these two gentlemen is here, and therefore I can not say to what extent my colleague has prosecuted his investigation. I do know he was not clear in his mind how it could be possible for this claimant to claim for 250 bales of cotton after he had prosecuted his claim for 50 bales before the Court of Claims without having discovered the mistake until the final hearing.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That was not his mistake; it was the mistake of his attorney, as I have already shown.

Mr. CROUSE. It would seem if there was a mistake that the mistake should have been discovered during the course of the trial and not on the final hearing, and then discovered for the first time.

Mr. CATCHINGS. That was not the mistake; the mistake was as to the number of bales for which claim was made. The counsel and court agreed in the belief the claim was for 250 bales, and proof was made as to the fact the Government did owe for 250 bales, but on the final hearing by the court it appeared that claim had been made for only 50 bales, and the court therefore, as I have already stated, gave judgment only for 50 bales.

Mr. CROUSE. Was there not some lack of testimony or proof that the additional amount of cotton belonged to this party at all?

Mr. CATCHINGS. No, sir; if the gentleman will permit me I will read an extract from the findings of the commissioner, which findings were afterwards adopted as the judgment of the Court of Claims:

I find from the evidence that 245 bales of the claimant's cotton went into the Vicksburgh cotton, and that he should be charged one-fourth for ginning and baling the 45 bales, or 11 bales, leaving 234 bales to the credit of the claimant.

But inasmuch as he has claimed only 50 bales in his petition he can be allowed out of the fund only for 50 bales. And, therefore, the claimant is entitled to judgment for the value of 50 bales of cotton, at the average rate per bale, payable out of the first fund—50 bales of cotton, at $177.55½ per bale, $8,877.50.

That was the only trouble; the attorney who prepared the case was under the impression, as well as the claimant himself, that the suit was brought for the 250 bales. I understand that at that time there was a great rush of claims of this character, and no doubt, owing to the multitude of such cases in his business the attorney supposed that the petition covered the whole amount of the cotton, whereas in fact it covered but the 50 bales.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Was any effort made to amend the petition?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes, sir; I will state to the gentleman that when it was discovered that the petition of the claimant embraced but 50 bales of the cotton, application was at once made to have it so amended as to entitle the claimant to recover the whole amount of the proceeds of the 250 bales. But the act under which the court was permitted to take jurisdiction of the case at all provided that unless such claims were presented within two years after the passage of the act they were barred.

This had expired in July or August, 1868, when this error was discovered, so that at the time the judgment of the court was rendered the statute of limitation applied; and when the claimant asked permission to amend the petition he was met with the response that the court had not jurisdiction excepting of the 50 bales for which payment was demanded within the time fixed by the law, but that as to the 200 bales the petition must be treated as if the suit was instituted only at the time the amended petition was presented. So, Mr. Chairman, we have just this case presented here, and I suppose it is a case without a parallel in the history of claims. The court decided that the petitioner had a valid claim for 250 bales of cotton upon the testimony presented, but that 50 bales only having been covered by the claim presented before the statute of limitation applied he could only receive payment for that amount.

That is the substance of the case.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And the claimant, by his own negligence, or the negligence of his attorney, was barred from receiving the remainder.

Mr. CATCHINGS. He was barred by the statute of limitations; but I do not think it was because of any laches on the part of the attorney or the claimant himself. Of course we understand, while in point of fact the claimant is bound by the laches of his attorney, yet in dealing equitably with the claimant we must take into consideration other causes which do not make him responsible for such neglect on the part of the attorney. I will state further that the claimant in this case resided in Mississippi, and very possibly he did not see the petition; but of that fact I have no personal knowledge, although in all probability if he had seen it he may not have understood its purport, it being strictly a legal document.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not suppose you mean to say that the claimant never saw the petition. Is it not necessary that he should sign it on oath?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Possibly so. I confess my ignorance of how these claims were presented or what process was pursued; but I do know from the testimony taken, because I have examined it all carefully, from beginning to end, that it shows beyond doubt that both the lawyer and the client were able to establish the fact that the Government had received the whole of the proceeds of the cotton, and had turned into the Treasury the proceeds of the 250 bales.

Mr. CROUSE. Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin, has looked up all the facts of the case and has them in his possession, but he is absent.

Mr. CATCHINGS. They are embodied in the report of the Court of Claims.

Mr. CROUSE. But I know the objection raised to the consideration of the bill in committee was based on the fact that it seemed very strange that the parties in interest, as well as the attorney himself, should have overlooked, in writing a document of that character, so important an item as this omission, and should not have discovered it until after the statute of limitations had barred the case in court.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I admit that it does on its face look so; but if my friend had had an opportunity of looking at the testimony he would find it to be just as I have stated, that during all the taking of that testimony it was to establish the fact that the Government had taken the 250 bales of cotton, and I think he would not object now to the passage of the bill.

Mr. CROUSE. Do you claim that there is standing upon the books of the Treasury now this amount in the name of the claimant?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes, sir, I think so. I claim it to be a fact also that the Government received the 250 bales of cotton, and the proceeds of the sale of that amount. Fifty bales of this have been decreed by the judgment of the court to be the property of the claimant——

Mr. CROUSE. But does the remainder stand to his credit?

Mr. CATCHINGS. That is my understanding. I confess I have never looked at the books of the Treasury and I am not acquainted with their method of keeping accounts, but I believe that the proceeds of such property stand to the credit of the party from whom it is taken until the question of ownership is decided.

Mr. CROUSE. I understand that the act known as the captured and abandoned property act required the officer of the Treasury to make a sale of the property and to place the sums realized in the Treasury to the credit of the claimant. Now if that has been the procedure followed out in this case, then it will be a matter that can be easily established to the satisfaction of the committee that this additional amount stands in the name of the claimant on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I will say in answer to the gentleman that I do not know, of course, how the books of the Treasury stand upon this question. There have been cases within my knowledge where cotton was sold belonging to one man and credited to another. So that the books of the Treasury are not really a criterion of what is due to any person. But in this case that question has been settled by the judgment of the court.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will you permit me to ask a question?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You say the Court of Claims has allowed a judgment for 50 bales of this cotton, and by mistake the 200 were not considered?

Mr. CATCHINGS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Have we not the power in the House to remit this case back to the Court of Claims and allow them to pass upon the 200 bales that were embodied in the petition on which they rendered judgment?

Mr. CATCHINGS. We have that power, but here is the trouble about it: Efforts have been made repeatedly within my knowledge—and my experience is quite limited in Congress, this being only my second term—to have bills passed giving the Court of Claims jurisdiction over similar claims. They have been invariably voted down. Up to this time it has not been the temper or disposition of Congress to extend the jurisdiction of that court even in special cases. The policy has been to require them to come here and get their claims through Congress. I have seen several bills voted down which had that object in view. I do not think it would be of any value to make the effort, because I do not think it would succeed.

Mr. HERMANN. My friend understands this claim amounts to 250 bales; that the gross number of the bales in controversy is 250, and that the Court of Claims actually found for the claimant upon 50 bales.

Mr. CROUSE. Yes.

Mr. HERMANN. But that all the facts, all the testimony, all the memoranda which are before the committee show conclusively 250 bales to be the amount.

Mr. CROUSE. That testimony was produced in court. I am not informed on that question. The report, I believe, so states.

Mr. HERMANN. Then permit me to ask my good friend from Ohio this further question: I understand the amount now claimed was found to be a proper and just amount when the claim was adjudicated by the court.

Mr. CROUSE. I so understand.

Mr. HERMANN. Then I ask my friend if it would not be doing gross injustice to relegate the case now to the Court of Claims, since the matter is at this time before Congress, especially as the facts are not denied?

Mr. CROUSE. I only rose because I thought this claim should not be passed in the absence of the member of the committee who reserved the right to make a minority report, or to state his reasons why he opposed the passage of the bill when it should come up. As he is not here, I rose. I am not in possession of the facts he may have gathered for that purpose. Many of the questions that have been put to me I am not clear about in my mind. I did not charge my mind with the details. But I have a distinct recollection that the gentleman reserved that right, and intended to look up the facts and submit them to the House when the bill came up for action.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

Mr. CROUSE. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to submit an amendment to that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment will be in order.

Mr. CROUSE. I offer an amendment to the effect that a greater amount shall not be paid than appears to the credit of this claimant on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I hope my friend will not insist upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will reduce his amendment to writing and send it to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was reduced to writing and read by the Clerk, as follows:

Provided, That no larger amount shall be paid to this claimant than appears to his credit on the books of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment will be voted down, because if adopted the effect of it might be absolutely to defeat the whole object of the bill. I do not know that anything appears to the credit of this man on the books of the Treasury. I know it is very frequently the case that cotton taken by the Government during the war appears on the books credited to some person who was not the owner. I know also that in many cases cotton was taken and sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury when the property was not credited to anybody at all.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. As I understand this bill, it proposes to afford the same remedy as to the 200 bales specified that have been given already as to the 50 bales?

Mr. CATCHINGS. That is the whole of it.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. And this amendment was not attached to the former bill?

Mr. CATCHINGS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Chairman, all I wish to say is that this money does not appear to the credit of anybody in the Treasury, and the effect of that amendment, if adopted, would be to defeat the object of the bill.

Mr. OATES. It is quite clear that it would be unnecessary to take proof in any case to show that a claimant was entitled to recover, if that fact were shown on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the committee will adopt my amendment, I think the rights of all persons interested in this fund will be protected.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I think so.

Mr. CULBERSON. A great number of people are interested in this fund, and all I desire is that no one shall get more than his share.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted, for the reason that if this is a just claim such a provision in the bill would simply bar its payment. There are thousands of just claims of this character where there is nothing to the credit of the claimant in the Treasury. For my own part I have not had time to inquire into the merits of the bill, but from the action of the court I have every reason to believe that this is a just claim and that it ought to be paid.

Mr. BUTLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER. Has anybody on this floor the right to offer an amendment of that sort except the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask that both amendments be read, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and the amendment to that amendment.

The amendments were read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I hope that will be voted down.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, before the vote is taken on reporting this bill to the House, I desire the Clerk to read a portion of the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary on the claim of Samuel Noble, which is here for consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

The policy of the Government with respect to claims of this character was fixed more than twenty years ago. In 1863 Congress, we have stated, made laws for the collection of abandoned and captured property within the insurrectionary districts, and for covering the proceeds, upon sale, into the United States Treasury. At the same time provision was made to secure to the owners of such property their rights. Under these laws a person claiming to have been the owner of abandoned or captured property was authorized to prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof, in the Court of Claims, at any time within two years after the suppressing of the rebellion.

We are not aware that there has been any change in this legislation since it was made in 1863. The general law upon the subject remains as it was enacted twenty years ago. Whether or not Congress has by special act authorized a particular owner of captured or abandoned property to assert his claim to the proceeds covered into the Treasury, in the Court of Claims or elsewhere, at a period later than two years after the rebellion was suppressed, we are not informed.

In the absence of such information it is to be presumed that Congress has adhered to the policy adopted in 1863. With this policy we are content. The public interests demanded no change. If it is to be changed the change should be made by a general law.

Special legislation with respect to claims of this character should be discouraged. In the judgment of the minority of the committee this settled policy of the Government should not be disturbed by either special or general legislation.

We know of no reason why the two years' limitation in the act of March 3, 1863, should be modified or repealed.

To authorize, by a special act of Congress, Mr. Noble to sue for the proceeds of his cotton eighteen years after he knew of its seizure and sale by the Government would be, for obvious reasons, unwise. After he knew of its seizure and sale he had the right under the general law of March 3, 1863, to sue and make good his claim to the proceeds of his property. This right existed for two years from and after August, 1866. For some unexplained reason he did not avail himself of his legal rights within the time limited by law. Now they are barred, and this bar he would have Congress remove.

Mr. SPRINGER. The report in this case contains the following statement in regard to the claim now pending:

The money which claimant asks is not the property of the United States, but a trust fund held for him. The United States occupies strictly a fiduciary relation to the claimant, and never intended to divest him of his property; but by taking it constituted itself claimant's trustee. (13 Wallace, 138.) From this trust fund the bill provides that he shall be paid.

I take the statement as true. I have not examined the details of the bill, but the point I want to make is this: There is in the Treasury at this time a sum amounting to eight or ten million dollars which is known as the proceeds of captured and abandoned property. That money has been covered into the Treasury and is a part of the general fund, but it is the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, and it is held generally that the Government holds this fund in trust for the benefit of the owners of that property. Now, if that be true, I hold that the Government can discharge that trust in one way only, that is, by providing a tribunal into which all these claimants may go and have their rights ascertained, all being on an equal footing, so that the Government can receive them all together, and, after the time has expired for filing claims under this act, and all claims filed have been considered and adjudicated, then, if it should appear that claims have been proven greater in amount than the trust fund can respond to it will be the duty of the Government to reduce the claims all pro rata, so as to make the trust fund sufficient to discharge them all. If that is not the proper way to adjudicate a matter of that kind, I wish some gentleman would tell me why it is proper to take A, B, and C, and pass special laws allowing them to come in and prove their claims, while you deny to all other claimants the privilege of even a hearing.

Mr. HOOKER. The act in reference to these claims required that suit should be brought in two years. In this case, by mistake, suit was brought and judgment obtained for 50 bales of cotton, instead of 250. Now the position of the gentleman from Illinois can not possibly be correct, because if the claimants claim more than the aggregate fund in the Treasury, and there is to be a pro rata distribution, those who have hitherto recovered ought to refund their money, so that an equitable dividend may be made amongst all the claimants.

Mr. SPRINGER. On the contrary, the very precedent which the gentleman cites sustains my position and overthrows his. The Government in the first instance did just what I have suggested should be done now, if we are going to meet claims of this description. It provided a general law with a statute of limitations; it fixed a time within which all parties should come in and prove their claims. The time allowed in which to bring suit was two years. Under that law a vast number of parties went into court and proved their claims. That having been done, no persons after the expiration of the prescribed time had a right under the law to set up a claim to any part of the fund. Everybody who had not brought suit within the time prescribed was barred from setting up any claim. It was therefore the duty of the Government to pay out the amount of the judgments that had been obtained against the fund in pursuance of the act of Congress.

Years passed on. Congresses passed on; and after twenty-five years have rolled around Mr. Newman comes in and says, "During the two years in which I was allowed to sue I ought to have sued for 250 bales of cotton; but by mistake of my attorney I sued for only 50 bales. Now I want Congress to reopen this whole business, and allow me to sue for the remainder of my claim."

Why, sir, there are thousands of persons in the country who have not had any part of their claims paid. In this case 50 bales have been paid for. There are thousands of persons who, up to this time, have never received anything, and the Government has never offered them a forum in which to prove their claims at all.

Now, I contend that the rule which the Government established in the first instance is the correct one—allow either all or none of these claims. If the Government owes all this money to private persons, let it invite all to come in; if the Government owes nothing, let it declare that the statute of limitations shall stand, and no one hereafter shall come in. In other words, I am opposed to this special legislation which allows a favored few to come in and prove their cases, while all others are denied the same privilege.

Mr. CATCHINGS. I hope we shall now have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] moves that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, I object; let a vote be taken.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. CATCHINGS, it was agreed to.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL NOBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. OATES) was the bill (H. R. 53) for the relief of Samuel Noble.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, this bill was reported early in the session from the Committee on the Judiciary. Subsequently the Senate passed a bill based upon the same facts—Senate bill No. 2202. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be now considered in lieu of the House bill, for the reason that if the House bill should pass and go to the Senate, there would simply result a committee of conference. As the Senate has already passed a bill in substance the same as this, except as to the method of settlement, I ask that the Senate bill be now substituted for the House bill and considered.

Mr. CULBERSON. I would like to hear the Senate bill read. My understanding is, that the House bill refers this claim to the Court of Claims, while the Senate bill makes an absolute appropriation.

Mr. FORNEY. No, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to the substitution at any rate. In the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY], who made the minority report in this case, I feel it my duty to enter the objection which he would make if here.

Mr. OATES. I do not think he would object, if present, to this request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; I object to the substitution of the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the House bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Samuel Noble, formerly of Rome, Ga., but now a citizen of Anniston, in the State of Alabama, may, notwithstanding the decision heretofore made and the law of the statute by lapse of time, prosecute his claim to the net proceeds of sale of 802 bales of cotton, alleged to have been captured by the United States military authorities at Savanna, Ga., in December, 1864, before the Court of Claims, under the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned or captured property and the prevention of frauds in the insurrectionary districts of the United States," approved March 12, 1863, and this act.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert the following:

"That Samuel Noble, a citizen of the State of Alabama, may, notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitation, or other legal impediment hitherto existing, prosecute his claim to the net proceeds of the sale of 802 bales of cotton, alleged to have been captured by the United States military authorities at Savannah, Ga., in December, 1864, before the Court of Claims, under the provisions of this act and 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned or captured property and the prevention of frauds in the insurrectionary districts of the United States,' approved March 12, 1863."

Mr. OATES. I ask that the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary be in the first place adopted. The dissent of one member of the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY], was not to this amendment but to the bill in toto. I ask that the amendment be now considered and adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have not heard the report on this bill——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman call for the reading of the report?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do. I sent to the document-room for the report and could not obtain a copy. I have done the same thing in regard to a number of these cases to-day and have not been able to obtain a single report.

Mr. OATES. The gentleman from New Jersey shall be in full possession of the facts of this case.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. OATES. The reading of the report, I believe, is in the nature of debate; and the gentleman can not take me off the floor for the purpose of having it read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is not the position of the case.

Mr. OATES. I desire that the amendment proposed by the committee be first adopted so as to perfect the bill; then the bill can be acted on as amended. There was no dissent at all in the committee as to this amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And the Committee of the Whole has the right to be advised of the merits of the bill before it is called upon to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated he entertained the question on the amendments; thereupon the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] rose and asked that the report of the committee be read. The gentleman from Alabama yielded the floor when he asked for a vote on the amendments, and the gentleman from New Jersey had the right to ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. OATES. There is no objection to the report being read. There is also a minority report made by Mr. SENEY. I ask that it be read also. I do not object to the reading of the report, and to the House being put into the possession of all the facts in the case, but there is no objection I am sure to our voting first on these merely formal amendments.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know how to vote, for or against the amendments, without knowing something about the case. I ask the report be read in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 53) for the relief of Samuel Noble, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

They have examined carefully the report made by said committee to the House during first session of the Forty-ninth Congress and adopt the same, with but a few verbal changes. The committee recommend that the bill be amended so as to express its object in fewer words. They recommend that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and the following be inserted in lieu thereof:

"That Samuel Noble, a citizen of the State of Alabama, may, notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitation or other legal impediment hitherto existing, prosecute his claim to the net proceeds of the sale of 802 bales of cotton, alleged to have been captured by the United States military authorities at Savannah, Ga., in December, 1864, before the Court of Claims, under the provisions of this act and 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned or captured property and the prevention of frauds in the insurrectionary districts of the United States,' approved March 12, 1863."

The facts in this case, which have been "judicially ascertained" or shown by the evidence submitted, are substantially as follows:

1. The claimant at and prior to the 6th day of January, 1865, was a citizen of Rome, in the State of Georgia, and on the said day he entered into a contract with the United States to deliver to the authorized agents of the United States, on or before the 1st day of January, 1866, 250,000 bales of cotton, and he was authorized by the said contract to make deliveries under it at Fernandina, Pensacola, Port Royal, Mobile, Huntsville, Ala.; Jackson, Miss.; Savannah, Brunswick; Chattanooga, Tenn., and New Orleans. The said contract was made by H. A. Risley, a "supervising special agent of the Treasury Department, authorized to purchase products of the Confederate States," and was made under the authority of the eighth section of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, (13 Stats. at Large, 375).

At the time the said contract was signed by the said Treasury agent and the claimant, President Lincoln indorsed thereon the following executive order, to wit:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 6, 1865.

"An authorized agent of the Treasury Department having, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, contracted for the cotton above mentioned, and the party having agreed to sell and deliver the same to such agent, it is ordered that the cotton, moving in compliance with and for the fulfillment of said contract, and being transported to said agent, or under his direction, shall be free from seizure and detention by any officer of the Government, and commandants of military departments, districts, posts and detachments, naval stations, flotillas, gun-boats, and fleets will observe this order, and give the said Noble, his agents, transports, and means of transportation, free and unobstructed passage for the purpose of getting said cotton or any part of it through the lines, other than blockade lines, and safe conduct within our lines, while the same is moving in compliance with regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, and for fulfillment of said contract with the agent of the Government.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN."

The regulations of the Treasury Department, which were intended to make such order for safe conduct as that above quoted effective, issued September 24, 1864, provided, in the fifth section, as follows:

"Generals commanding military districts and officers commanding fleets, flotillas, and gunboats will give safe conduct to persons and products, and all persons hindering or preventing such safe conduct to persons or property shall be deemed guilty of a military offense and punished accordingly."

2. That the military authorities of the United States, refusing to respect or obey the said Executive order, seized or burned all the cotton which the claimant owned previous to the date of said contract, or purchased subsequent to said date, for the purpose of delivering the same to the agent of the United States under the said contract, but no claim for compensation for any cotton burned by the military authorities in violation of said executive order is made by the claimant.

3. The United States seized and took from the claimant, at Savannah, Ga., subsequent to its capture by the United States on the 24th of December, 1864, 802 bales of cotton. The cotton so seized included that which the claimant purchased and owned previous to the date of said contract, as well as a part of that which was purchased subsequent to that date.

4. The claimant did not institute his suit in the Court of Claims, under the abandoned and captured property act, within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, as required by said act; but he did, on the 15th day of June, 1870, institute his suit in that court for a violation of said contract made with the Treasury agent. The claimant in that suit abandoned all claim for damages resulting from the destruction of his cotton by the United States troops, as well as for damages resulting from a loss of profit, occasioned by the breach of said contract by the United States; but the claimant sought in that suit to recover the value of so much of his cotton as the United States had seized and sold in violation of the terms of said contract, and proceeds paid into the United States Treasury.

5. The Court of Claims, upon the hearing of the said cause, dismissed the claimant's petition upon the ground that the contract between the claimant and the Treasury agent was void, because that agent did not make the contract as prescribed in the Treasury regulations, which had been adopted to carry into effect the eighth section of the act of July 2, 1864. The findings of fact and the opinion of the court are reported in 11 Court of Claims Reports, pages 608 to 624.

The Court of Claims, in its opinion, advised the claimant that his remedy was not upon the contract made with Risley, but was to be found in the provisions of the third section of the abandoned and captured property act. The language of the court which stated this conclusion was as follows:

"The claimant seems to have mistaken both his rights and his remedy. As stated, his contract was, by its own terms, liable to be terminated by the capture of the property before it was in transitu, to Risley, and in point of fact it was so terminated. He was then without recourse against the Government except in such manner as the Government should by law authorize. Such recourse was provided in the act of March 12, 1863, which authorized him within two years after the suppression of the rebellion to prefer his claim in this court for the proceeds of his property. He failed to avail himself of that right, and we are therefore without jurisdiction to afford him relief."

It is to be borne in mind that the claimant by his bill seeks nothing from the United States except the restoration to him of the net proceeds of the sale of the cotton, which the United States has paid into its Treasury. The United States has never asserted the right to retain the proceeds of cotton which belonged to a loyal citizen, even where such proceeds came into the possession of the United States in the execution of the provisions of the abandoned and captured property act. The claimant was thoroughly loyal to the United States during the entire period of the rebellion. He left his home in the State of Georgia to avoid conscription into the Confederate service. He came within the Union lines at Nashville, Tenn., about the last of December, 1863. He there took and subscribed the oath of amnesty prescribed in the proclamation of President Lincoln of the 8th of December, 1863. He remained within the Union lines until Rome, in the State of Georgia, which was his home and place of residence, was captured by the United States troops under command of General Sherman in July, 1864. He kept and faithfully observed that oath, and voluntarily gave no aid or comfort to the late rebellion. It is clear, therefore, for these reasons, and independent of any obligations growing out of the contract made by the Treasury agent with the claimant, that the proceeds of the claimant's cotton paid into the Treasury belong to him and not to the United States.

The proceeds of the cotton of loyal citizens, the Supreme Court declared, constitute a trust fund, which the United States holds as trustee for the benefit of any loyal citizen who may show his right to such proceeds, and the Government, holding the proceeds of the owner's property for his benefit, having been fully reimbursed for all expenses incurred in the character of trustee, loses nothing by a judgment which simply awards to the owner what is his own. (United States vs. Anderson, 9 Wall., 58; United States vs. Padelford, 9 ibid., 531; United States vs. Hein, 13 ibid., 128.)

The facts of this case justify Congress in providing for the restoration to the claimant of the proceeds of the cotton which he owned, and which were paid into the Treasury. The Court of Claims, upon the facts found by it, would have awarded him such proceeds had he invoked its jurisdiction and instituted his suit under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863, instead of bringing suit upon his contract with Risley. The Government should never be unjust to its citizens, and it ought not be willing to keep from any of them that which it ought not in equity and good conscience to retain. The condition upon which the United States promised to return to its citizens the proceeds of cotton captured by the military forces was that the person claiming such proceeds should "prove to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims that he never gave aid or comfort to the late rebellion." This proof the claimant did not make in the Court of Claims, although he averred the fact in his petition. He did not make that proof because the Supreme Court had decided that after the issuance by President Johnson of the proclamation of amnesty, dated December 25, 1868, such proof was no longer necessary. (Armstrong vs. The United States, 13 Wall., 154; Pargoud vs. Same, 13 ibid., 156.)

Congress has not yet, although twenty-two years have elapsed, deemed it wise to dispense with this requirement in respect to those persons who claimed the proceeds of cotton which had been captured previous to the 30th day of June, 1865. That requirement should no longer be invoked in any case. This claimant, however, is entirely willing that his right to recover the proceeds of his cotton which was seized and sold by the United States shall be made to depend upon his ability to prove the fact that he did not voluntarily give aid or comfort to the late rebellion. The Court of Claims has already found that the military authorities of the United States seized at Savannah, in the winter of 1864 and 1865, cotton belonging to the claimant, which aggregated in quantity 802 bales, of which 427 bales were sea-island and 375 bales were upland cotton; and that the whole quantity seized "was by the United States mingled with other captured cotton, and the mass transported to New York and there sold, and the net proceeds thereof paid into the Treasury."

This case has been pending before the different Houses of Congress for about twelve years, but no action has been had thereon which has produced any benefit to the claimant. The delay and inaction seem to be of unusual hardship and the claim entirely meritorious, not only by reason of the personal loyalty of the claimant, but by reason of the fact that he entered upon the fulfillment of a contract with the United States, which he had a right to assume was valid and binding upon the United States, because the President had given him an order for safe conduct out of the Union lines and into the lines of the Confederate authorities for the purpose of fulfilling the terms of that contract on his part. The claimant had a right to assume that this order for safe conduct would protect him and the property which he was to deliver under the said contract from seizure and practical confiscation by those authorities to whom his order far safe conduct was directed.

The only question to be considered is whether the claimant was guilty of laches by his failure to bring his suit in the Court of Claims under the abandoned and captured property act. It is very clear that until the decision in Lane's case (8 Wall., 185) the claimant had the right to assume that this remedy was upon his contract and not under the abandoned and captured property act. The Court of Claims had so decided both in Lane's case (2 Court of Claims, 184) and in Burnside's case (3 Court of Claims, 367). It was the settled law of that court, until the decision of the Supreme Court in Lane's case, that a claimant having such a contract as that which the claimant made with Risley could maintain in the Court of Claims an action upon such contract, and that his rights under it were ex contractu and not statutory. The claimant under that decision had six years in which to institute his suit in the Court of Claims, because that was the limitation prescribed in the tenth section of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1863, now section 1063 of the Revised Statutes.

The claimant's cause of action accrued when the United States in March, 1865, seized the cotton which the claimant supposed was protected by President Lincoln's order for safe conduct to him, and the property which he sought to appropriate to the purposes of the contract made with him by the Treasury agent. The claimant was not required to assume or to act upon the assumption that the decision of the Court of Claims, which recognized the validity of such contracts would be reversed in the Supreme Court. The decision of the Supreme Court in Lane's case was not made until the 29th day of November, 1867. The right of the claimant to proceed under the statutory remedy provided by the third section of the act of March 12, 1863, expired on the 20th of August, 1868. (United States vs. Anderson, 9 Wall., 58; Haycraft vs. United States, 22 Wall., 81.) The claimant could not then change his remedy, because the statutory right as well as the remedy for its enforcement had been lost by the expiration of the "two years after the suppression of the rebellion," within which time the statutory right was required to be asserted by the institution of a suit in the Court of Claims. It was not laches in any known legal sense for the claimant to abide by the decision of the Court of Claims in regard to his rights under his contract.

He was not required, in order to escape the accusation of negligence, to institute his suit in the Court of Claims previous to the decision of the Supreme Court in Lane's case, and when that decision was made the claimant had lost his statutory remedy just as completely as he lost his remedy ex contractu by the decision of the Court of Claims. The claimant ought not to be denied relief, therefore, on the ground of laches. He accepted the decisions of the court appointed to determine his rights as conclusive, and when they were reversed the claimant was without any remedy except such as Congress should provide.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the amendment reported, removing or suspending the statute of limitations, and allowing the petitioner, Samuel Noble, to prosecute his claim before the Court of Claims.

Mr. OATES. I would like to have the report of the minority of the committee read. Mr. SENEY, who made the minority report, requested me, when he was going away, not to call this bill up out of its order. As it comes up now in its regular order, I will be glad to have the minority report also read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Noble, submit the following views:

It appears that Samuel Noble in 1865, and for ten years prior thereto, was a citizen of Rome, in the State of Georgia, and was loyal to the Government of the United States.

It further appears that in December, 1864, he came to Washington with letters of introduction and commendation to President Lincoln. After an interview with the President, H. A. Risley, special agent of the Treasury Department, was directed by the President to enter into a contract with him (Noble), as authorized by the eighth section of the act of Congress, approved July 2, 1864, regulating commercial intercourse between loyal and insurrectionary States and to provide for the collection of captured and abandoned property, etc. (13 Statutes, 375); that in pursuance of such directions, Risley, acting for and on behalf of the United States, on the 6th day of January, 1865, entered into a contract with Noble, wherein Mr. Noble undertook and agreed to deliver to Risley, as agent of the United States, on or before January 1, 1866, 250,000 bales of cotton, which was to be delivered at Fernandina, Pensacola, Port Royal, Mobile, Huntsville, Jackson, Savannah, Brunswick, Chattanooga, and New Orleans, and which was to be forwarded to the city of New York and there sold, and out of the proceeds of sale, after paying all expenses, costs, charges, and Government dues, one-fourth thereof was to be retained by Risley for the United States, and the remaining three-fourths to be paid to Noble.

That on the 6th day of January, 1865, President Lincoln, at the request of Risley, issued and indorsed upon the contract the following order for the safe conduct and protection of Noble, in the execution of the contract, namely:

"EXECUTIVE MANSION, January 6, 1865.

"An authorized agent of the Treasury Department having, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, contracted for the cotton above mentioned, and the party having agreed to sell and deliver the same to such agent, it is ordered that the cotton moving in compliance with and for the fulfillment of said contract, and being transported to said agent or under his direction, shall be free from seizure and detention by any officer of the Government; and commandants of military departments, districts, posts, and detachments, naval stations, flotillas, gunboats, and fleets will observe this order and give the said Noble, his agents, transports, and means of transportation, free and unobstructed passage for the purpose of getting said cotton, or any part of it, through the lines, other than blockade lines, and safe conduct within our lines, while the same is moving in compliance with regulations of the Secretary, and for the fulfillment of said contract with the agent of the Government.

"ABRAHAM LINCOLN."

Mr. Noble, at the time he made the contract, owned 256 bales of upland cotton and 162 bales of sea-island cotton, which was stored in warehouses in the city of Savannah, Ga., and after making the contract he purchased 265 bales of sea-island cotton and 119 bales of upland cotton, which was also stored in Savannah.

That all of the cotton so purchased and owned by Noble, amounting to 802 bales, being 427 bales of sea-island and 375 bales of upland cotton, was seized by the United States civil and military officers subsequent to the capture of Savannah in December, 1864; and that after such seizure the said cotton was shipped to Simeon Draper, United States cotton agent in the city of New York, by whom it was received and sold; and the net proceeds thereof have been paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the fund derived from the sales of abandoned or captured property under the provisions of the act of March 12, 1863.

We understand the proceeds of this cotton to be as follows: For the 418 bales on hand at the time the contract was made, $82,434.76, and for the 365 bales purchased after the contract was made, $62,488.09. So that the total proceeds of the cotton received at the Treasury are $144,922.85.

We are not informed as to the precise time this cotton was seized by the United States forces, nor the precise time it was sold and the proceeds covered into the United States Treasury.

From the best information we have it is safe to state that both the seizures and sale were made in 1865. Then, in 1865, Noble was in condition to demand relief. The act of March 12, 1863 (12 Statutes, 820), authorized him to commence a suit in the Court of Claims to recover the proceeds of the cotton. This suit, by the terms of the act, he was obliged to bring within two years after the suppression of the rebellion. In contemplation of law the rebellion was suppressed August 20, 1866, so that Noble's right to sue in the Court of Claims expired by limitation in August, 1868.

Why he did not seek the proceeds of his property in the Court of Claims we are not informed. This neglect is not explained.

In less than two years after his right to sue for the proceeds of the cotton in the Court of Claims was barred by law he brought a suit in that court against the United States to recover $309,795.67 damages for an alleged breach of the contract. This suit was brought June 15, 1870, and the breach assigned was the forcible and unlawful seizure of the cotton, and other wrongs done, which prevented his performance of the contract.

This suit the Court of Claims, in 1875, dismissed, holding the contract void, because it did not conform to the regulations prescribed by the Treasury Department to carry into effect the eighth section of the act of July 2, 1864. The case is reported in Court of Claims Reports, volume 11, page 608.

Thus it will be seen that Noble neglected to sue for the proceeds of his cotton under the captured and abandoned property act, and was defeated in his suit upon his contract when he sought to recover damages in a sum more than double the proceeds of his property.

The matter now before the committee arises upon the petition of Noble asking Congress for relief. He asks for the introduction and passage of a bill authorizing him to bring a suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to recover the proceeds ($144,922.15) of the cotton now in the Treasury.

The policy of the Government with respect to claims of this character was fixed more than twenty years ago. In 1863, Congress, we have stated, made laws for the collection of abandoned and captured property within the insurrectionary districts, and for covering the proceeds, upon sale, into the United States Treasury.

At the same time provision was made to secure to the owners of such property their rights.

Under these laws a person claiming to have been the owner of abandoned or captured property was authorized to prefer his claims to the proceeds thereof, in the Court of Claims, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion.

We are not aware that there has been any change in this legislation since it was made in 1863. The general law upon the subject remains as it was enacted twenty years ago. Whether or not Congress has by special act authorized a particular owner of captured or abandoned property to assert his claim to the proceeds covered into the Treasury, in the Court of Claims or elsewhere, at a period later than two years after the rebellion was suppressed, we are not informed.

In the absence of such information it is to be presumed that Congress has adhered to the policy adopted in 1863. With this policy we are content. The public interests demanded no change. If it is to be changed, the change should be made by a general law.

Special legislation with respect to claims of this character should be discouraged. In the judgment of the minority of the committee this settled policy of the Government should not be disturbed by either special or general legislation.

We know of no reason why the two years' limitation in the act of March 3, 1863, should be modified or repealed.

To authorize, by a special act of Congress, Mr. Noble to sue for the proceeds of his cotton eighteen years after he knew of its seizure and sale by the Government would be, for obvious reasons, unwise. After he knew of its seizure and sale he had the right under the general law of March 3, 1863, to sue and make good his claim to the proceeds of his property. This right existed for two years from and after August, 1866. For some unexplained reason he did not avail himself of his legal rights within the time limited by law. Now they are barred, and this bar he would have Congress remove.

For aught that appears, Noble thought that a suit under the abandoned or captured property act to recover the proceeds of his cotton would not sufficiently reimburse him for the loss he had sustained. That he sought more than the proceeds of his cotton is apparent from the fact that shortly after his right to sue for the proceeds was barred he brought suit upon his contract.

In this suit he, in effect, sued for the 418 bales of cotton he had on hand when he made the contract for the 365 bales he subsequently purchased, and for the 249,198 bales that he neither delivered, purchased, nor owned. The damages claimed in this suit were $309,795.67, more than double the sum for which the cotton was sold.

If Noble elected between his claim upon his contract for damages, amounting to $309,795.67 and his claim under the act referred to for the proceeds of the cotton, amounting to $144,922.85, we think he ought to be concluded by his election and make no further complaint.

GEORGE E. SENEY.

Before the Clerk had concluded the reading of the foregoing report,

Mr. BUCHANAN said: If the gentleman from Alabama does not desire the remainder of that report to be read in his time I will proceed to make a few observations on the bill myself.

Mr. OATES. Let the minority report be printed in its entirety in the RECORD.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Of course, and I will move that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I knew nothing about the matter until a few moments ago, when this bill came up.

Mr. OATES. Let the informal amendments be voted on before the gentleman enters into the discussion of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand they are not merely formal amendments but go to substantial matters. I think the committee should understand these matters before they are voted upon.

Let me read that amendment:

That Samuel Noble, a citizen of the State of Alabama, may, notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitation, or other legal impediment hitherto existing, prosecute his claim to the net proceeds of the sale of 802 bales of cotton, alleged to have been captured by the United States military authorities at Savannah, Ga., in December, 1864, before the Court of Claims, under the provisions of this act and "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned or captured property and the prevention of frauds in the insurrectionary districts of the United States," approved March 12, 1863.

The committee have recommended that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and what I have read be inserted instead of the original bill; and I call attention to the words "may, notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitation, or other legal impediment hitherto existing, prosecute his claim."

This is a substantial amendment, and I do not know that I have any objection to the bill if it can be amended as I shall provide, in this form, which is the amendment I propose to offer:

But no judgment shall pass in favor of said Samuel Noble until his loyalty during the late war shall have been established to the satisfaction of the said court, and he shall have further proved that during said war he did not in any way afford aid and comfort to the late rebellion.

Now, I do not understand the reason which influenced this committee to recommend the change which this bill effects in existing law. They may not have intended to provide against the presentation of any further proof of loyalty, but it certainly has that effect. It may not be questioned that the claimant is loyal.

Indeed, as I understand it, the minority of the committee in the views submitted by them make no question as to his loyalty; but there is no reason to absolve him from proof of loyalty, if necessary, which must be furnished by any other claimant at the bar of the Court of Claims. This claim may be a perfectly proper one, and one which should be passed upon by the Committee of the Whole, but I presume that the Committee of the Whole should be informed of the substantial features of the amendment proposed by the committee.

I have therefore moved to amend the amendment by adding the words which I have just quoted, and which I now send to the desk.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, it is my fortune to have charge of this bill, as it was referred to me, and as I have charge of it I propose to do justice to this claimant, although his political record is just the reverse of my own.

The point made, in the first place, by the gentleman from New Jersey on the proposed amendment did not occur to any member of the committee, although the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] was as much opposed to the bill as any man could be or as is at all necessary; because in the papers and the decision already published, made by the Court of Claims, the proof of his loyalty is overwhelming beyond all question as a matter of record.

It seems to me that it ought to have been sufficiently satisfactory to the gentleman from New Jersey when he read in this report, both in the report of the committee and in the views of the minority, that this claimant had a paper from President Lincoln guarantying him a safe conduct through the lines of the Union Army. He had a paper also in writing from the Treasury agent, Risley, for the purpose of going back into the South and buying cotton and bringing it through the lines. So abundantly do the papers in this case and the record in the case decided establish this fact that the bill I asked unanimous consent to consider here to-day was passed by the Senate but a few days ago without referring the case to the Court of Claims at all, but directing the Treasury officials to pay the amount of the claim.

Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen do not seem to understand the attitude in which this captured and abandoned property fund stands. The Supreme Court of the United States in several decisions has held that the Government of the United States did not claim a dollar of it. There are now about $6,000,000 of that fund in the Treasury, which the Government says it does not own, and why? When gentlemen look back to the law providing for the seizure of captured and abandoned property, and the sale of that property captured by the United States forces during the war, they will see that the purpose was to sell it and preserve the proceeds for the loyal citizens of the United States.

Now as this property was captured, or found abandoned, and sold after paying the expenses the net proceeds were paid into the Treasury. From time to time there has been some special legislation paying parties out of this fund. But allow me to go back and call attention to the nature of the act itself. It provided that proof might be made of the ownership of the property sold, and the proceeds of which could be traced into the Treasury, and the loyalty of the party from whom taken; and thereupon the United States would restore such fund to such party or parties. The two years limit was not in effect a statute of limitations.

It was a part of the law, and it began to run from the 20th of August, 1866, the date at which the President of the United States published his proclamation declaring the war to have closed. Hence the 20th of August, 1868, was the date of the expiration of the two years. Now, there were a few actions brought under the act within that time.

Parties as soon as they ascertained the existence of this statute began to prosecute their claims. Some case was brought in which the question of loyalty was raised, and when it reached the Supreme Court that court held that the President's proclamation of amnesty and pardon had eliminated from the act that requirement, so that to-day whether a man was loyal or disloyal is of no consequence, and does not now in the least affect his status before any of the courts of this country.

Mr. SPRINGER. Have you that decision?

Mr. OATES. Oh, yes. And the Congress, after this decision was made, attached to an appropriation bill a proviso that no one should plead the President's proclamation so as to prevent the effect of it; but the Supreme Court in another case declared that to be unconstitutional and void, because the President had the power under the Constitution to publish his proclamations of amnesty, and they were effective.

Now I will call the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] to the true condition of such claims. Those who were disloyal can go before the courts as well as the men who were loyal; and the question of loyalty now cuts no figure at all in respect to the status of a claimant or plaintiff before any of the courts of the United States. But the law expired by its own limitation, and as the Court of Claims, like all other courts of the United States, can only proceed by virtute of statute, there is simply no law which allows any man, be he loyal or disloyal, to prosecute his claim.

The reason that this fund still remains in the hands of the Government as a trustee—for the Government never took it otherwise than in trust—is that whenever we bring forward a general bill allowing claimants to go before the court and make proof of their claims, claimants who own the money, as the Supreme Court has held time and again, we are met with the objection and are required to put into the enactment that the claimant must prove his loyalty. This requirement has been legally dispensed with by legal authority, an dunder the existing law nothing of the kind can be required. But in order that the door may be opened to any man to come in and prosecute it has generally been required by the other side of this House that he shall prove his loyalty. The question of loyalty cuts no particular figure in this case because, as I have before remarked, this claimant has overwhelmingly proved that fact. The whole record bristles with that proof.

In the opinion of the Judiciary Committee the form in which it is proposed to put the bill by amendment is simply an expression of the real purpose in better and more concise language. That is the sole object. It would not give any trouble whatever to this claimant to prove his loyalty, and therefore it would not be very material in this case. It would not be imposing any burden upon him whatever. But in the opinion of the committee the amendment proposed does not dispense with that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if he will permit.

Mr. OATES. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If his loyalty is so unquestioned, why not accept my amendment to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. OATES. I do not think your amendment is in quite as good form as I would like to have it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will reduce it to a better form of English I will accept the revised copy. I only want the substance.

Mr. OATES. I have said all I care to say about the amendment. I wish to submit a few other remarks about the merits of the claim.

Now, sir, although during that bloody conflict Mr. Noble was not in accord with myself (it is shown that he was a Union man), although I am not in accord in politics with him to-day, yet I would not do him injustice for that reason. According to the evidence and under the rule of practice that has been adhered to by Congress and the courts he is clearly entitled to the money for the 802 bales of cotton, and I hope the committee will favorably report the bill.

Let me recapitulate briefly. Mr. Noble was a citizen of Rome, in the State of Georgia. He remained there quietly until an enforcement of the conscript act caused him to flee, to pass through the lines and come to Washington. Here he made it known that he owned cotton and could purchase a large amount of cotton. It seems the policy of the Union favored the introduction of as much cotton within the Union lines from the then Southern Confederacy as possible. Consequently a Treasury agent entered into a written contract with him. Upon that contract President Lincoln gave him a paper securing to him safe conduct through the Union lines for the cotton he might obtain. Eight hundred and two bales of that cotton were taken by the Union forces at Savannah in 1865.

The cotton was sold and the proceeds covered into the Treasury. Noble came before the Court of Claims soon after the war and instituted a suit for breach of contract and to recover damages. The Court of Claims decided against him on the ground that the contract made with Risley, the Treasury agent, ratified by Mr. Lincoln, was illegal because it was not in accord with the eighth section of the captured and abandoned property act. Therefore he lost his case before the Court of Claims.

When that decision was rendered the time mentioned in this law for the prosecution of such claims under the captured and abandoned property act had expired. The decision was made long after the 20th of August, 1868.

This man has never had a forum in which he could prosecute his claim, and therefore the objection made in the views of the minority is not at all well taken, nor is the objection made by the gentleman from Illinois, that claims to a greater amount may be proven against this captured and abandoned property fund than there is money to pay. The law requires, and the court requires, that a claimant shall prove he had the property, and that it was captured. He must trace it; show that it was sold, and trace the proceeds into the Treasury. When he does that the money is there to pay the claim. The fact that there may be claims set up improperly is no argument at all, because every claimant must prove the loss of the property and sale of the property and trace the proceeds to the Treasury. Otherwise he can not obtain the proceeds. The fact that there are others who set up such claims is no argument, because they evidently will fail. There can not be a greater number of claims proven against that fund than the fund itself amounts to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the gentleman yield the floor to me after awhile?

Mr. OATES. I will yield the floor to you now.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask unanimous consent to offer as a substitute for the pending bill the one which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. For the pending bill and all other bills touching this individual fund?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes.

The proposed substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of action in the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property acts, be, and the same hereby is, revived and extended for one year from and after the passage of this act, including all cases of seizures under said acts, or under color thereof, either before or after June 30, 1865, without regard to any statute of limitations; and all claims for such property not filed in said court within that period shall be forever barred: Provided, however, That where any of such claims have been filed before the Secretary of the Treasury, and proof taken in relation thereto, under the provisions of the fifth section of the act of May 18, 1872, the proof so taken, whether upon the part of the Government or the claimant, where it is made to appear by affidavit that the witnesses are dead or can not be found, shall be used in evidence in the said Court of Claims as though taken in pursuance of the rules of said court; and that the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the call of said court, on the motion of either party, shall transmit said proofs and all the papers in the case to the said Court of Claims; and all judgments rendered in favor of the claimants shall be paid out of the captured and abandoned property fund, as provided by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

SEC. 2. That in the trial of causes before the Court of Claims no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in the same; and any claimant or party in interest in any suit may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government, and when refusing so to testify, or willfully testifying falsely, shall not be entitled to relief; and the testimony of such witness may be used by either party.

SEC. 3. That if it shall appear to the court, in any case, that testimony has been duly taken by either party prior to the passage of this act, or that testimony taken in any other case under the rules of the court is pertinent to the issues involved, the same, so far as relevant, may be used in other cases pending in said court.

SEC. 4. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. McCULLOGH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. I understand that unanimous consent has been asked, but has not yet been granted, to offer the bill which has just been read as a substitute for the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. McCULLOGH. I must object.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I send to the Clerk's desk. I would like, however, to have made a statement before the gentleman objected.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That a greater amount of money shall not be paid in satisfaction of this claim than the amount received into the Treasury as said proceeds of the sale of the cotton alleged to have been taken.

Mr. OATES. That amendment is acceptable.

[Mr. CULBERSON withholds his remarks for revision. See APPENDIX.]

Mr. McCULLOGH. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the bill which he proposes to offer as a substitute has been passed upon by any committee?

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes, sir; it has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, I believe, with but two dissenting voices. It was reported from the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress unanimously, and I think it would have passed the House in that Congress if it had not been for my friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], who was very much in favor of the bill, but yet happened to secure an adjournment pending its consideration.

Mr. McCULLOGH. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his objection to the substitute I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraw his point of order?

Mr. McCULLOGH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] asks unanimous consent to offer as a substitute for the pending bill the bill which has been read.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I object.

Mr. CULBERSON. I yield back the floor to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McCULLOGH. I simply wish to say to the gentleman from Texas and to other gentlemen on that side that my reason for objecting was that it seemed to me we were proposing to enter into general legislation upon the basis of a special bill, but when I was satisfied by my friend from New Jersey and other gentlemen that the proposed substitute had been considered by a committee, my objection ceased.

Mr. OATES. I desire to read a paragraph from the syllabus of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States vs. Klein, 13 Wallace, 128:

The act of March 12, 1863 (12 Statutes at Large, 820), to provide for the collection of abandoned and captured property in insurrectionary districts within the United States, does not confiscate or in any case absolutely divest the property of the original owner, even though disloyal. By the seizure the Government constituted itself a trustee for those who were entitled or whom it should thereafter recognize as entitled.

This is the same case in which the Supreme Court held that the proviso to the appropriation act of July 12, 1870, denying to suitors the benefit of the President's proclamation of pardon, was unconstitutional and void.

I hope that the gentleman from New Jersey is sufficiently satisfied by this time as to the loyalty of this claimant, and will not insist on his amendment. The fact of the claimant's loyalty has been proved, as the Court of Claims has already held. I can furnish the decision to the gentleman if he wants to examine it. The committee was unanimous—there was no dissent at all—upon the question of the claimant's loyalty. The substitute was adopted in committee because it was thought it would improve the verbiage of the bill.

This is a just bill, and there being no doubt about the question of loyalty, it is not necessary to require the claimant to make proof again of that fact.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I understand that the effect of this bill is to allow a suit to be brought, although it has been barred by statute for twenty years.

Mr. OATES. But the suit was brought when the claimant supposed that he had the right to recover damages for the violation of his contract. When that suit was decided, the bar, as you may call it, had become complete, and there has not been since any law allowing him to go before the court.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Have there been any other reports on this case?

Mr. OATES. Many. This claim has been before Congress a number of years.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Has it ever before been reported favorably?

Mr. OATES. Oh, yes; always favorably. I have never known of an adverse report being made.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I intended to inquire whether there had been any adverse report.

Mr. OATES. There have been minority reports; there has been some dissent, but I believe in every case the majority of the committee have reported favorably.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to occupy about ten minutes.

Mr. OATES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the dissenting opinion in the case of The United States vs. Klein, to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] has already referred.

A MEMBER. Who were the dissenting judges?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Justice Miller delivered a dissenting opinion, in which Mr. Justice Bradley concurred. The opinion of the Supreme Court in this case was to the effect stated by the gentleman from Alabama. The court also held that the proviso in the appropriation act of July 12, 1870, was in conflict with the views expressed in the syllabus and therefore unconstitutional and void. This proviso was in effect—

That no pardon or amnesty granted by the President shall be admissible in evidence on the part of any claimant in the Court of Claims as evidence in support of any claim against the United States, or to establish the standing of any claimant in said court or his right to bring or maintain suit therein.

This proviso being declared unconstitutional and void, the effect of the decision was that a claimant might plead the proclamation of amnesty or pardon as an answer to the charge of disloyalty against him. In other words, the court decided that this property was held in trust for the original owner, although he might be disloyal, and all that was necessary in order to entitle him to claim the property was to show that he had availed himself of the provisions of the President's proclamation of amnesty or pardon. From this decision Mr. Justice Miller and Mr. Justice Bradley dissented.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. The gentleman does not claim that the dissent of a portion of the court prevents the decision from being the law of the land?

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course not. But, so far as our action is concerned, the decision itself is only persuasive; and in that view we are entitled to consider the opinions of the minority of the court as well as the majority.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But is there not a question still beyond that? Is there not here a man out of court who expects to get into court by an act of Congress, and have we not a right to prescribe the conditions upon which he shall get into court?

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course. This man has now no right to sue the Government, and is asking the passage of a bill which will give him that right. The application appeals simply to our equitable discretion.

Mr. CULBERSON. But there is the question as to the right of the Government to withhold the money.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will come to that in a moment. Mr. Justice Miller, delivering a dissenting opinion, in which Mr. Justice Bradley concurred, said:

I can not agree to the opinion of the court just delivered in an important matter; and I regret this the more because I do agree to the proposition that the proviso to the act of July 12, 1870, is unconstitutional, so far as it attempts to prescribe to the judiciary the effect to be given to an act of pardon or amnesty by the President. This power of pardon is confided to the President by the Constitution, and whatever may be its extent or its limits, the legislative branch of the Government can not impair its force or effect in a judicial proceeding in a constitutional court. But I have not been able to bring my mind to concur in the proposition that, under the act concerning captured and abandoned property, there remains in the former owner, who had given aid and comfort to the rebellion, any interest whatever in the property or its proceeds when it had been sold and paid into the Treasury or had been converted to the use of the public under that act.

I must construe this act, as all others should be construed, by seeking the intention of its framers, and the intention to restore the proceeds of such property to the loyal citizen, and to transfer it absolutely to the Government in the case of those who had given active support to the rebellion, is to me too apparent to be disregarded. In the one case the Government is converted into a trustee for the former owner, in the other it appropriates it to its own use as the property of a public enemey, captured in war. Can it be inferred from anything found in the statute that Congress intended that this property should ever be restored to the disloyal? I am unable to discern any such intent. But if it did, why was not some provision made by which the title of the Government could at some time be made perfect, or that of the owner established? Some judicial proceeding for confiscation would seem to be necessary if there remains in the disloyal owner any right or interest whatever. But there is no such provision, and unless the act intended to forfeit absolutely the right of the disloyal owner, the proceeds remain in a condition where the owner can not maintain a suit for its recovery, and the United States can obtain no perfect title to it.

It is stated that this statute has recently received the attentive consideration of the court in the reported cases which are referred to, but I will not read them.

It appears in the argument of Justice Miller and Justice Bradley they give strong reasons why the opinion of the majority of the court should not be regarded as binding on this body, where we are exercising mere equity jurisdiction.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, there is but one aspect of this case, to which I ask attention. I am glad the general bill has been substituted for the special bill.

Mr. OATES. It has not been done.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I thought the objection had been withdrawn.

Mr. OATES. But it was renewed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. No, it has not been withdrawn.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will address my remarks to the subject as it now stands before the House. I am opposed to these special bills, and I desire to answer some of the suggestions of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES], that no injury can happen to the Government by the passage of this and other special bills referred to.

The status of this case is this: There is in the Treasury of the United States between six and ten millions of dollars, the proceeds of the sale of property under the act of Congress in reference to captured and abandoned property. That money should be paid over to those entitled to it. I stand there; I have no question about that. It is not only the meaning, but the spirit of the law. Nor do I quibble about the removal of the bar of the statute of limitations. I hold we should remove the bar.

My opinion is this, and lawyers will, I think, agree with me, that if we take up separate bills for the recovery of this money we will have more dollars claimed than there are in the Treasury. Every person knows when a suit is brought by A B in the Court of Claims to establish his claim for $1,000 or $1,000,000 there is practically no adversary party except the Government of the United States, and there is no one to look after its interests. For the ten millions in the Treasury twenty millions of claims are made. A B, say, has established his claim in the court and received a decision in his favor, then C D comes in and establishes a claim to the same property. The judgment in the case of A B is not an estoppel, and C D can go on and prove the property is his and claim judgment.

Mr. OATES. If my friend will permit me I would suggest that he runs into this difficulty which, perhaps, he has not thought about, or as a good lawyer, which he is, he would have paid attention to it. He talks about other parties coming in and establishing their claims. He knows no one can establish such except under the statute, and we are not going to permit anything of that kind in special bills, and I do not believe there is any danger like that which the gentleman has suggested. Each man will only receive that to which he establishes his title.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. My friend from Alabama says there can be no danger. I differ from him in this. No judgment rendered in favor of one claimant of property in a suit to which another claimant of the same property is not a party can bind the latter; and as the claim of the latter claimant is as likely to be valid as that of the former, the only way in which justice can be done as between them is to compel them to interplead. Then the judgment would be binding on both and each would be permitted to show the strength of his own claim and the weakness of his adversary's. We ought to aim to do justice between the parties as well as to protect the Government against unjust claims.

We have no right here on an ex parte hearing or without a hearing to give A B a right to institute a suit in the Court of Claims for certain property held in trust, and to refuse C D a right to establish if he can a right in him to the same property. Absolute justice can not be done in this way.

Mr. CULBERSON. The gentleman speaks of the credit upon the books of the Treasury touching the amount of money received for the property sold.

Now, when Mr. Noble goes before the Treasury, he will get the money or his portion of the money credited to the proceeds of the cotton seized in Savannah.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I will answer that in a moment. This morning on the bill offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] this amendment was proposed—

Provided, That no money shall be paid further than is credited to him on the books of the Treasury—and was voted down, for it was stated that there was no money credited to anybody on the books of the Treasury.

Mr. CULBERSON. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken about the amendment. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio was that no money should be paid to that claimant in excess of the amount of the money accredited on the books of the Treasury. Now there is no amount of money accredited on the books of the Treasury to that account; and the amendment which was adopted was that no more money should be paid to the claimant than the books showed to have been the actual proceeds of the cotton seized.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes, but the difficulty is that while you may trace the bales of cotton, there is behind that the substantial question as to whether that cotton was the property of A B or of C D.

Mr. CULBERSON. The proof would establish that fact.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes, in a suit brought by A B the fact might be established to the satisfaction of the court that he is the owner; whereas in a subsequent suit brought by C D it might with equal clearness be established that he (C D) is the owner.

As I stated, if this question is to be litigated before the Court of Claims, that litigation, if it is to be satisfactory at all as determining the ownership of this cotton and settling the question, must have both of the claimants before the court so that the judgment may be binding on both.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a very easy way out of this matter, a way in which such questions can be settled with absolute justice to all parties. The proper way is to pass a general bill, similar to that of the gentleman from Texas, so that the bar of the statute of limitation be removed for a definite time—say one year. In that time let everybody making a claim under the captured and abandoned property act come in, have his claim filed, and have all of the claimants before the court so that the court may decide as between them and determine to whom that fund belongs, and so that each and all may be bound by the judgment; then every dollar will go to the man who is entitled to it, and inasmuch as all of the claimants or parties to that litigation are present in court the judgment will be final and an estoppel upon all claimants.

Mr. OATES. But my friend is putting a case arising under common law in a court of equity, where there are several claimants and but one general fund. But in this case I think there is a general fund which arises from various sources——

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I understand very well. Here is a trust fund, a matter over which a court of equity has jurisdiction, and it is unquestionably competent for Congress to require all claimants to come in or be barred, and to provide that all shall be barred by the judgment of the court. Taking them one by one, you can never do justice, and it is a maxim of equity not to try to do justice by halves. By bringing them all in we shall have a final settlement of the question, and all the difficulties in the way as they now exist are at an end.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is that not the case where there are two parties claiming the same fund?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. There are always two or more parties claiming the same fund where there are claims made for $10,000 which amount to $20,000. Where such a state of things exists there must be more than one claimant. Now, in this case the amount of the claims far exceeds the fund, and unless all of the parties are brought in when judgment is rendered, you have not a final settlement.

Mr. COBB. But the statement is made that this money is not in the Treasury in solido.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. But it is in solido.

Mr. COBB. That the books of the Treasury show distinctly to what particular class so many dollars of this money belongs.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am glad to have the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama, because I know that while he and I may differ as to the facts, we will not differ as to the law of the case. I understand that money is in the Treasury now pertaining to a given lot of bales of cotton. If this money was placed in the Treasury for A B that would be easy; but that is not the case. The owners of the property are not shown by the Treasury books; that is a fact to be established by the judgment of the court which will finally settle the ownership, and when they are brought in in that manner and interplead you can do absolute justice to all, which otherwise could not be done.

I do not want to insist on the bar of the statute of limitations. It is beneath the dignity of a great Government to say that when we have money in the Treasury which belongs to a man we will keep it there because for some reason he did not institute his claim within a given time. Let the judgment in all such cases be an equitable judgment, and an estoppel of all such claims in the future.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR rose.

Mr. LANHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me to move that the committee now rise?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman from Ohio, and if the gentleman from Texas, who wishes to move that the committee rise, will give me time I will answer with pleasure.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before that is done I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. OATES. Permit me to ask a parliamentary question. If the House reaches the consideration of the Private Calendar again, this bill will be first in order, will it not?

Mr. SPRINGER. It will be the unfinished business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that by unanimous consent several bills were passed over, not to lose their places on the Calendar. Consequently this bill will not necessarily be the first bill that comes up.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think this will be unfinished business. [Cries of "No! "No!"]

Mr. LANHAM. I withdraw my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. OATES. I move that the bill be reported favorably to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. There are amendments pending.

Mr. OATES. I will accept the amendments.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let them be read.

The CHAIRMAN. I will put the amendments to the committee, if it is desired. The question is first upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I propose to amend the amendment recommended by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is then on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The Clerk reported the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I call for a division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee as amended.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. LANHAM. How long do you desire to be heard?

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I do not know how long.

Mr. OATES. Then we will not have time to get the bill through.

Mr. LANHAM. I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report favorably the bill (H. R. 6348) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen P. Malloy, and the bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John Newman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

HANNAH J. JONES, EXECUTRIX.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4257) for the relief of Hannah J. Jones, executrix.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a bill which has come over from a preceding session.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that that bill go over. I do so for this reason: since the committee reported I have discovered from the rebel archives that Mr. Jones was one of the first subscribers to the Confederate loan.

Mr. OATES. That was an unpardonable sin.

Mr. HOOKER. I doubt very much the accuracy of the information, by reason of letters I have recently received from Alabama since this case was under discussion, and which I will be prepared to submit to the committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill will be passed over for the present.

The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

MRS. ELLEN P. MALLOY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6348) for the relief of Mrs. Ellen P. Malloy, with amendments.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless there is objection, House bill 9647, of the same title, will be laid upon the table. That is the bill which came over from the Forty-ninth Congress and was put on the Calendar.

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

HEIRS OF JOHN H. NEWMAN, DECEASED.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman, deceased.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a division. This is just such a case as we have had under discussion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 7.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be read the third time and passed?

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for a division.

The House accordingly divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 9.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CATCHINGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I ask that the House order the printing of certain findings of the Court of Claims in cases which have been reported by that court to this House, sent to the Committee on War Claims, and reported back.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DEATH OF EMPEROR FREDERICK.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, a dispatch from Minister Pendleton to Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, Secretary of State, announced the death at 11.15 this morning of the Emperor of Germany. I now send to the Clerk's desk a resolution which I ask may be considered immediately.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That we have heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Emperor Frederick, of Germany and he was distinguished as a soldier, having been made a field-marshal for his conspicuous services in the Austro-Prussian and the Franco-Prussian wars, and he was the friend and advocate of a conservative and liberal policy in Germany, and we express our respectful sympathy to the German nation in the loss of their great and renowned ruler.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. MACDONALD was recognized.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House, according to its previous order, took a recess until 8 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 p. m.

The House was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, as Speaker pro tempore, who directed the reading of the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 15, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside at the session of the House this evening as Speaker pro tempore.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole under the special order.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent that bills on the Private Calendar be called in their regular order, and that where the consideration of a bill is not asked by some member present the bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar; that the call begin at the point in the Calendar where it was suspended at the last evening session for pension business, and that members present have permission to call up bills that have been passed over.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOHN MAGHER.

The first pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. BAKER, of New York) was the bill (H. R. 888) granting a pension to John Magher.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Magher, late of Company F, Tenth Regular Infantry.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 888) granting a pension to John Magher, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

The claimant served as a private in Company K, Tenth United States Infantry, from September 12, 1855, to September 12, 1860. He claims pension for rheumatism, scurvy, and diseases of lungs and kidneys, resulting from the exposures and hardships of his military service.

His testimony filed in his pension claim satisfactorily establishes the continued existence of his disabilities from the time he took up his residence in the State of New York, about 1865, and he showed, by his own affidavit, that he was unable to furnish the testimony of his officers or surgeons to prove his disabilities, and that for the first four years after his discharge he lived within a few miles of Fort Garland, Colo., with no near neighbors or others whose testimony can now be secured to show his physical condition for that period. His claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground of no record and no satisfactory evidence of the alleged disabilities in service, or for six years after date of discharge.

An examination of the records of the War Department and of executive documents relating to the regiment in which soldier served from 1855 to 1860 shows that he participated in the severities and hardships of the Spirit Lake expedition against the marauding Indians in 1856, and of the expedition against the Mormons in Utah Territory in 1857-'58. Concerning the first of these expeditions, on which claimant contracted the seeds of his disabilities, Capt. B. E. Bee, of the Tenth United States Infantry, makes the following statements:

[Extracts from Ex. Doc., page 350 of vol. 2, part 1, Thirty-fifth Congress, first session.]

"The season was unpropitious for military operations; the snow lay in heavy masses on the track which I was following (a long and circuitous route down the valley of the Minnesota), but these masses were thawing and could not bear the weight of the men. * * * It necessitated wading through deep drifts, cutting through them with the spade and shovel, extricating mules and sleighs from sloughs, or dragging the latter up steep hills or over bare spaces of prairie; the men were wet from morning to night, and sleeping on the snow. Such were the obstacles encountered while still on the beaten track."

Again he states of a later part of the expedition:

"I was in a country destitute of provisions; behind me, and separating me from the few supplies I had, was the Des Moines River, rapidly rising. These conditions, joined to the fact that my men were jaded and foot-sore from a march of 140 miles, the difficulties of which I have but feebly portrayed; that I had no saddles for my mules, and that only thirteen of them could be ridden, all these induced me to return, mortified and disappointed, to my camp."

There has been filed with the committee the affidavit of a comrade of claimant, William Keelay, who testifies that the claimant was sound and rugged at enlistment; that he was subjected to unusual and severe exposures in the winters of 1855, 1856, 1857, and 1858, in the blizzard weather of the then Territory of Minnesota; that claimant complained of rheumatic pains and debility and became thin and haggard, and deponent nursed him. Deponent did not go on the Utah expedition and did not see claimant again in service.

The records of the post hospitals at Forts Ridgely and Snelling show claimant treated for typhoid fever, catarrh, and malarial fever in 1855 and 1856.

The Oneida examining board in November, 1882, find the claimant disabled by disease of heart, from rheumatism, and attribute his disability to "scurvy and lack of proper food, and the exposure while in service."

Disease of lungs since 1869 is shown also by medical evidence.

The claimant is represented to your committee as a man of integrity and truth.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDMUND ASHWORTH.

Mr. PETERS. On page 62 of the Calendar there is a bill which has been passed over, H. R. 231, granting a pension to Edmund Ashworth, and I now desire to call it up for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension of Edmund Ashworth, late a private in Company E, Eighth United States Infantry, in the war with Mexico, be, and the same is, increased to $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred bill (H. R. 231) to increase the pension of Edmund Ashworth, having considered the same, report as follows:

The said Ashworth is now receiving a pension of $16 per month for gunshot wound in the right ankle, received at the battle of Cherubusco on the 20th day of August, 1847. The last medical examination reports as follows:

"We find gunshot wound about 2 inches above the ankle-joint of the right leg, shattering to some extent the tibia and fibula, and producing partial anchylosis of the joint. The cicatrix of entrance is depressed and partly adherent. The point of exit is adherent. They are painful on pressure. The joint (ankle) is 1¼ inches larger and the right limb is 1 inch smaller around calf of leg than left.

"We find varicose veins (small) on the outer surface from ankle-joint up to knee. He is unable to perform any manual labor."

The evidence discloses that this pensioner is seventy-five years of age, and is now and has been for some time unable to perform any manual labor of any kind, which condition is largely due to the wound received, although it may, to some extent, be attributable to his extreme age.

The evidence further shows that he has no means of support, and that he has no family or relatives upon whom to depend; that he is a man of good habits and character, highly esteemed by his neighbors, who contribute a sufficient amount, in addition to the pension received, to support him in his old age. The member from the Congressionhl district in which the applicant resides, Hon. S. R. PETERS, is personally acquainted with the pensioner, and corroborates the evidence as to his condition, character, age, and dependency.

A strict construction of the pension laws would not authorize the payment of a pension greater than the one now received by the applicant, but in view of all the circumstances, your committee believe that for the few remaining days, which at most can not be many, alloted to the life of this old Mexican soldier, he should receive an increased rate of pension, and we therefore recommend that the bill pass, with the following amendment:

Strike out the word "thirty" and insert "twenty-five."

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SUSAN L. WATSON.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. SHERMAN) was the bill (H. R. 7883) granting a pension to Susan L. Watson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Susan L. Watson, widow of Adolphus E. Watson, late pay director, United States Navy.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7883) granting a pension to Susan L. Watson, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Mrs. Susan L. Watson is the widow of Adolphus L. Watson, late pay director United States Navy. The official record of the Navy Department shows the following services of the deceased officer:

Adolphus L. Watson was appointed acting purser August 31, 1836, and ordered on the Dolphin September 5, 1839; ordered to the Marion June 16, 1842; detached, ordered to the Raritan October 26, 1843; detached from the Cumberland January 2, 1847; to the naval asylum October 8, 1847; ordered to the St. Mary's August 30, 1850; detached December 9, 1852; ordered to the Philadelphia navy-yard January 1, 1854; ordered to the Lancaster April 7, 1859; detached March 18, 1862; ordered to the Western flotilla, as inspector in charge of provisions, September 19, 1862; December 10, 1864, detached and awaiting orders; appointed navy agent at Philadelphia December 26, 1864; detached April 1, 1868; appointed inspector of provisions and clothing June 28, 1869; detached October 1, 1870; commissioned pay director March 3, 1871.

From the report of the Navy Department, it further appears that Watson was placed upon the retired-list November 15, 1862, in conformity with the act of December 21, 1861, having attained the age of sixty-two years. This retirement would seem to have relieved him of active sea duty only, as it is shown by the records of the Navy Department that he was employed on shore after that time and filled responsible positions of a civil character under that Department until his death.

He died July 10, 1876, of typhoid pneumonia. The claim of the widow has been rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the fatal disease originated after retirement.

In the opinion of the attending physician, the death cause was due to exposure to climatic influence in line of duty while on the retired-list and on duty heretofore stated.

A recent report from the Navy Department shows that the officer was under waiting orders at time of his death.

While the status of the officer may, under the provision of the general pension law, estop the Pension Bureau from a favorable consideration of the widow's claim, yet his long and faithful services before as well as after his retirement should receive recognition at the hands of Congress by placing his aged and dependent widow upon the pension-roll.

Your committee therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS SHANNON.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. SHERMAN) was the bill (H. R. 5913) granting a pension to Thomas Shannon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas Shannon, late a private in Company B, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred bill H. R. 5913, have examined the same and the evidence relating thereto, and return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

They adopt as their report the following report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions at the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, as follows:

"An examination of the papers on file in the Pension Office in the case shows that the petitioner was a private in Company B, Tenth United States Infantry, and that he was discharged upon certificate of disability September 12, 1872. The said certificate recites:

"'Loss of right hand and lower part of forearm on the 4th of July, 1872; while "on pass" he had his hand lacerated by the explosion of a can of gunpowder in the hands of a citizen. It appears that he saw the explosion about to take place, and was in the act of knocking the can from the hands of the man who held it, when it exploded. The injury he then received necessitated amputation. He is in my opinion a case for pension. Disability full.'

"The petitioner filed application for pension October 30, 1872, alleging 'disability from wound in right forearm, received while firing a salute at Rio Grande City, Tex., July 4, 1872, in attempting to save the life of a citizen who held a can of powder in his hands that was about to explode, and knocking the same from his hands.'

"The Pension Office rejected the claim February 17, 1873, on the grounds, 'Reject; not in line of duty.'

"The petitioner, who has filed several affidavits, all of the same general character, seems thoroughly imbued with the idea that he should receive a pension. He sets forth prominently the fact he is entirely disabled from earning a living.

"The Adjutant-General reports: 'Discharged September 12, 1872;' roll for July and August, 1872, covering date of alleged disability, says: 'A private, present sick in hospital. Nature of disability not stated.'

"Testimony of First Lieut. Charles L. Davis, United States Infantry (certificate of disability):

"'The injury received by Private Shannon, on the 4th of July last, was caused by his endeavors to knock from the hands of a citizen in Rio Grande City a can of powder that was about to explode. Private Shannon was "on pass" at the time.'

"Your committee, in reviewing this case, readily understand that it does not come under the provisions of the pension laws, as the injury was not sustained in the line of duty, and yet it seems that this man should have relief. He was a soldier, in the service, and engaged in patriotic work on the nation's anniversary, and he performed an act of mercy, receiving an irreparable injury in the loss of his right hand. Under the circumstances of the case, we conclude to grant his prayer, and to recommend the passage of the bill (H. R. 124) granting a pension to Thomas Shannon."

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FREDERICK W. TRAVIS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. RICE) was the bill (H. R. 2531) granting a pension to Frederick W. Travis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick W. Travis, formerly of Company D, First Regiment United States Infantry, in the war with the Florida Indians, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2531) granting a pension to Frederick W. Travis, having considered the same, beg leave to make the following report:

The claimant was a private soldier in Company D, First United States Infantry, from the 10th day of November, 1840, until the 10th day of November, 1845, when honorably discharged. In his declaration before the Pension Bureau, filed November 7, 1879, he claims that while on an expedition against hostile Indians in the Florida war, on the 6th or 7th day of July, 1841, in boats, there came up a terrible storm, and the boat in which he was was struck by lightning, and Lieutenant Lancaster, who had charge of the boat, was killed, and claimant shocked and stunned and rendered nearly blind; that thereafter he was affected by a disease of the eyes, from which he has not recovered to this day, and he claims pension therefor.

His claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau in April, 1882, on the ground of no record of the alleged disability, and no satisfactory evidence of its incurrence in service and line of duty.

A careful examination of the testimony in the claim and before your committee satisfies us that the claimant's disease of eyes was incurred as he alleged, and that his rights should not be prejudiced by the fact that the records of the hospitals in which he is shown to have been treated while in service have been lost, and are not on file for reference thereto.

The Adjutant-General, United States Army, states:

"It appears from the records of this office that Second Lieut. J. R. H. Lancaster, First Infantry, was killed by lightning July 5, 1841, while on duty with an exploring and scouting party on Christol River, East Florida. It further appears that three of the enlisted men of the party 'were knocked overboard' by the stroke of lightning which killed Lieutenant Lancaster. Their names, however, are not shown by the records."

The record further shows that claimant was with his company in East Florida at the date mentioned. There are no records on file of the hospital at Fort Snelling, Minn., for the summer of 1841, when claimant was treated there for disease of eyes.

Alfred B. Robinson, of Minnetonka, Minn., who served in the same company and regiment with claimant, testifies that the soldier, Travis, was disabled by the stroke of lightning which killed Lieutenant Lancaster, and that his eyes were injured and remained so during the remainder of his service, and he was treated therefor in hospital at Fort Snelling, Minn., toward the end of his service.

Thomas Odell, another comrade, testifies that he knows that the soldier, Travis, was treated at Fort Snelling for disease of eyes and was disabled by said disease for quite a period of time, and attributed the existence of the same to his service in the Florida war. This witness also states that the officers and surgeons who were there are dead, so far as he has been able to learn.

R. P. Russell, a sutler's clerk at Fort Snelling, Minn., in 1842 and subsequently, testifies that claimant was under treatment in the post hospital there by Dr. Turner for some disease or injury of the eyes, which, it is said, had been incurred in the Florida war.

The claimant states that he can not at this day find other witnesses who knew of his disability in service; that Dr. Turner, who treated him there, is dead, as he learns; and that, living in the backwoods, he did not know of his right to claim pension for disease until recent years. The claimant is unable to write, and in an almost blind and pitiable condition.

There is the testimony of a number of witnesses, among whom is the Hon. William R. Marshall, ex-governor of Minnesota, showing that the claimant has been affected by disease of the eyes since his discharge from service late in the fall of 1845. Governor Marshall himself testifies to a personal acquaintance with claimant since 1849, and to the existence of an affection of the eyes during that period.

The board of examining surgeons at St. Paul, Minn., in June, 1880, reported, after an examination, that the vision of the claimant's right eye was gone—amaurosis; vision of left eye failing from same disease.

In view of the testimony as above collated, your committee are of the opinion that the requirement for medical and officer's testimony of the existence in service of disease of eyes should be waived, and that the claim should be allowed; and they therefore report back the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. PORTER.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. LAFFOON) was the bill (H. R. 8423) for the relief of William H. Porter.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of William H. Porter, of Madisonville, in the State of Kentucky, upon the pension-roll, to date from the 29th day of January, 1887, for services rendered in the war with Mexico, in the company commanded by Captain Leftwich, in Third Regiment of Tennessee Volunteers, as shown by parol testimony on file with said William H. Porter's application for a land-warrant issued by the Commissioner of Pensions on the 18th of January, 1888.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions have had under consideration House bill 8423, and find the following to be the facts:

The said W. H. Porter was a free man of color, and served as a drummer boy in the Third Tennessee Regiment in the Mexican war, commanded by Col. B. F. Cheatham. His service dated from the 8th day of October, 1847, and extended to the — day of July, 1848. The officers of his company and regiment testify to his service as a drummer boy, and pay him high tribute for his proficiency in the discharge of his duty.

Owing to the fact that he was a colored man, his name was not placed and is not borne on the rolls of the Army, and hence his claim for pension can not be considered by the Pension Department under existing law. The proof shows that he is now sixty-four years old. The Department has considered his application for military land-warrant and has had issued to him such warrant.

The committee add, as a part of their report, the sworn statement of Col. B. F. Cheatham, who commanded the regiment, which they think covers the facts of the case. The committee report the bill to the House with the expression of opinion that it should pass.

STATE OF TENNESSEE, County of Davidson, ss:

Personally appeared before me this 11th day of April, 1885, Benjamin F. Cheatham, city postmaster of Nashville, Tenn., and late a colonel of the Third Regiment of Tennessee Infantry Volunteers in the Mexican war, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he knows W. H. Porter, now residing in Madisonville, Hopkins County, Ky., to be the identical person who served with the company commanded by Captain Leftwitch in said Tennessee Volunteers, in Mexico, as heretofore stated by this affiant in the application of said Porter for a land-warrant; which fact is further certified by the Hon. W. B. Bate, governor of the State of Tennessee, who was a lieutenant in said regiment, and also by W. L. Horn, a private in same regiment, in Company H.

And affiant states as his belief that if the rolls of said company do not show the service rendered by said W. H. Porter it is probably owing to clerical neglect or error in misnaming the said W. H. Porter, a colored boy, well known to officers and privates, who certainly participated in all the hardships and dangers of the command, subject to military orders the same as other members of the organization. And affiant further declares that he has no personal interest in the claim of W. H. Porter for a land-warrant. Mr. Porter is a colored man (free born), and was a musician of his company and acted as such.

B. F. CHEATHAM,
Late Colonel Third Regiment Tennessee Volunteers.

Sworn to and subscribed before me.
Witness my hand and seal of office at Nashville this 13th day of April, 1886.

R. C. SHELLY,
Deputy Clerk County Court.

Mr. LAFFOON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill in lines 6 and 7 by striking out the words "to date from the 29th day of January, 1887," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAFFOON. I also move to amend by striking out the word "parol," in line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN F. G. MITTAG.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. HEMPHILL) was the bill (H. R. 6431) granting a pension to J. F. G. Mittag.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John F. G. Mittag, of Lancaster County, South Carolina, late a soldier in the war with the Seminole Indians.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6431) granting a pension to John F. G. Mittag, would report:

The records show that the claimant enlisted as a private in Capt. Samuel R. Gibson's Company, South Carolina Volunteers, at Savannah, Ga., February 26, 1836, and was mustered into the service by Capt. J. Page, Fourth United States Infantry. He was discharged at Jacksonville, Fla., May 6, 1836. The claimant is now about eighty-five years of age, and without means of support.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I move to amend the bill by adding at the end of line 7 the words "and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. STRUBLE. At what rate, if any, does the bill fix the pension?

Mr. HEMPHILL. It does not fix the rate. It puts him upon the roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and some gentlemen more familiar with the subject than I am have said that they do not know what pension he would get, or whether he would get any. Therefore I offer this amendment to make the bill more definite.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would state to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] that if the claimant shows a disability as required by law he would be entitled to a pension.

The amendment was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACOB KINTZ, ALIAS JOHN WALTERS.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up Senate bill 1086, granting a pension to Jacob Kintz, alias John Walters.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Jacob Kintz, alias John Walters, late of Company G, Second Battery, United States Infantry, afterward of the Twenty-first United States Infantry, and later, under new enlistment, assigned to Company I, Twenty-first United States Infantry.

Passed Senate February 16, 1888.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1086) granting a pension to Jacob Kintz, alias John Walters, have carefully examined the papers in the claim, and respectfully report:

Jacob Kintz, alias John Walters, enlisted as a private in Company I, Twenty-first United States Infantry, January 18, 1873; discharged November 17, 1873; declaration for pension filed May 3, 1880; claim rejected December, 1882, on the ground that "the claimant was not in the line of duty at the time of the incurrence of the disability, Adjutant-General having declared enlistment in which it originated null and void, and record therein showing origin not in line of duty."

It appears from the record of this case that the claimant enlisted on the 5th of December, 1865, for three years in Company G, Twenty-first United States Infantry. He is charged with desertion July 15, 1867, sixteen months before the expiration of his term of service.

He enlisted in Company H, Twenty-first United States Infantry, on the 21st of August, 1870, and was discharged for disability on the 21st of July, 1872. We next find him in San Francisco, Cal., being treated for the disease which procured his discharge. Subsequently he enlisted again, as stated, in Company I, Twenty-first United States Infantry, January 21, 1873; discharged for disability on the 17th of November, 1873.

The Pension Bureau rejected the claim of the petitioner on two grounds, first, that he was a deserter from prior service, and, second, that the injury did not occur in the line of duty.

The first ground alleged for the rejection, when taken in connection with the facts disclosed in the papers, presents an anomalous case. He appears as a deserter on the 15th of July, 1867, under an enlistment made on the 5th of December, 1865, and yet we find him enlisting in Company H, of the same regiment, in August, 1870, and subsequently in Company I, of the same regiment, in January, 1873. His identity seems to have been fully known both to his comrades and his officers of the regiment, as it appears he was transferred from Company I to Company G, for the purpose of serving out the sixteen months due to the Government under the terms of the enlistment made December 5, 1865. No punishment was inflicted upon him by reason of his desertion. The authorities of the War Department condoned the offense, if any existed, by transferring him from Company I to Company G, for the purpose of requiring him to serve the original enlistment. He was injured in May, 1873.

Under these circumstances, is it just or right that the desertion, which occurred in 1867, should deprive him of his rights under the pension law, when the Government had accepted his services upon two subsequent enlistments in the same regiment of which he was a member at the date of desertion? Had he been wounded in battle during the period of that subsequent service, would it be proper to exclude him from the benefits of the pension law? In neither of these cases was he treated by the authorities of the War Department, when his services were needed, as a deserter, but under both enlistments he was granted, for disability, an honorable discharge.

It seems to the committee that it is now too late to deny to him the rights which the law guaranties to every soldier injured while in the line of duty, upon the technical grounds assigned by the Pension Bureau.

Was he injured in the line of duty?

The evidence in this branch of the case is undisputed and overwhelming. His application for a pension avers that "by injuries received at the Lava Beds in California in May, 1873, he suffered from inguinal hernia of the right side."

This is set forth in his discharge as the cause of his disability, and it is further affirmed in the same paper that it occurred in the line of duty at the time and place set out in his application.

This allegation is further sustained by the evidence of his comrades, which has been filed. In fact, there is no conflicting testimony.

The applicant is totally disabled, living on the charity of his neighbors, and his right to a pension is supported and indorsed by a large petition from citizens of the community in which he lives.

In the opinion of the committee this is a meritorious claim, and one which should receive favorable action by Congress.

The bill is reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CORDELIA EMERY.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (called up for consideration by Mr. STRUBLE) was the bill (S. 1343) granting a pension to Cordelia Emery.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cordelia Emery, widow of Nahum Emery, late of Hampden, Me., a soldier in the war of 1812.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 1343, granting a pension to Cordelia Emery, have examined the same, and return the bill to the House, recommending its passage, and adopting as its report the statement of fact of the Senate committee, as follows:

"The claimant is the widow of Nahum Emery, late of Hampden, Me., a soldier of the war of 1812.

"The pension is rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the husband of the claimant was a teamster and not a soldier.

"There are two comrades, Simeon Mayo and Andrew Parr, aged respectively eighty-four and eighty-eight years, both of Hampden, Me., who testify that—

"They were both present and participated in the Hampden battle in the war of 1812; that we served in the company under command of Captain Newcomb, and that we are in receipt of a pension under the act of March 9, 1878; and we further state that we were well acquainted with Nahum Emery, who volunteered and did serve in the company of Massachusetts militia commanded by Capt. John Emery; that he was detailed by the commander to haul guns from the United States frigate Adams to a position on "the hill;" that he was present in the engagement, taken prisoner by the British, detained several days, and then released on parole.'

"It appears that Private Emery acted only temporarily in the capacity of teamster, and then by command of his superior officer.

"The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass."

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

POLLY H. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. LIND) was the bill (S. 43) granting a pension to Polly H. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Polly H. Smith, widow of the late John H. Smith, late lieutenant Company L, Second Regiment United States Artillery.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 43) granting a pension to Polly H. Smith, have examined the same, and return it to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. The facts in the case are shown by the statement in the report of the Senate committee, which your committee adopt, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 53, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 43) granting a pension to Polly H. Smith, have examined the same, and report as follows:

The claimant is widow of John H. Smith, brevet captain Company L, Second Regiment United States Artillery, now deceased. The service record of husband is as follows:

He enlisted as a private in Battery L, Second Regiment Artillery, at Newport, Ky., January 27, 1854; was discharged by reason of expiring of term of service January 27, 1859; re-enlisted in same corps February 22, 1859; was discharged from second enlistment August 14, 1863, by reason of appointment as second lieutenant in same corps of artillery. Was promoted to first lieutenant June 13, 1864. He served in Army of Potomac, in Army of Cumberland, in Maryland and District of Columbia, in New York and Florida, until 1865, afterwards in California, in Washington, Arizona, and Alaska, in active service until December, 1870, sixteen years.

The history of the disability and death of the soldier is as follows: He was detailed in 1868 to act as assistant quartermaster and acting commissary of subsistence in Washington. His duties as such were very laborious, and he was almost constantly in the saddle. After several months' service as such, at the close of a long day's ride he discovered tha the was injured; this was the beginning of fistula in ano. He underwent three operations of the knife for relief. The last wound was seven months in healing, and before healing the fistula appeared in another place, leaving him in a worse condition than at first, with health utterly broken. December 9, 1870, he applied to be relieved from active duty, and a retiring board of the Army, convened for that purpose at San Francisco, did retire him after fully hearing evidence, "as incapacitated for further duty by reason of disease contracted in the line of his duty." He died very suddenly at Portland, Oregon, September 8, 1885, reported as of "heart disease," while engaged in lifting a trunk. The evidence shows him to have been at the time of his enlistment and up to 1868 a man of excellent health, robust constitution; never before sick a day in his life. After 1870 never well; always suffering. The heart disease is characterized as sympathetic, the result of his other ailments and injuries. He died fifteen years after his retirement, but there is no evidence that he ever recovered his health. His ill health and disability were incurred in the line of service. The marriage took place at Fort Ridgely, March 5, 1865; is testified to by the adjutant-general of post and sutler, who were eye-witnesses.

It is recommended that the bill be reported back with recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

RUTH CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. STRUBLE) was the bill (H. R. 2495) for the relief of Ruth Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Ruth Clark, surviving widow of Pardon Clark, who was a soldier of the war of 1812, and that she be granted a pension of $12 a month from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BARRY) was read, as follows:

The claimant is the widow of Pardon Clark, who served as a musician in Captain Dunham's company of New York Militia, war of 1812, from June 29 to July 9, 1812. She is now aged about seventy-seven years. She is in need of aid for support. Her husband died July 26, 1871. The claimant filed a claim for pension in the Pension Office, April 17, 1878, which was rejected upon the ground that the soldier served less than fourteen days, and that no pension could be granted under act of March 9, 1878.

The reports from the office of the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department, in whose custody the rolls of the war of 1812 are, show that the original rolls of Captain Dunham's company, New York Militia, have been lost, and that the imperfect copies of them now on file in that office are entirely silent touching the matter of the allowance of travel pay. These copies are silent, also, as to where that company was mustered into the service, or where it was discharged. A thorough search has been made by the Third Auditor's Office, and by the Pension Bureau, in order to determine these matters, but without result. There is on file in this case an affidavit of the soldier himself, in which he states that:

"The company in which he marched was organized in Batavia, Genesee County, New York, and mustered into the service of the United States at Batavia, Genesee County, State of New York, and the place where he was discharged from service is Lewiston, N. Y., and the distance from Lewiston to Batavia, where the company was organized, is 60 miles or over."

It is satisfactorily shown that the distance from Lewiston to Batavia, N. Y., is more than 60 miles. If it shall be excepted as a fact that Captain Dunham's company was mustered at Batavia and discharged at Lewiston, the soldier was clearly entitled to travel pay for at least three days, allowing, as is the practice now and was then, 20 miles per day, thus making his term of service fourteen days, and entitling the claimant to pension under act of March 9, 1878.

Your committee believe that in view of the silence of the records of the Government, also of the statement made by the soldier himself, under oath, as to the place of enlistment and of discharge, that said statement should be accepted as of great weight, and that the bill should pass, and a recommendation to that effect is therefore made.

It is proper to state that in passing upon the soldier's claim for bounty-land warrant, the Bureau of Pensions allowed him three days for travel, thus making his term of service fourteen days.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HIRAM CHILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. BUTLER) was the bill (H. R. 6273) for the relief of Hiram Chilson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Hiram Chilson, a soldier of the war of 1812.

The report (by Mr. BUTLER) was read, as follows:

The claimant is ninety-two years of age and in needy circumstances. He declares under oath that on the invasion of Plattsburgh by the British in the war of 1812, he volunteered with others into a company organized to meet the invaders; that he participated in the said battle, and was knocked down during the engagement by the force of a passing shell which exploded near him, and that he remained in service twenty days, until discharged.

He is unable at this late day to recall the names of the captain and colonel under whom he served, and the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department, owing to insufficient data, fails to find his name upon the incomplete rolls on file in that office.

Mandana Case, a sister of the claimant, who is reported as of undoubted veracity, testifies that she well remembers that her brother participated as a soldier in the engagement at Plattsburgh; that she was at home and saw him return; that he hung up his gun and knapsack and remarked, "Thank God, the British are whipped!"

There is other evidence before your committee which shows that the claimant has always been reputed to be a veteran of that war, and a petition from the prominent men of his community shows him to be a man of probity, and greatly esteemed, even though a subject for charity.

Your committee are satisfied from all the testimony before them that the bill should pass, and return it to the House with the recommendation that such action be taken.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELISHA WILKINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. STRUBLE) was the bill (H. R. 2193) granting a pension to Elisha Wilkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, instructed to place on the pension-roll Elisha Wilkins, of Crawfordsville, Iowa, late a private soldier in the company of Capt. Jacob Peak, and in the regiment of Col. Josleph Byrd, in the war with the Seminole Indians in Florida, in 1836, and pay him a pension, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. STRUBLE) was read, as follows:

The claimant was enlisted as a private in Capt. Joseph Byrd's (subsequently Capt. Jacob Peak's) company, Second Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteers, Creek war, June 25, 1836, and was discharged July 12, 1837.

The claimant is now seventy-two years of age, and is unable to perform manual labor. His family consists of himself and an aged wife. Evidence has been filed which fully establishes the fact that he is wholly unable to perform manual labor, and that he is wholly without any means of support. This evidence consists of the affidavits of the claimant, William H. Moore, and Martha S. Moore, of Crawfordsville, Iowa, and those of J. D. Kimball and William Lemon, of Winfield, Iowa.

The committee report the bill favorably, and recommend the passage of the same, with the following amendments: Strike out the word "Josleph," where it occurs in the sixth line of said bill, and substitute therefor the word "Joseph;" also, strike out the word "Seminole," where it occurs in the seventh line of said bill, and substitute therefor the word "Creek."

The amendments recommended by the committee in the closing paragraph of the report were read and agreed to.

Mr. STRUBLE. I move further to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "pension-roll," in line 4, the words "the name of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL F. C. GARRISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (H. R. 185) granting a pension to Samuel F. C. Garrison.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Samuel F. C. Garrison, late chaplain Fortieth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, now a resident of El Dorado, Kans., on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. STRUBLE) was read, as follows:

This soldier enlisted in Fortieth Regiment Iowa Volunteers August 12, 1862. On June 10, 1864, he was promoted to chaplain, in which capacity he served until discharged, August 2, 1865. In 1879 he filed an application for pension, alleging general debility and mental derangement, resulting from malarial fever, contracted in the service. The ground of rejection is based on prior unsoundness.

The regimental surgeon, Dr. J. W. Morgan, testifies that in March, 1865, he treated claimant for malarial fever and brain complication, resulting in partial paralysis of left side and insanity.

Captain Ridlen and two comrades testify to same illness, describing it as brain fever. Two physicians and several neighbors testify to the continuance of the disability since discharge. The only question as to the merit of the case seems to hang upon the point of whether the claimant was of unsound mind at enlistment.

Your committee feel that a service of three years in the Army during the war ought to place beyond cavil the question of soundness at enlistment, but waiving that consideration, the evidence of unsoundness is utterly unsatisfactory; at the most it only shows that soldier was a nervous, excitable person, called by his neighbors peculiar and cranky. The examiner of the western division, in his protest against the action of the board of review in rejecting this case, very well says:

"The review of this case, as stated in slip of Mr. Langston, is not based upon the facts and merits of the case as shown by the testimony. For argument's sake we will admit that soldier was, prior to enlistment, as hundreds of other ministers of the gospel are to-day, dubbed "cranky," "peculiar," "off," etc., but do such admissions or allegations of non-professionals in medical science make this case non-admissible when we have a record that can not be controverted by any such allegation of a lay nature? The Government accepted this man as sound mentally as well as physically. He performed the duties of a soldier for twenty months, obeying and carrying out military orders without question as to his sanity; was not in hospital nor under medical treatment during these twenty months; was sane evidently, and must have stood well among his officers as a soldier, for upon their recommendation he was discharged as a sergeant and was promoted to chaplain of the regiment, and made a full associate of by all the officers, embracing the line and field.

"The disability for which this pension is claimed made its appearance two years and seven months after enlistment, and is due to overwork while in the line of his military duty."

Your committee fail to discover upon what principle of justice or good sense this case was rejected in the Pension Office, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HIRAM BATEMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (H. R. 3836) granting a pension to Hiram Bateman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Hiram Bateman, late a private in Company I, Third Michigan Infantry Volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $36 a month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3836) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Bateman, respectfully report:

The claimant in this case states in his petition, which is under oath, the principal facts upon which this increase is asked. He was pensioned in 1879 as a private of Company I, Third Michigan Infantry Volunteers. He enlisted in May, 1861, in the first three years' regiment from that State, and was discharged in 1862, a physical wreck from the results of disease and injuries incurred in the service, and has gradually grown worse until the present time, when he needs, a large portion of the time, to have the attendance of another person. He is also totally blind in one eye, and the other is seriously affected; often so lame and helpless as to require assistance in dressing himself. He is now seventy-six years of age, with a wife who looks to him for support, which he is and has been for many years unable to furnish by reason of his disabilities incurred in the service of his country.

There has been filed in asking increase several affidavits of physicians and others as to the physical condition of the claimant. His right to pension from disability in the service has been fixed by the Pension Office, but that office can not, under its rulings, now increase the amount paid to a sum adequate to the disability as it at present exists, and has rejected the same.

In the evidence filed, Dr. John W. Hopkins swears that—

"He is attending physician of claimant; that he is broken down and feeble in health, requiring much care; is now nearly seventy-six, and aside from chronic diarrhea and hydrocele with which he suffers, has lost the sight of one eye and may at any time lose that of the other. The last two years he has had much trouble with his arms and shoulders, has to have close personal attention, and has frequent spells of sickness, and in affiant's opinion, justly entitled to special rating, as well as much in need of it; has seen him daily for several years, and he has not done a day's work since he has known him, and is fully as much disabled as if he had lost a leg or arm, and well otherwise."

Dr. Frederick D. Smith lives near claimant; has known him over fourteen years, and found him afflicted with the above-named disabilities. He says:

"His disabilities are of such an extent as to wholly incapacitate him for manual labor. He is as much disabled as he would be with one leg off, if well otherwise."

Dr. D. W. Bliss, now a prominent physician of Washington, D. C., formerly of Grand Rapids, Mich., swears that—

"He was surgeon of claimant's regiment, assisted at its organization, and examined claimant when he enlisted, and had him under his personal observation until May, 1862, when affiant left the field as medical director of the Third Division of the Third Corps, Army of the Potomac; that during the winter of 1861-'62, he secured the detail of claimant as principal nurse in the field hospitals because of peculiar fitness and reliability for that service, which required physical labor equal to any service in the field; that he had known Bateman for ten years before enlistment, and he was in good health and physically sound; that after his discharge he had chronic diarrhea and hydrocele, and general debility from exposure and over-labor, and in fact, presented the appearance of being a physical wreck; and this continued in 1878-'79, when he last treated him, in Washington, D. C., where said Bateman came for treatment."

Dr. W. B. Morrison, late surgeon of claimant's regiment, in addition to his former evidence (given in support of the original claim), swears as to disability, its incurrence and continuance, and present degree of same, in the most positive manner; absolutely correcting previous misconception of the facts in the case by the Pension Office as to cause of disabilities.

Reuben Randall and Albert Babcock, of Lamont, Mich., comrades of claimant, and near neighbors prior to and since the war, swear to his prior soundness, precise disabilities as incurred in the service, and their existence and continuance since and to present time, as entitling him to total disability rate from discharge, and present condition as feeble, old man, totally blind in one eye, and dependent, unable to perform manual labor.

John A. Maxfield, C. A. Mickam, Nicholas and M. A. Phillips, and C. E. Gregg, all of Lamont, Mich., and near neighbors, swear from personal knowledge as such, that claimant has been totally disabled by disabilities for which pensioned ever since discharged; to his prior soundness, and being by occupation a farmer and lumberman, robust and sound in body, and in addition that he has diarrhea, rheumatism in arms and shoulders, requiring aid to even dress, total blindness in one eye, and requiring much care and attendance from his extreme lameness and debility.

Peter Weatherwax, deputy sheriff of Ottawa County, and Elihu Walling, merchant at Lamont, Mich., corroborate above fully, and say claimant is in such condition that he has, for the past two years or more, been so lame in his arm and shoulder he had to have care and be helped to dress and undress; and about seventy-six years old; witnesses testify from personal knowledge as intimate acquaintances and near neighbors prior to the war and ever since.

Orren G. Maxfield, of Cooperville, Ottawa County, Michigan, swears he has known claimant "ever since can remember;" he was sound and robust prior to enlistment; corroborates all former neighbors and comrades have testified to as to continuance of disability since the war, and present condition of helplessness and need of relief and care; lives about 3 miles from claimant; has seen him as often as every few days since discharge.

John Blake, of Allegan, Mich., swears he lives less than 3 miles from claimant, where each have been since prior to the war; known his physical condition intimately since 1860; in 1861 was in full health; came home in July, 1862, sick and broken down from disease (diarrhea) and injury (hydrocele); been unable to labor ever since; says he is now nearly blind; and adds that justice demands more from Government.

L. P. Eddy, a well-known attorney of Grand Rapids, Mich., swears has well known claimant since 1870, and fully confirms all the evidence of his condition since that date, and of helplessness and infirmities now from personal knowledge.

A. H. Fowle, of same place, corroborates same.

Letters filed in claimant's behalf are from General Byron R. Pierce, late colonel of claimant's regiment, brigadier and brevet major-general United States Volunteers, one of the board of managers of the Soldiers' Home, Grand Rapids, Mich.; corroborates all alleged by claimant, and says, "I personally know this to be a deserving case."

D. W. McConnell, late colonel of claimant's regiment, of same city, says claimant was a sound, robust man when he enlisted, and he left the service completely shattered in health and has not been well since; is dependent on others, no property, and now partly blind and in need of deserved increase.

George E. Judd, late captain Company A, Third Michigan Infantry, of same place, corroborates all, and says:

"Claimant was a strong man when he enlisted; * * * to-day old and unable to provide for himself. * * * I sincerely feel is entitled to a good pension; is suffering from effects of disability incurred in service of his country."

Hon. M. H. FORD, member of Congress from Fifth district, Michigan, says, in addressing a letter to committee:

"I have had my attention called to the case of a worthy veteran of the late war, and a resident of this district, Hiram Bateman, of Lamont, Ottawa County, Michigan, late private Third Michigan Infantry Volunteers. * * * From what I can learn from reliable sources, Mr. Bateman is deserving of favorable consideration at your hands, and I can fully indorse the recommendations of General Pierce and Colonel McConnel, under whom he served, and Captain Judd, of his regiment."

Hon. John W. Stone, late member of Congress from same district, urged an increase, as "disabilities have continued and greatly increased."

Peter Doran, a prominent citizen of Grand Rapids, fully indorses statement of General Pierce.

Thomas D. Gilbert, president City National Bank, Grand Rapids, Mich., has well known claimant over thirty years; urges increase for this "aged and helpless" soldier, as "is certain that few more just claims are presented for the consideration of Congress."

Roger W. Butterfield, a well-known attorney of the same place, strongly indorses claimant, from personal knowledge of his condition for years past.

Dr. George K. Johnson, also of same city, is earnest in indorsement.

George Gray late colonel Sixth Michigan Cavalry, formerly of Grand Rapids, Mich., now general solicitor Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and president of New York City Road, says, in detailed statement: "It is a shame, and it shocks the sense of justice that the miserable pittance of $4 per month is all his country allows him for having in her service wholly sacrificed his health and strength, leaving him to drag out the few remaining years of his life in suffering, pain, and poverty," and urges that he be given pension equal to and for loss of a leg, which would have been far less degree of disability.

Petitions filed for claimant are as follows: First, one from Randall Post, G. A. R., Coopersville, Mich., by 33 members, knowing claimant personally and well; ask increase as based on facts shown. Second, from S. Brennan, late captain claimant's company, with comrades of same company, I, Third Michigan Infantry. Third, petition of county officers of Ottawa County and others urging increase, signed by Charles E. Soule, judge of probate; William F. Kelly, register of deeds; D. C. Watson, collector of customs; W. S. Walkley, M. D.; George A. Farr, attorney; Frank Slater, Stephen L. Lowing, late captain Company I (claimant's), Third Michigan Infantry; George D. Turner, clerk of court; W. P. Lillie, circuit court commissioner; George W. McBride, attorney; Walter G. Van Slyck, attorney; Hon. H. C. Akely, Arthur Lowell, and C. S. Storrs, and others, asking same, from personal knowledge of the merits of the case.

Reuben Randall, claimant's comrade and now neighbor (since the claim was rejected in the Pension Office), testifies more strongly that in addition to the disabilities named claimant suffers deafness, almost or quite total, of one ear, and head trouble, by dizziness, caused by being overcome with the heat in June, 1861, from being overmarched around Washington on the arrival of the regiment from home, when he with others (affiant as one) fell out, overcome, so that ambulances had to return and pick up the victims. That he has been afflicted ever since, and that from being neighbors and well knowing claimant he knows he has never recovered from same, and in consequence it is never safe for him to be out alone in the sun, or he is liable to be overcome by it and fall down as in a faint.

Your committee, in view of all the above facts, as shown by such unquestioned evidence, consider this case a worthy one and entitled to the increase claimed, and are of the opinion the petition should be granted, and therefore report back the bill with favorable recommendation.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MINOR CHILDREN OF LEVI M. HUNTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. PERKINS) was the bill (H. R. 6603) to grant a pension to the minor children of Levi M. Hunter, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, the names of the minor children of Levi M. Hunter, deceased, late of Company A, One hundred and twentieth Indiana Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, to begin from the date of the marriage of the soldier's widow.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

It appears that the soldier, Levi M. Hunter, was pensioned for rheumatism, and at the time of his death was in receipt of the highest rate under the law for his disability. His widow, then Catharine Hunter, applied for pension as his widow, and the application was rejected on the ground that the soldier died of typhoid fever, a disease of local origin and not connected with the military service. The widow then made application to Congress, and a special act placing her upon the pension-roll as the widow of Levi M. Hunter was passed and approved July 5, 1884. In submitting a favorable report recommending the passage of the bill, Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House, said:

"This case was sent to Congress under the joint resolution directing the Commissioner of Pensions to recommend such cases for the action of Congress as in his opinion seemed to be meritorious but not within the operation of the general laws.

"The claimant in this case is the widow of Levi M. Hunter, who died on the 4th day of January, 1882, leaving a widow and two children. He had been for a lengthy period, just prior to his death, drawing the largest pension known to the law, and had been during that time confined to his bed and unable to help himself on account of rheumatism contracted in the service and in the line of duty. While so confined he was attacked with typhoid fever and died of it. The evidence shows that the rheumatism for which he was pensioned would have soon produced his death, but, as he did not die of that, his widow could not be pensioned.

"The Commissioner of Pensions also states in his letter that the widow is a deserving person, having, during all the period of the soldier's disability, labored to support the family.

"In view of the foregoing facts, this committee, without hesitation, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill."

On the 4th day of May, 1885, the widow was united in marriage to Robert Montgomery, at which date her pension ceased under the law. Application was then made to place the minor children of Levi M. Hunter on the pension-roll, and the same was rejected on the ground that the soldier died of typhoid fever, a disease of local origin, and not connected with the military service.

If the widow's case was such a one as should have been submitted to Congress for favorable action, the same reason, in the opinion of the committee, should hold good in the minors' case.

Your committee believe this is a meritorious case, and therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment:

Amend by striking out all after "laws," in line 7.

The amendment reported by the committee, to strike out at the end of the bill the words "to begin from the date of the marriage of the soldier's widow," was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM WINANS.

Mr. BACON. I ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4788) granting a pension to William Winans. This is a bill which was passed over during my absence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that according to the special rule which has been adopted the gentleman has the right to call up a bill which has been passed over.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Winans, late corporal of Company B, First Regiment of New York Cavalry, at the rate of $20 per month, and such pension shall be in lieu of the $16 per month heretofore allowed him and which he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. 4788) to increase the pension of William Winans, late private Company B, First New York Cavalry, have considered the same, and report the bill favorably.

It is shown in this case that the pensioner is receiving a pension of $16 per month for a gunshot wound of left shoulder and injury to right index finger, and the testimony of Drs. Florence Donohue and D. W. Bliss, filed in the case, shows that he is wholly disabled for manual labor by reason of the wounds aforesaid.

It also appears that the claimant was employed in one of the Departments as a clerk, and was forced to resign his position by reason of inability to perform the duties of his office, such as handling books, by reason of his wound of shoulder.

For some reason, inexplicable to the committee, an increase has been denied to him by the Pension Office.

His personal appearance is that of a man greatly enfeebled. Dr. D. W. Bliss, who has had charge of him during the last eight years, explains his condition by the presence in the wound of pieces of the sabot of a shell made of mixed metal (some of which he has extracted), which produce a septic condition, inducing recurring abscesses.

There is no doubt that the present rating at the Pension Office is sufficient if the mere usual disability resulting from the wound in the shoulder and the injury to right index finger are alone considered, but that there is greater disability is abundantly proved, first, by the removal of pieces of the poisonous metal; and, second, by the septic condition evidenced by the frequent abscesses to which the claimant is subject.

Dr. Bliss's letter to the committee is annexed to this report. Besides this, Dr. Dougherty's and other surgeons' affidavits are on file in the Pension Office.

We recommend that the bill do pass.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 19, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our recent conversation relative to the case of William Winans, who is asking a special act of Congress increasing his pension, I have to state that I have had professional care of said Winans for some eight years past, and during that time he has been an invalid from a disability readily traceable to the shell wound in his left shoulder and its sequel; also from chronic constipation, quite frequent attacks of myalgia, and general malaise. The latter disabilities I believe to be largely due to exposure and the diet to which he was confined while a prisoner of war at Belle Isle, Virginia.

During the past eight years, while he has been under my care, he has suffered with recurring abscesses in the region of the injured shoulder and furunculæ or boils on different parts of the body, evidencing a general septic condition, entirely due, in my opinion, to the presence of fragments of the sabot of the shell, which was composed of mixed metal, and are deeply imbedded in the soft parts around the shoulder, and are beyond judicious surgical interference, unless they may be accidentally included in the field of an acute abscess.

Something more than six years ago a similar condition obtained, and I removed two pieces of mixed metal, portions of sabot which had remained imbedded in the tissues about seventeen years.

This man is entirely unable to perform any manual labor.

Very respectfully,

D. W. BLISS, M. D.

Hon. J. LOGAN CHIPMAN.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY ANN DOUGHERTY.

Mr. BUTLER. I call up the bill (S. 1547) granting a pension to Mary Ann Dougherty. This is a bill which was passed over during my absence.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Ann Dougherty, at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The facts in the case are substantially set forth in Mrs. Dougherty's petition; which is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"As a petitioner for your favorable consideration of my claim for pension, I do most respectfully represent that I am a resident of Washington, D. C. I came here with my family in 1863 from Mount Holly, N. J., when, shortly after, my husband, Daniel Dougherty, returned thereto and enlisted in Company G, of the Thirty-fourth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers. I obtained employment in the United States arsenal making cartridges for the United States Army then in the field; that on or about the 28th day of June, 1864, while so employed and in the line of duty, as above stated, an explosion occurred, which killed and injured a number of the employés.

"Your petitioner was one of the victims. I was severely burned and internally injured, besides being mentally injured by the fall from the height to which I was thrown through the force of the explosion. My flesh was burned, as scars will show, and I inhaled the fire. My collar bone was also broken. I was unconscious when found, and became insane from the injuries received.

"My son (the eldest), a bright boy, was killed by machinery in the United States navy-yard at Washington, where he was at the time employed, as the records of the Navy Department will show.

"At the close of the war, on the third day of the grand review of the Army, in the year 1865, my oldest surviving boy, of six years, was stolen by an officer of the Army, and has not been heard of since.

"My husband, who served in the organization aforesaid, left his home in 1865 and has not been heard from since. He deserted me, as I believe, on account of my infirmities.

"I have been accustomed to a comfortable home, and might have continued well and happy but for the war and its consequences. Prior thereto I was in perfect health, both mentally and physically.

"That, in view of the facts as aforesaid, she earnestly begs your consideration and prays that she may be placed upon the pension-rolls of the United States, subject to the provisions and limitations thereof.

"MARY ANN DOUGHERTY.

"The undersigned respectfully represent that they are acquainted with Mary Ann Dougherty, believe the facts stated in the aforesaid petition to be true, and join her therein and ask consideration of same from your honorable body.

"DAVID D. PORTER, Admiral.
"MRS. GEORGE U. MORRIS.
"S. NICHOLSON,
"Commodore U. S. Navy.
"W. A. LEONARD,
"Rector of St. John's Parish.
"E. C. WEAVER,
"Late Captain U. S. Vols.
"GEORGE W. ROUZER,
"Cor. Army and Navy Journal.
"GEO. BANCROFT."

The claimant received a pension as the widow of said Daniel Dougherty, and continued to draw the same until it was discovered that the soldier was alive, when her name was dropped from the rolls. This pension was not obtained through fraud on her part.

There is no question of her abandonment by the soldier. Her injuries, as well as the afflictions under which she has passed, have completely shattered her nervous system, and for years she has been an object of charity in the city of Washington. Persons of the highest character have interceded in her behalf with your committee and testified to her good character.

Believing that the relief asked for by this poor unfortunate woman should be granted, your committee report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH J. TOMPKINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 1967) granting a pension to Sarah J. Tompkins.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Sarah J. Tompkins, widow of C. C. Tompkins, late of Company G, Seventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is as follows:

"Sarah J. Tompkins is the widow of Christopher C. Tompkins, deceased, late second lieutenant Company G, Seventh Regiment Kansas Cavalry. The soldier died April 11, 1884, and at the date of death was drawing a pension at the rate of $25 per month, under pension certificate numbered 167085.

"The claimant made application for continuance of pension, which claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions July 27, 1887, on the ground 'that the soldier's death was caused from old age and indiscretion in diet and exercise, and was not, therefore, in any manner due to his military service.'

"Dr. C. W. McHugh, of Sedan, Kans., swears that—

"'He has personally known C. C. Tompkins, deceased, since the fall of 1875, and was his physician most of the time up to the day of his death, which occurred on the 11th day of April, 1884. Was his physician when he lost the use of the muscles of the right side of face and the sight of right eye, which occurred in July, 1880. At this time he was taken with acute catarrh, affecting the right side of face and right eye, eustachean tube and middle ear, and was the result of the old chronic catarrh, which was probably contracted in the Army. During the period of this attack, which lasted about fifty days, he complained of a heavy pain just back of the right ear, * * * and that during the whole period of my acquaintance with him he was incapacitated to do manual labor; that I was present at his last seizure, which occurred on the 9th day of April, 1884, resulting in his death two days later from general paralysis of the tongue, face, and whole system; and it is my opinion and belief, from the foregoing facts known to me, that the said C. C. Tompkins's death was caused and promoted or brought about by said catarrh and bronchitis, together with general anæmia, and said causes were the result of exposure in the Army.'

"Dr. James P. Graham, a physician of thirty years' standing, concludes his affidavit, after stating his intimate acquaintance with soldier, by saying:

"'I have no hesitancy in saying that, according to my judgment, his death was caused and could be traced to the effects of the chronic bronchial and catarrhal trouble he was afflicted with.'

"Dr. W. F. Sheck testifies that—

"'The only time he treated the soldier was in his last illness, as I have already stated in a former affidavit, which statement was made without consulting any other physician, and since I have consulted with Drs. McHugh and Graham, who had treated him previously, and from their statements to me, I am convinced that his death was the result of disease of the cranial bones and their linings, together with the arteries at the base of the brain, especially on the right side of the head, all of which is the direct result of chronic catarrh of nose, ear, eustachian tube, middle ear, and mastoid cells on right side extending to base of brain. The immediate cause of the last illness, however, was overloaded stomach, with indigestion and too active exercise, resulting in apoplexy, with a rupture of one or more of the diseased cranial vessels, followed with paralysis of right side of body, with right upper and lower limb, which fact I believe I forgot to mention in my former affidavit. I furthermore state, I have read and carefully considered the affidavits of Drs. McHugh and Graham, and believe them to be substantially true.'

"The marriage of claimant to soldier and the date of births of the children are fully and clearly established.

"The soldier was pensioned for catarrh, disease of the throat, and dyspepsia.

"Your committee report the bill favorably and recommend its passage."

It seems clear to your committee that while the immediate cause of the soldier's death might not have been the result of the diseases for which he was pensioned (though this is by no means certain), that it is clearly shown that the disabilities contracted in the service were the indirect causes which produced death, and there is no reason to doubt that had the soldier not contracted those diseases in the service he might now have been alive and in the enjoyment of good health.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

D. P. HOUGLAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. FUNSTON) was the bill (S. 2230) granting a pension to D. P. Hougland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of D. P. Hougland, late of Company C, Second Battalion Missouri State Militia.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 692, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

David P. Hougland, the claimant under this bill, enlisted February 12, 1862, and was discharged March 31, 1863. His service was as a private in Company C, Second Battalion Missouri Cavalry.

On January 16, 1880, he made application for a pension, alleging in his declaration "that about the month of March, 1862, near Shawneetown, Kans., his horse slipped and rolled over him, fracturing his right leg in three places, and also producing hernia of right groin." His claim was rejected June 17, 1885, on the ground that "the claimant was unable to establish the origin in line of duty of his alleged injury." The Adjutant-General, United States Army, reports him June, 1862, sent home to recuperate, and September, 1862, sent to Kansas by acting assistant surgeon, with broken leg. The adjutant-general of Missouri, in his report to the Commissioner of Pensions, states "that the records of his office show that the claimant is reported as having broken leg in periodical muster of October, 1862; leg broken, and sent to Kansas by hospital surgeon; broke since enlistment."

The claimant makes affidavit as follows, namely:

"That he was dispatched from Harrisonville, Mo., to Kansas City and Quindaro, and in passing over the road a few miles South of Shawnee his horse fell and rolled over his body, breaking his leg and rupturing him in the left groin; that he was taken to his home, at Olathe, Kans., after the accident happened, and treated by Dr. Bull; was never treated in a hospital, but paid his own doctors' bills and expenses; was treated once at Harrisonville, and reported unfit for duty; that he is unable to furnish the affidavit of Dr. Bull, for the reason that the doctor is dead; that he was never treated by any regimental surgeon, and that hernia never existed prior to injury."

Capt. A. J. Briggs swears that—

"On or about the 10th day of March, at or near Shawnee, Kans., claimant was disabled in the line of duty by his horse falling on him, breaking his leg, and crushing him in such a manner as to cause hernia; knows the facts from being in command of said company."

Olliver H. Grigg was an eye-witness to the accident, and so states under oath; and, further, that he procured assistance, and had him carried to the house nearest the scene of the accident, and later in the day had him removed to the nearest post (Olathe) and a surgeon summoned to attend his injuries.

Dr. Douglass Bell swears that he was called to visit claimant about April 1, 1872, at which time he was suffering from pain in right leg, about the middle of the tibia and fibula, evidently from the defective union of an old fracture, and since which time has continued to return at intervals, giving or causing pain and disabling him for duty; "also he had a swelling in the inguinal region, which I found to be a hernial protusion, and which I supposed to be the result of the same accident which fractured his leg. Applied a truss, but from that time to the present he suffers from both continuously."

Capt. A. J. Briggs subsequently states, in response to an office letter, that the claimant was acting under the immediate orders of Colonel Newgent, and was on recruiting or some such service, * * * and believes he was hurt in the line of duty as a soldier, and the facts set forth in former affidavit are substantially true.

John R. Finter, sergeant Company C, swears that claimant was a healthy, sound man, of good habits, at the time of enlistment. Knew him before the war and at the time of his enlistment; was well and personally acquainted with him, and knows whereof he affirms. * * * He further states that on or about March, 1862, claimant was disabled in the line of his duty by his horse falling on him, causing a compound fracture of his right leg and rupture of his left groin. * * * He was instructed in affiant's presence by Colonel Newgent to go to Kansas City and Quindaro on some business and recruit for the command. Col. A. G. Newgent swears that he was well acquainted with claimant; "that at the time he was reported disabled, some time about the 1st of March, 1862, he was ordered by me, as the officer in command of said battalion, to Kansas City on business connected with the service. Whilst he was absent it was reported to me that he had been disabled, and he did not return to duty, to the best of affiant's recollection, for some two or three months afterwards. Know these facts from personal knowledge."

S. R. Burch, postmaster at Olathe, Kans., in response to office letter dated May 18, 1882, says:

"I do not know of such accidents happening in the Army personally, but know claimant to be a truthful and reliable man in every particular, and will inclose a certificate of a physician, stating what condition he is in now and has been for many years. My opinion is that it is a just claim."

Dr. James Bell swears that he has been acquainted with claimant over twelve years (1870 to 1882,) and has been his family physician over ten years, and has been frequently called professionally to reduce for him strangulated inguinal hernia. He stated to affiant first time he saw him that he had, while in the United States service as volunteer, received an injury from the falling of his horse which fractured his leg and produced hernia, from which he has suffered frequently from its becoming strangulated so that he is not able to perform more than one-fourth the amount of labor an able-bodied man should.

Dr. H. S. Hastings says "he has known claimant since 1874; once assisted in reducing a hernia on him."

David Wallace, a comrade, swears to incurrence of disability in "the service and line of duty."

William H. Farmer, comrade, corroborates the above, as does also Milton Redenburgh, a comrade.

Oscar Farmer swears so the incurrence of the disability in the manner alleged by claimant, "by having seen claimant some time in the night of the day the accident happened, and being with him a part of next day, and having the doctor notify Captain Briggs that claimant could not return for duty."

Benjamin Woodin, examining surgeon at Olathe, Kans., in his report of the case, rates him "for the fracture of the leg at three-eighths total, or $6, and for the hernia at total, or $8; making in all $14."

John Q. White, special examiner, says "he is unable to express an opinion upon the general merits of the claim, and returns the case without recommendation."

Luther Rees, special examiner, says:

* * * "From all the testimony and from the record I am of the opinion that the claim for broken leg is meritorious, and therefore recommend its admission. The question of line of duty is fairly determined in claimant's favor by the record and the testimony of Colonel Newgut, Captain Briggs, and Comrade Finter, * * * and I personally incline to the belief that hernia was contracted in the service, as he alleges, but that fact is not established by the testimony, and I am forced to recommend the rejection of that claim."

The claimant is a man of the very highest character, and his reputation for truth and honesty is above question. His fellow-citizens of Johnson County speak of him in highest terms of praise. From a careful examination and review of the case your committee feel confident the disabilities alleged were contracted in the service and line of duty, and that its continuance is shown by the medical testimony covering fairly the period since his discharge, and they therefore report the bill favorably and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. DE MOTTE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2108) granting a pension to George W. De Motte.

Mr. PETERS. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. De Motte, late of Company K, Fifty-third Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2108) granting a pension to George W. De Motte, submit the following report:

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the Forty-ninth Congress is herewith adopted.

The committee, in their investigation of this case, find that the claimant enlisted in Company K, Fifty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteers, March 21, 1864, and that he was discharged July 22, 1865; that he made application for pension August 3, 1877, alleging "disease of lungs and chronic diarrhœa, from measles, at Camp Butler, Illinois, in April, 1864."

The claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions on the ground of there being no record of chronic diarrhea or disease of lungs in service, and no medical or other satisfactory evidence in service or at discharge. The papers in the case, however, exhibit statements and affidavits which collectively tend to weaken the conclusion reached by the Commissioner.

"Ira Young and F. M. Young testify to claimant's soundness prior to enlistment.

"The claimant testifies—

"'That he can not find any of his commissioned officers; that the regimental surgeon was reported killed in one of Sherman's marches; that he has had no family physician treat him since discharged; they all told him they could do him no good.'

"J. W. Bollinger testifies—

"'That he has known claimant since 1865; has lived near him, and labored with him nearly all the time that the claimant was able to labor. He has been disabled by lung disease and chronic diarrhea more than one-fourth of the time. Has been totally disabled during last year.'

"C. W. Bollinger corroborates the above fully.

"J. K. Tyler testifies—

"'That he has known claimant intimately since 1878; that the claimant has been in his employ. He has suffered continually from lung disease and of the bowels during that time; has been unable to perform manual labor during that period, frequently confined to house and bed for days at a time.'

"In response to call for additional testimony claimant says—

"'He was traveling all the time, trying to regain his health; that he was treated for his diseases at Camp Butler, Illinois, April and May, 1864, but not by any regimental surgeon; that he has been unable to furnish testimony of his commissioned officers, for the reason that he did not report to them, for fear of being sent from his command for treatment; that his physicians assured him that only time and a change of climate could benefit him, and for this reason he never employed a physician.'

"Dr. Hibben, examining surgeon, in his report of examination made January 28, 1880, says disability probably permanent. Finds upon careful physical examination no abnormal condition of the lungs, but for second disability, chronic diarrhea, some little emaciation, tongue healthy, abdomen enlarged, and recommends a rating of three-eighths total, equal to $3 per month. The board of examining surgeons, under date of June 7, 1882, increases rating to one-half total, equal to $4 per month, and the board, under date of September 9, 1885, makes rating at three-fourths total. The medical examinations show clearly the existence of the disability at the present time, and the continuance since discharge is also clearly established, as well as his prior soundness. There is no suggestion of fraud, nor anything to justify the suggestion if it were made."

Your committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to a pension, and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH B. TINGLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1267) granting a pension to Joseph B. Tingley.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Joseph B. Tingley, late a private in Company K, One hundred and sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to all the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1267) granting a pension to Joseph B. Tingley, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth fully the facts in this case. Your committee adopt that report and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 850, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1267) granting a pension to J. B. Tingley, have examined the same, and report:

Claimant was enrolled October 16, 1862, in Company K, One hundred and sixty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteer Drafted Militia, at Pittsburgh, for nine months, and was mustered out with the company July 26, 1863.

On March 25, 1883, claimant filed his application for pension on account of sunstroke and results incurred near Hagerstown, Md., July 15, 1863. Claim was rejected May 29, 1883, on the ground of no record, no medical or other evidence showing the existence of sunstroke in the service, or that his disease of eyes resulted from sunstroke.

The testimony in the claim is as follows: In his affidavit, filed April 7, 1884, claimant states that his regiment left Gloucester Point, Va., in the early part of July, 1863, and joined General Meade's army about July 15, 1863, having marched 10 miles that morning; his command was put on with General Meade's soldiers and marched to Hagerstown, Md., and when near the last-named place he was overcome by a sunstroke, and was compelled to drop out of line; that he was unconscious for a long time, and was cared for by a comrade by the name of Weeks; that everything before his eyes turned first green, then dark; that he was treated by no surgeon at the time; that his sight began to fail him soon after his return home from the war till 1876, when everything looked unnatural, and in 1882 he became so blind that he was totally disabled for work, and has been in the same condition to the present time; that the physicians who treated him soon after his return from the service are now all dead.

In affidavit filed January 30, 1885, claimant states that he is unable to furnish any evidence as to the origin of his disability, other than that already filed, for the reason that the sunstroke was received on July 15, 1863, while on a forced march near Hagerstown, Md., and neither the surgeon nor assistant surgeon of the regiment was present at the time, and his term of service expired the next day, although he was not mustered out until July 26, 1863.

In affidavit filed November 22, 1887, claimant states that the sunstroke affects the nerves of his eyes to such an extent that he can not see to work; that he is entirely blind in his right eye and can see but little out of his left eye; that he is entirely destitute, and has a large family to care for.

Silas D. Tingley, a comrade, testifies that claimant, from hard marching in excessively hot weather, incurred a sunstroke near Hagerstown, Md., about July 15, 1863, and was cared for by Comrade Weeks, who is now dead; that he saw claimant constantly from the date of his discharge to 1877, when he (claimant) went to Nebraska; that said claimant was in poor health and was suffering from an affection of the eyes, which began soon after his discharge from the service.

Jacob Lubold, a comrade, testifies that claimant fell out of ranks at Hagerstown, Md., July 15, 1863.

Mrs. Mary E. Tingley testifies that she is claimant's wife; that her said husband has been suffering from affection of eyes, in consequence of a sunstroke incurred at Hagerstown, Md., July 15, 1863, from the date of his discharge from the service to the present time, and has been able to do but little work on account of said disability.

E. W. McCormick, of Cochranton, Pa., in an affidavit filed April 7, 1884, testifies that he was intimately acquainted with claimant from the date of his discharge from the service to 1877, and that during all that time his eyesight was growing gradually worse.

In affidavit filed January 30, 1885, Dr. Alexander Thompson, of Meadville, Pa., testifies that he has been a practicing physician and oculist during the past thirty years; that in his memorandum under date of July 13, 1877, he finds the following reference to claimant: J. B. Tingley, farmer, aged forty years; eyes failing for a long time. They are not sore, but claimant complains of floating specks before his eyes. Everything glimmers; has to exclude the light.

In affidavit filed April 7, 1884, John Hayward, of Vallonia, Kans., testifies that claimant's sight has been growing constantly worse since 1879, and that he has been almost totally blind during the past year.

In affidavit filed April 7, 1884, Dr. Joseph Moore, of Oberlin, Kans., testifies that he has been acquainted with claimant since July, 1880; that he has examined claimant's eyes and finds him almost blind, and that his sight is growing gradually worse from year to year.

In affidavit filed April 7, 1884, Dr. John B. Pilkington, of Portland, Oregon, testifies that he examined claimant's eyes August 30, 1883, and found cataract growing upon both of them, causing total blindness for all practical purposes and rendering claimant unable to go alone; that he operated upon claimant's left eye, removing the opaque lens, thereby rendering claimant partial relief; that claimant is unable to distinguish one person from another, nor can he earn his living by handiwork. An ophthalmoscopic examination of the retina of the eye shows such a disturbance of the nervous structure as to make it appear probable that the blindness was superinduced by the sunstroke; that claimant is still blind from cataract in his right eye, and that in all probability he will never see sufficiently well to enable him to do business in support of himself and family.

In affidavit filed November 22, 1887, Richard L. Tinker, Frank R. Gump, Samuel West, Joseph W. Warren, J. P. Bayha, Dr. J. L. Elliott, Dr. Robert Damsell, S. W. Coom, Charles W. Springer, William Gates, Henry Cook, T. C. Hacker, W. E. Jackson, and other citizens, of Webster County, Nebraska, testify that claimant is unable to support himself and family by reason of the loss of sight of right eye and defective sight of left eye.

All the affiants in this claim are reported to be persons of good standing in their community, and their testimony is entitled to credit.

Medical examination made in the claim shows claimant entitled to second-grade rating for disability on account of loss of sight.

The evidence in the claim shows that claimant did receive a sunstroke in the service and in the line of his military duty a few days prior to his discharge, and that his sight, which was good prior to that time, has continually failed him, till now he is almost totally blind.

It is reasonably well established by competent testimony that claimant's loss of sight was superinduced by a sunstroke, as claimed by him, and that he is entitled to a pension.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH W. EUBANK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1018) granting a pension to Joseph W. Eubank.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Capt. Joseph W. Eubank, of Company K, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate allowed captains.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1018) granting a pension to Joseph W. Eubank, submit the following report:

The Committee on Pensions in the Senate set forth fully the facts in this case in their report, which is hereto attached.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

On March 15, 1886, Joseph W. Eubank made application for pension, alleging in his declaration that while serving with Company K, Second Regiment Arkansas Volunteers, in the line of duty, at Clarksville, in the State of Arkansas, on or about December 15, 1863, he was wounded in the right leg below the knee, fracturing and breaking the large bone, in a battle with guerrilla forces of the rebellion; that he was treated by the regimental surgeon at Clarksville, Ark., at a private house. Under date of September 29, 1886, the Adjutant-General United States Army reports to the Commissioner of Pensions "that the name of Joseph W. Eubank is not borne on the rolls of Company K, Second Arkansas Infantry."

William Cheerman, private in Company K, Second Arkansas Infantry, in affidavit filed among the papers in the case, swears that Joseph W. Eubank volunteered as a captain in Company K, Second Arkansas Infantry, and was discharged at Clarksville, Ark., on or about June 1, 1864, by reason of wound in right leg below the knee; that he was disabled while in the service and line of duty in action with the enemy—he was shot in the right leg below the knee; that affiant was present at the time he was wounded.

Dr. John S. Horner, now of Cassville, Mo., who was second lieutenant of Company K, Second Infantry, in an affidavit under date of March 30, 1886, swears that he is acquainted with Joseph W. Eubank, and knows him to be the identical Joseph W. Eubank of Company K, Second Arkansas Infantry, who was discharged at Clarksville, Ark., by reason of wound in right leg below the knee; that he incurred his disability in December, 1863, about 8 miles from Clarksville, Ark.; the news came that he was wounded and some others killed; and that he saw him, Joseph W. Eubank, leave Clarksville the day before in command of a company, and when we heard of it at Clarksville, he (the affiant), in command of a part of a company, went out with spring wagon and brought the said Joseph W. Eubank to Clarksville, and found him badly wounded at the place above mentioned; that he helped put Eubank in the wagon, and saw his wound then and then again the next day. Eubank was acting at this time as captain of Company K, and was discharged some time in June, 1864.

Under date of July 7, 1886, the board of examining surgeons at Emporia, Kans., examined Eubank, found the wound as above set forth, and rated him for total disability for wound in right leg.

In a petition accompanying the bill the claimant states that he was appointed a recruiting officer by Colonel Waugh of the Second Arkansas Infantry; that he acted as such and was placed in command of Company K, Second Arkansas Infantry; that on December 15, 1863, at the fight near Red Lick was wounded as set forth in his application; and that in consequence he was discharged by the hospital surgeon.

Your committee have no doubt, from the testimony of comrades, eye-witness, one of them, that Eubank incurred his disability in the service and line of duty; that he was wounded as set forth, and discharged from the service before he had an opportunity of being regularly and formally mustered into the Army of the United States. They recommend that the bill be amended as follows:

Strike out all after line 5 and insert "of Captain Joseph W. Eubank, of Company K, Second Arkansas Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate allowed captains."

Thus amended, we recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THEODORE GARDNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1737) for the relief of Theodore Gardner.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

SHELTON FLANINGAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1266) granting a pension to Shelton Flaningam.

Mr. PETERS. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Shelton Flaningam, late a private in Company D, of the First Regiment of Nebraska Cavalry.

On motion of Mr. SAWYER, the reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1266) granting a pension to Shelton Flaningam, submit the following report:

The report of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate, hereto annexed, sets forth clearly the facts in the case and establishes, in the opinion of your committee, a very meritorious case. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 666, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

Claimant enlisted in Company D, First Nebraska Volunteer Infantry (subsequently cavalry), June 15, 1861, and was discharged August 26, 1864; re-enlisted in Company H, Forty-first Missouri Volunteer Infantry, September 11, 1864, and was discharged July 11, 1865. Surgeon-General's report shows him admitted to general hospital, Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, Mo., October 20, 1862, with injury to back. His application is for pension on account of chronic diarrhea, contracted from exposure incident to the service in Missouri and Arkansas from 1861 to 1864.

Claimant states that he can not furnish the testimony of the surgeon or assistant surgeon of his regiment who first treated him for chronic diarrhea in the service, for the reason that they are both dead; that he was treated for said disability at Government hospital at Jefferson Barracks, near St. Louis, Mo.; was also treated at Western Medical Institute, St. Louis, Mo., for chronic diarrhea during several months in 1872; that since his discharge from the service in August, 1864, he has resided at different places in Missouri, Indiana, and Nebraska, and his occupation has been that of a farm laborer; that during the past two years he has been disqualified for manual labor fully one-half of the time; that he first contracted chronic diarrhea at Pittsburgh Landing, after the battle of Shiloh, in 1862; that his regiment was badly exposed to wet weather for more than two weeks; that he drove a mule team during the winter of 1862-'63, and was greatly exposed to all kinds of weather, and was without proper shelter; that he suffered severely from the cold, and was frequently compelled to wear wet clothing; that he received treatment while in the service from Asst. Surg. N. B. Larsh, now a resident of Nebraska City, Nebr.; that he has suffered from no acute disease since the date of his discharge from the service; that he has been able to do no heavy work at any time, and that his disability is greater in the summer season; that he is now suffering with disease of liver and kidneys, resulting from chronic diarrhea, and that he has periodic attacks of diarrhea at different seasons of the year; that he is not now accessible to any evidence further than that already furnished by him.

William Ott, a comrade, testifies that claimant contracted chronic diarrhea in Southwestern Tennessee from the use of bad water in the fall of 1862; that the whole regiment suffered greatly from the same disease.

Dr. N. B. Larsh, late assistant surgeon First Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, testifies that he treated claimant while in the service in 1863 and 1864 for chronic diarrhea, and that claimant is suffering from the same disability.

Special Examiner H. J. Brown, of the Bureau of Pensions, states that Dr. Larsh is president of the board of examining surgeons at Nebraska City, Nebr., and is a first-class physician and surgeon; that the said doctor states that he treated claimant soon after his discharge from the service; that claimant was all broken down, and still suffers from chronic diarrhea.

David Beasley, of Nebraska City, Nebr., testifies that claimant was a sound and healthy man for five years prior to and at the date of his enlistment into the service of the United States; that from the fall of 1864 to 1880 affiant heard from claimant by letters, and in that way learned that he was suffering from chronic diarrhea; that since 1880 he has had personal knowledge of claimant's disability on account of chronic diarrhea.

The board of United States examining surgeons at Nebraska City, Nebr., state that they have personal knowledge that claimant has suffered from chronic diarrhea for many years.

The facts in the case warrant favorable action, and your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM M. DAVIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1744) granting a pension to William M. Davis.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William M. Davis, late of Company F, Seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteers.

On motion of Mr. CONGER, the reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1744) granting a pension to William M. Davis, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

[Senate Report No. 647, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The claimant, William M. Davis, enlisted December 25, 1861, as a private in Company F, Seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and was honorably discharged from the military service of the United States at Louisville, Ky., July 12, 1865.

On March 31, 1880, he made application for pension, alleging in his declaration "that at Kingston, Ga., in May, 1864, he received a rupture of left side, caused by excessive marching." On January 11, 1887, the claim was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions upon the grounds "that there is no record at the War Department of the alleged rupture of left side and of claimant's inability, all sources of information being exhausted by special investigation, to furnish competent testimony showing its incurrence in service and line of duty." The War Department reports him sick at Kingston, Ga., in May, 1864.

As to incurrence of disability in the service, Capt. Peter Henigan swears that at Kingston, Ga., May 15, 1864, the claimant incurred a rupture of the left side, caused by excessive marching; that he went with him to the surgeon, who said that nothing but rest would do him any good; that he did not want to leave the company, and afterward got better.

Comrade Joseph B. Carman swears that about May 20, 1864, claimant became worn down by excessive marching, and complained of something being wrong with his left side, and was sent to hospital; that when he returned to his company he claimed to be ruptured in his left side; was never on duty afterwards.

Comrade Samuel Kitterman swears that some time in May, 1864, near Atlanta, Ga., claimant became played out by excessive marching, and was left in hospital at Kingston, Ga., and when he returned to the company he claimed to be ruptured.

The claimant swears he is unable to furnish the affidavit of a surgeon for the reason that all the surgeon did for him was to excuse him from service on account of rupture.

Dr. Charles McQuaid, Le Roy, Kans., states that he has been the family physician of claimant for eleven years, but never treated him for rupture; that it hurt him so much for the last four or five years (1878 to 1883) that he has been unable to farm; don't pretend to do any kind of hard work. The rupture is of the left side.

Dr. Wiseman, examining surgeon at Burlington, Kans., under date of September 1, 1881, reports disability permanent, and rates him at six-eighths total for rupture. The board of Emporia, Kans., under date of February 7, 1883, reports disability probably permanent, and make no rating. The board at Iola, Kans., December 2, 1885, rates him at one-fourth for rupture.

Special Examiner E. T. Whitcomb is of opinion claim "has but little if any merit," but recommends further examination. Charles D. Sloan, special examiner, says, "It is a question whether incurrence is due to service," and recommends further examination. James Stiles, special examiner, "doubts the merits of the claim." M. Dorian, special examiner, says, "there seems to be some merit in the claim, but the testimony is conflicting," and recommends further examination.

Andrew Geddes, special examiner, says:

"It is difficult to decide as to merits of this case. If testimony of Captain Henigan is to be taken it goes far to prove the merit of the claim. * * * Do not see how claim can be justly rejected, and do not feel warranted in submitting for admission. * * * The claim may have merit."

Charles D. Sloan, special examiner, "thinks the claim may have merit." J. W. Brown, special examiner, says the case is without merit, and recommends rejection, and accordingly the claim was rejected, as before stated.

From an examination of the case your committee are of opinion that the claimant has established, first, the incurrence of the disability in the service and line of duty; second, its continuance in varying degree since discharge, as shown by the several examinations made by the examining surgeons of the Department, and its existence at the present time. He is mentioned by his captain and comrades, with one exception, as a good soldier. That he is now unable to farm, and, indeed, perform any kind of hard work.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. ROCK WILLIAMSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1687) to restore J. Rock Williamson to the pension-roll.

Mr. PETERS. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. Rock Williamson, late a private in Company G, One hundred and fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, the reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1687) to restore J. Rock Williamson to the pension-roll, submit the following report:

The report of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate sets forth fully the facts in this case, and is herewith attached and made a part of this report.

The passage of the bill is recommended.

SENATE REPORT.

The claimant was enrolled in Company G, One hundred and fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, August 12, 1862, and was discharged June 7, 1865. The records of the War Department show that he received a wound of shoulder in action at Averasboro, N. C., March 16, 1865.

Claimant was pensioned at the rate of $4 per month from June 8, 1865, on account of gunshot wound of left shoulder and resulting weakness of arm. His name was dropped from the pension-roll June 13, 1887, disability having ceased.

The testimony in the case is as follows: In his application for pension claimant states that while in the line of duty at the battle of Bentonville, N. C., he was struck by a musket ball from the enemy in the left shoulder, causing paralysis of the same and permanent disability. In his application for increase of pension, filed September 16, 1882, claimant alleges paralysis of muscles of left arm. In his application filed May 8, 1884, claimant states that the disability for which he is already pensioned has increased; that he has atrophy of the muscles of his arms, legs, and chest, increased weakness of his left arm, and general debility from the shrinking of the muscular system and nervous debility; that he is easily fatigued and has lassitude of body. In a subsequent affidavit claimant states that he contracted rheumatism in July, 1864, and incurred a gunshot wound in the shoulder at the battle of Averasboro, N. C., March 16, 1865, resulting in disease of heart, from which he has suffered to the present time, and that he is consequently unfit for manual labor to any considerable extent; that he applied for a pension on account of disabilities other than that for which he was pensioned; that instead of allowing his pension for disabilities as claimed, his name was dropped from the roll.

Lieut. Col. Everell F. Dutton, of One hundred and fifth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, testifies from personal knowledge that claimant received a gunshot wound in left shoulder at the battle of Averasboro, N. C., March 16, 1865, causing paralysis, which continued during the remainder of claimant's term of service and afterward.

Charles A. Straun, a comrade, testifies that claimant received a gunshot wound of his shoulder March 16, 1865, and that he contracted rheumatism in 1864; that he complained of disease of heart soon after he was wounded, and that his testimony is from personal knowledge.

Comrade Samuel H. Williamson testifies that claimant received a gunshot wound while in the line of duty at Averasboro, N. C., March 16, 1865, and shortly thereafter was relieved from duty in consequence of disease of heart; that he had previously contracted rheumatism during the Atlanta campaign in July, 1864, and that he was suffering from rheumatism, disease of heart, and gunshot wound, causing weakness of arm, at the date of his discharge from the service, and has continued to so suffer to the present time.

William Brandon, a reputable citizen of Humboldt, Nebr., testifies that he has been acquainted with the claimant since 1860; that he was a stout and able-bodied man prior to and at the date of his enlistment into the service; that after claimant's return home from the war he found him suffering from gunshot wound of left shoulder and rheumatism, in consequence of which he has been largely incapacitated for manual labor during the past six years.

Henry Robinson and Loyal M. Dupray, citizens of good repute of Richardson County, Nebraska, testify that during the past five years claimant has been subject to spells of dizziness, disqualifying him from manual labor.

Charles A. Smith, of Richardson County, Nebraska, testifies that claimant has been partially disabled for manual labor since 1883 by reason of gunshot wound received in the service.

James Marshall, of Richardson County, Nebraska, testifies that claimant has been greatly disqualified for manual labor during the past four years, in consequence of gunshot wound received in service.

William Brandon and Henry C. Robertson, of Richardson County, Nebraska, testify that owing to a gunshot wound received in the service, blind staggers, and fainting fits, claimant has been one-half disqualified for manual labor since 1882.

Frederick A. Warner, of Richardson County, Nebraska, testifies that claimant is unfit for manual labor by reason of gunshot wound, fainting spells, and blind staggers.

Drs. A. L. Williamson, P. W. Hayes, and J. A. Waggoner, of Humboldt, Nebr., whose professional standing and credibility are strongly vouched for, testify that they have personally examined claimant and find him suffering from muscular atrophy of left shoulder and arm, causing weakness and inability for the performance of much manual labor. Drs. Williamson and Hayes further testify that they have treated claimant for several years past for atrophy of the biceps muscle of arm and deltoid muscle of shoulder and the pectoralis major muscle, due to loss of nerve force from gunshot wound of left shoulder, also for partial loss of sensibility of arm and numbness of hand, frequent hemorrhages from the bowels, chronic rheumatism, irregular, intermittent pulse from disease of heart, nervous prostration, and frequent syncopes and dyspepsia, partly due to exposure. Have no interest in the claim.

It is clearly shown by the testimony of claimant's neighbors, who have had good opportunity of observing his physical condition from day to day, and by three eminent physicians who have recently made a personal examination of him, that this claimant has been and is now largely disqualified for manual labor in consequence of a gunshot wound of his left shoulder, and resulting weakness of arm, disabilities for which he was originally pensioned, and on account of which he now seeks restoration.

The board of United States examining surgeons at Lincoln, Nebr., rate claimant for disease of heart and piles, but do not report a ratable disability on account of gunshot wound of left shoulder. The action of the Bureau of Pensions in dropping claimant's name from the roll is based upon the report of the Lincoln board, as contained in the certificate of examination made March 16, 1887.

The strong and positive nature of the evidence in the claim, from men high in professional standing as physicians and surgeons and from those in daily contact with claimant, in the opinion of your committee warrants a decision the reverse of that reached by the Bureau of Pensions, and the committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOEL B. MORTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 432) for the relief of Joel B. Morton.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to place the name of Joel B. Morton, of Valentine, Cherry County, Nebraska, father of Calvin Morton, on the pension-roll, on account of the services of his said son, Calvin Morton, in Company B, Sixteenth New York Volunteers, during the late war.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, the reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 432) for the relief of Joel B. Morton, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth fully the facts in this case, and your committee adopt it with the recommendation that the bill pass.

[Senate Report No. 403, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

Joel B. Morton, the claimant in this case, is seventy-six years of age, a pauper, dependent upon the charity of others.

His son, Calvin Morton, upon whose account pension is claimed, enlisted in Company B, Sixteenth Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, at Albany, May 15, 1861, for two years, and was discharged December 10, 1862. Re-enlisted in Company M, United States Cavalry, February 12, 1864, and was discharged by re-enlistment a sergeant. Re-enlisted as above in same organization and was discharged February 12, 1867. There is no record of his subsequent enlistment in United States Army by name of Calvin Morton.

It is alleged that the said Calvin Morton, claimant's son, was killed in the battle of Little Big Horn, commonly known as the "Custer massacre," June 25, 1876, but his name does not appear as an enlisted man upon the records of casualties of said battle. If an enlisted man, must have been enrolled under an assumed name, as there is no record of his enlistment. Said soldier was last heard from, by his father, two weeks prior to the massacre above referred to, and it is believed that he joined the Custer command at or about the time of the engagement with the Sioux Indians on the Little Big Horn River, Montana Territory, June 25, 1876, but, owing to the massacre of the entire party, no record of his enlistment was preserved.

The only proof of the death of claimant's son, Calvin Morton, is the affidavit of Anderson G. Shaw, a general merchant of Valentine, Nebr., whose good character is certified to by the clerk of the district court. Shaw testifies that he was present on the field of battle after the Custer massacre when the killed were buried by men under General Terry's command. Many of those buried were recognized by men of the burial party as old acquaintances and friends. Their remarks convinced him that they were intimately acquainted with the dead soldiers before the massacre. One man, approaching a corpse, said, "Here is Morton," to which another comrade answered, as he came up, "Yes, that is him." Description is the same in all particulars as that in enlistment certificate of 1862 and same as that given by the father of Morton in his affidavit, namely, a tall man with black hair and eyes.

Claimant states that it is hard to get testimony from the soldiers who were present at the time; that he had no acquaintance with them, and that he knows of no way to reach or find them after more than ten years have elapsed.

From the fact that Calvin Morton was heard from in Dakota, not far from the scene of the Custer massacre, a short time before it occurred; that he had been before this many years in the regular Army, and that it is quite usual for such persons on the frontier to join such expeditions for temporary active services; that he was identified after death on the battle-field, and that he has never been heard from since, there is no doubt that he was a victim of the massacre; and as the father is very aged, absolutely a pauper, and the son had given many years of his life to the service of his country, your committee believe the claim to be meritorious, and accordingly recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH DETTIS.

Mr. LYMAN. I ask, by unanimous consent, to take up for consideration the bill (S. 2575) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dettis. This is a bill in which Senator SAWYER is interested. He is a great friend of pensions in the Senate, upon whom we all rely. I ask as a favor to him the bill be considered.

There was no objection, and the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Dettis, widow of Jacob Dettis, late a private in Company E, Twenty-seventh Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2575) granting a pension to Elizabeth Dettis, submit the following report:

The facts upon which the above bill is based are fully set forth in the Senate report, which is hereto annexed and made a part hereof, and believing that the principle upon which said action is founded has been heretofore recognized by this committee and indorsed by the House, and that this claim is a meritorious one, the committee recommend that the bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 985, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill granting a pension to Elizabeth Dettis, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant is the widow of Jacob Dettis, late a private in Company E, Twenty-seventh Wisconsin Volunteers. Her husband made application in 1866, and was pensioned at the rate of $6 a month for chronic diarrhea, an allowance which, judging from his prolonged and disabling illness, was much too low. He died March 31, 1883, and his widow applied for pension the following May. Her claim was rejected, and, "feeling aggrieved by the decision of the Commissioner," she appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, who sustained the former decision.

The adverse ruling in both instances was based upon the testimony of the doctor who attended him, whose evidence gave pneumonia and bronchitis as the cause of death, but distinctly declared that they were referable to his original disability. The medical referee gave a different construction to the testimony of the attending physician, and, with fatal effect to the widow's claim, placed in the way the usual pathological obstruction.

The committee believe that the widow's claim is well substantiated by the testimony of the attending physician, which is given with full, candid, and explicit reference to the original disease, its wasting effects, and final result. It is as follows:

"Dr. C. B. Cody, Sheboygan Falls, Wis.:

"I am a practicing physician and surgeon, residing at Sheboygan Falls, Wis., ever since the spring of 1873. I am fifty-five years old, and have continuously practiced my profession during the last seventeen years. I knew Jacob Dettis, late of Sheboygan Falls; attended him during his last illness; prescribed for him occasionally from the year 1873. The disease for which I treated him was chronic diarrhea, and after two or three years chronic bronchitis was added, and as the latter disease increased the former became a little less severe, although it was persistent and incurable, and kept him constantly in a state of general debility. On the 25th day of March, 1883, I was called to him and found him suffering from congestion of the lungs, and I continued to attend him until he died, March 31, 1883. While I called this illness acute pneumonia or congestion of the lungs, it was then and still is my belief that it was a direct result of the chronic bronchitis from which he had suffered, and that affection a direct result of chronic diarrhea, which he contracted in the United States service, and had continuously until his death. The character of the lung congestion, partaking much of the nature of a dropsical effusion, favored this idea.

"It was, and is, my belief that his chronic diarrhea had affected his kidneys, and that chronic bronchial catarrh came on through disturbance of circulation and deficient elimination; and pulmonary congestion, which caused his death, was the last act in the pathological processes, beginning with chronic diarrhea. During all the period of my acquaintance with him he was a debilitated, feeble man, with frequent attacks of diarrhea and other derangements of digestion with all their usual attendants and morbid conditions. He was thus rendered unsound in every part, which made it impossible for him to recover from any acute disease."

It is possible that this very full and explicit description of the case escaped the notice of the medical referee and the Secretary of the Interior. At all events, it is very clear to the committee that death was due to the soldier's service, and that the widow should be pensioned.

The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET LAHEY.

Mr. GREENMAN. I ask, by unanimous consent, to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9523) for the relief of Margaret Lahey.

There was no objection, and the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret Lahey, widow of James Lahey, late private of Company A, Forty-third Regiment New York Volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, the reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9523) for the relief of Margaret Lahey, submit the following report:

That the beneficiary under this bill is the widow of James Lahey, who was a private in Company A, Forty-third Regiment New York Volunteers. The soldier was mustered into the service December 25, 1863, and discharged July 8, 1865. On the 6th of May, 1864, he was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness, by a ball fired by the enemy, in the calf of the leg.

The soldier was granted a pension which was paid up to his death, which occurred February 15, 1885. His pension was increased from $4 per month to $8, which he was receiving at time of his death.

The examining surgeon, in his report February, 1868, describes his condition as follows:

"Ball entered on the lateral side of left leg, passing through the leg, injuring the bones; the muscles of the leg are contracted, the leg is shortened and lame; is unable to walk without the use of a cane; the leg is atrophied and painful."

The examining surgeon, in his report of 1868, says the ball exploded in the muscles of leg, a large cicatrix remaining. The board of surgeons, in their report for 1872, say:

"There was considerable loss of soft parts by gangrene, which has caused a contraction of the muscles, and prevents his getting his foot to the floor. The entrance of wound is now discharging."

In 1873 the examining board state:

"There is now at present, or there often is, ulceration of the tissue. The leg is greatly weakened thereby."

The subsequent reports of examining boards are to the same effect.

Dr. W. N. Curtis, a graduate of the Albany Medical College, and a physician of sixteen years' experience, states that he attended the soldier for three years prior to his death:

"The wound would sometimes partially heal; when it did he would have great pain, but while it remained discharging he was easier. Symptoms of paralysis of the injured limb appeared and slowly progressed, terminating in total paralysis and death on February 15, 1885. I believe that the cause of the paralysis was the wound, by irritating the peripheral nerves primarily, and secondarily by communication with the nerve centers."

Dr. Bell, a regular physician of over twenty years' practice, states—

"That he attended James Lahey in January and February, 1865, and at the time of said James Lahey's death. That the immediate cause was hemiplegia, and that the remote cause was, in my opinion, continued irritation from an old wound or injury below the left knee, which irritation induced a reflex action, producing progressive paralysis."

The case was rejected at the Pension Office solely on the ground that—

"The fact of paralysis is not accepted as a result of the gunshot wound for which [soldier] pensioned. Said death cause not otherwise shown to be due to the service."

The committee are inclined to accept the medical opinion of the physicians, who were personally acquainted with deceased soldier and knew his situation, and had, from personal knowledge, better opportunities to judge of the case and form a reliable opinion. They therefore report favorably upon the bill, and recommend that the bill pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. H. CORN.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, by unanimous consent, the committee proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8930) for the relief of I. H. Corn.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of I. H. Corn, late a member of Company A, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The amendment of the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out "I" and insert "J."

Amend title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of J. H. Corn."

On motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND, the reading of the report was dispensed with, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The report (by Mr. LANE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8930) for the relief of I. H. Corn, have carefully examined the same, and make the following report:

Amend the bill by striking out "I" in the name of the claimant and insert in lieu thereof "J," making the name read "J. H. Corn."

This is one of that class of claims that have been rejected by the Pension Department, because it is claimed that the disability was incurred prior to enlistment in the Army.

The record shows that J. H. Corn enlisted as a private in Company A, Fortieth Illinois Volunteers, on August 16, 1861, and was discharged for disability January 24, 1862, the certificate of discharge stating that the disability, left inguinal hernia, existed prior to the said Corn's enlistment.

This is controverted in positive language by the claimant, by the physician who examined him soon after he claimed to have been ruptured, and by a great many comrades and neighbors who were familiar with his physical condition.

The record of prior disability is only corroborated by the lieutenant-colonel, W. W. Hall, and one George G. Green, a comrade.

As to Colonel Hall's statement, he says that he may be mistaken in the matter, and that it might have been some other soldier he heard state that his disability was incurred prior to enlistment. His last statement in full is as follows:

"I have been sworn in this matter prior to this time. My statement was taken by Special Examiner Shouse, a one-armed man, and I have just heard that statement read over, and I do not know wherein I can change it. It may of been that the conversation I relate in my deposition, taking place between claimant and the regimental surgeon in my hearing while still in the Army, was not between claimant, and regimental surgeon, and may have been between claimant and Dr. Cady. I will say this, that if the conversation took place at Paducah, Ky., with claimant why it must have been with the regimental surgeon; but if the conversation referred to took place at Smithland, Ky., why it may have been between claimant and Cady.

"Q. The conversation you refer to, wherein you say claimant told the doctor that he was injured prior to his enlistment, was that statement made by claimant in your presence, while still in the Army, to any one?

"A. Yes, sir; I thought I heard claimant make that statement, and I believed it when I made my sworn statement, but I can not remember when the statement was made, or where the conversation took place, whether at Paducah, Ky., or Smithland, Ky. I was very confident of this matter; it is so impressed on my mind of hearing the conversation between claimant and the surgeon, but when I talk with the claimant and he informs me that he was mustered out at a date prior to the time I thought he was, such a thing might have been, was possible, that the conversation I thought took place between claimant and regimental surgeon may have taken place between the regimental surgeon and some other soldier. It seems to me I was just as positive as I could be of anything that took place so long ago, but I do not wish to be understood as saying that I could not be mistaken, for I may be at fault in the matter, and the conversation may have taken place between the surgeon and some one else.

"Q. (Asked by claimant.) Was it not your understanding, has it not been your impression, that I was mustered out on the march from Smithland, Ky., to Memphis, Tenn.?

"A. The impression on my mind is that claimant was with us on the march from Smithland, Ky.

"Q. Did I not perform my duty as a soldier up to the time Dr. McLean told you what was the matter with me?

"A. I think you did.

Dr. John McLean, second lieutenant of Company A, Fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and now a practicing physician at Pullman, Ill., makes the following statement in a deposition before Special Examiner J. H. Stibbens, July 28, 1886:

"I remember this claimant, Corn, well; was raised within 3 miles of him, and knew him well from boyhood. I was with him frequently before service and knew that he was an active, lively boy, always running, jumping, and tearing about after the fashion of young country boys. I do not remember that I ever saw him nude before service, or that I had an opportunity to know by personal observation that he was sound, but, as I remember, he was apparently sound and well in every way when he joined the company. Some time after our enlistment, I should say in September, 1861, we were at Paducah, Ky., and while there were set to work building fortifications."

"One day while a party were mounting a siege-gun in Fort Anderson the gun in some way slipped and fell, and as I remember one man was killed and several injured. Within thirty or forty minutes after this accident claimant came to me, representing that he was one of the men who had been hurt by the gun in the fort, and wanted me to examine him. I had studied medicine and taken a course of lectures prior to my enlistment, and claimant knowing I had some knowledge of medicine came to me in preference to going to the surgeon. I examined him and found that he was ruptured and advised him to go to the surgeon. Soon after, either on the same day or within a day or two after, I went with him to a drug store in Paducah and bought a truss, which I fitted to him.

"I did not learn from him at that time that he had been ruptured prior to that, or that he had ever had symptoms that indicated that he had been ruptured prior to enlistment. I believed then, and have always believed since, that his rupture was caused by the injury referred to, and I have never heard until now that it was claimed by any one that his rupture existed prior to his service. His manner and appearance at the time of my examination of him indicated that it was something new to him, and that he only knew and comprehended the character of his injury by my explanation to him, as I remember he had fallen or been struck by the falling gun, or in attempting to get away had wrenched himself. I know it was something in connection with the fall of the gun. I have no recollection that he complained of any other disability while in service."

On the 21st day of April, 1866, in a deposition made before James H. Shouse, a special examiner, Rateliffe M. Harrelson makes the following statement:

"I have known John H. Corn, claimant, for thirty-five years. We were raised boys together, and I was intimately acquainted with him for the five years prior to his enlistment in the service. * * * He was a sound, healthy man, so far as I know. I never knew him to have any disability before his service. I do not remember to have seen him in a nude condition before service. I might have done so. I never knew of his being ruptured before service, nor never heard anything of the kind before service. I was a member of the same company and regiment to which claimant belonged and a mess-mate of his up to the date of his discharge, except the time he was in the hospital."

"I think, some time in the latter part of 1861 or the first part of 1862, while we were at Paducah, Ky., that we were handling timbers at that point about the river, under orders. I think they were used for the purpose of laying a ponton bridge. Claimant was one of the parties that was handling the timbers, and was in some way strained or hurt while handling these timbers. He complained of being hurt in his side, but I do not remember which side, but he put his hand where he was hurt on his side. He did not say anything about being ruptured at that time. Since I have thought the matter over I think that the timbers were being handled for the purpose of mounting some cannon, and think that claimant was hurt at that time, but think he was hurt at both places, and remember that at both places he was complaining. I do not think that he knew that he was ruptured; if he did, he did not say anything about it. * * * He was not on duty any more after we got to Smithland, Ky., and I think it was on account of his disabilities.

"I was in bathing with claimant and other members of the company at Jefferson Barracks several times, and also at Bird's Point, before we went to Paducah, and was also in bathing with him at Paducah a short time after we got there, and saw him in a nude condition, and also saw him in a nude condition in our own quarters and have saw his testicles at different times and did not see any symptoms of rupture; saw no enlargement or protrusion of or swelling. I am satisfied that if there had been anything of that kind the matter with him in that way I would have seen it and known of it. The first I knew of his rupture, as I have before stated, was at Smithland, Ky. We were always scuffling and the claimant was a great hand to scuffle, but when he came to Smithland he told us that he was not able to scuffle with us any more on account of his injuries. I know that claimant was wearing a truss at Smithland, Ky. The way we found out that he was wearing a truss we jumped on him for a tussel and he told us that he could not stand it. We had him stripped off and saw that he had a truss on, and I had never saw him wearing a truss before.

The fact that he was a sound, able-bodied man prior to his enlistment is also testified by the following persons, who are given a good reputation for truth and veracity by the pension examiner: Dr. J. H. Wilkin, family physician, who says he knows claimant was a sound man at the time of enlistment; Eli Smith, John W. Phillips, W. J. Darnell, R. M. Harreslon, Dr. William Graham, Dr. W. G. Brown, Dr. W. T. Cremuns, and others, who state that claimant was not ruptured prior to his enlistment. As to the record made by the certificate of discharge, Mr. M. A. Gilmet, supervising inspector in the Pension Office, says:

"The experience of every soldier and many special examiners is that the certificates of disability are, in many cases, unreliable; therefore a claim should not be rejected upon the record."

The simple fact in this case is that John H. Corn has been unable to perform much manual labor ever since he received the hurt at Paducah, and has been compelled to wear a truss since that time. The evidence in the case is, in the opinon of the committee, sufficient to warrant the granting of a pension to this man, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LOUISE F. D. HOIT.

The next business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. GALLINGER) was the bill (H. R. 9587) granting a pension to Louise F. D. Hoit.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louise F. D. Hoit, widow of Joseph S. Hoit, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

Joseph S. Hoit was a private in Company E, Seventh Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers. He enlisted November 7, 1861, and was discharged December 27, 1864, thus having served over three years.

The plain facts in the case are that during his long term of service soldier had hospital service for remittent fever and malarial diseases, for a severe injury to the back by being crushed to the ground by a barrel of flour falling on him, and for a gunshot wound of the right elbow. Notwithstanding these disabilities he continued in the service, doing duty whenever he was able, thus proving himself a true soldier. He was pensioned, but never after leaving the service was he able to perform labor, his health being completely shattered. He died in June, 1873, and his widow, the present claimant, applied for pension, but her claim was rejected on the ground that the fatal disease was facial erysipelas, which could not medically be connected with his pensionable disabilities.

It is shown that during the years that soldier was an invalid he had trouble with his head, and almost every conceivable kind of suffering from malarial poisoning. The physician who treated him in his fatal sickness is dead and left no record of the case. Dr. G. P. Conn, a distinguished physician of large medical experience in the Army, was called in consultation the day of soldier's death, and he gives an affidavit to the effect that death was due to diseases contracted in the Army, which completely undermined the system, poisoning the blood and inducing the erysipelas, which is a disease due to vitiated blood.

The case was specially examined by Charles Fairbanks, a man of large experience and excellent reputation. In addition to Dr. Conn's statement, quoted above, he examined a large number of laymen, and they all expressed the opinion that soldier's death was unquestionably due to his military service. The conclusions of the special examiner are given in these words:

"It is my opinion that the injury to back and malarial poisoning were the remote cause of death. Therefore I respectfully return the papers in the case and recommend admission."

Notwithstanding this the case was rejected, and the rejection was confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior. Your committee can not help feeling that a great hardship has been done to the widow of an exceptionally meritorious soldier. She is in very feeble health and in circumstances of utter poverty. For many years she has been waiting and hoping for the pension that she believed to be her due, and now appeals to Congress for relief.

Impressed with the feeling that few cases so meritorious as this have been passed upon, your committee report the bill back favorably and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM N. ROBB.

The next business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky) was the bill (H. R. 9679) for the relief of William N. Robb.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the pension now paid to William N. Robb, a soldier in war between the United States and Mexico, be, and is hereby, increased to the rate of $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. BLISS), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The claimant is now in receipt of a pension at the rate of $8 per month, granted under the Mexican act of January 29, 1887. He served from June 9, 1846, to May 29, 1847, in the war with Mexico, a period of nearly one year, and was discharged because of physical disability. He now applies to Congress to have his pension increased to $25 per month.

From the certificates of his family physician it appears that Mr. Robb is now, and for eight months has been, confined to his bed and house by rheumatism, inguinal hernia, and an affection of the bladder, and has no one to render him assistance except his aged wife, who is herself in frail health. Both the claimant and his wife are in their seventieth year and are without property or other resources beyond the small pension now paid them by the Government—$8 per month—which sum is utterly inadequate for their support.

It is claimed that the present disability of the husband is the result of an injury received by him while in Mexico, and which necessitated his discharge from the military service.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN FOX.

The next business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 1919) granting a pension to John Fox, reported adversely from the Committee on Invaled Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Fox, late a member of Company H, Seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers.

Mr. MORRILL. I wish to make a brief statement in explanation of this bill, which will obviate the reading of the report of the committee and show why the adverse recommendation should not be concurred in.

The reason this bill was reported adversely by the committee was because of the fact that the case was pending in the office at the time the application was made for relief to Congress. I hold in my hand a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, General Black, dated March last, showing that this claim was rejected in the office after the report was made by the committee to the House. I know it to be a meritorious case; and I move that it be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LEWIS TELYEA.

The next business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. MACDONALD) was the bill (H. R. 7491) granting a pension to Lewis Telyea.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Lewis Telyea, late of Company B, Thirty-ninth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry in the war of the rebellion, and now residing at Appleton, in the State of Minnesota, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The facts in this case show that this soldier has not been allowed a pension because of a difference of opinion among the physicians who have passed upon his case either as medical examiners or witnesses.

Your committee are of opinion that the soldier should have the benefit of the doubt created by this conflict or difference in the opinion of these physicians, especially where the preponderance is in his favor.

The testimony is overwhelming, and it is conceded that he is now and has been laboring under total disability and is a helpless invalid.

It appears from the record in this case that this soldier enlisted and served in Company B of the Thirty-ninth Wisconsin Volunteers, when his age was fifty-two years and when he was not liable to military duty. He served with his company until the regiment was mustered out.

He proves, and it is uncontradicted, that his present disability is the result of chronic diarrhea contracted in line of duty from hardships and exposure while serving at Memphis, Tenn., in or about the month of July, 1864; that said chronic diarrhea continued until 1878, when it suddenly stopped, and constipation and pains of the head and neuralgia commenced to trouble him, and have continued to do so to the present time.

The failure of claimant to secure a pension is, in our opinion, due to the fact that he was first sent for examination to a local special medical examiner, who hastily reported that he was not entitled to a pension, because (he said) the soldier had no diarrhea at all. This report of this medical examiner shows that he did not comprehend the case or give it much attention, for, as we have stated, the soldier based his claim, in part, upon this fact, and that the chronic diarrhea had suddenly stopped in 1878.

Drs. R. S. Bacon, B. F. La Rue, Lewis R. Fernald, and D. H. Little each testify, in substance, that this soldier is "suffering from headache, asthenia, and torpid condition of the liver and bowels and nervous prostration, and is totally incapacitated for manual labor" and "hardly able to walk," and that they "believe that his present disability is the direct result of the chronic diarrhea contracted in the Army."

John Clayton testifies that he has known soldier for thirty years and knew him when he was discharged from said military service, and knows that he was then suffering with chronic diarrhea, which diarrhea continued in a severe form from that time until 1878, since which time it has ceased, and he has suffered with headache, neuralgia, etc., as already stated. Other witnesses testify that he is laboring under total disability.

In August last he underwent another official medical examination, and that medical examination board reported that "from the existing condition and history of this claimant it is, in our judgment, probable that the disability was incurred in the service, as he claims, and that it has not been prolonged or aggravated by vicious habits."

This soldier is now about seventy-five years of age, and is now supported by the charity of his neighbors. His disability is not the result of vicious habits.

The committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LUCY A. NOEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. CONGER) was the bill (H. R. 9340) granting a pension to Mrs. Lucy A. Noel.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Lucy A. Noel, an imbecile daughter of George W. Noel, who was killed while serving as a member of Company H, Thirty-ninth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, and pay her a pension of $18 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Lucy A. Noel."

The report (by Mr. SPOONER), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

Lucy A. Noel is an imbecile daughter of George W. Noel, who was killed in battle at Corinth, Miss., July 7, 1863, while serving as a member of Company H, Thirty-ninth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers. She is now about thirty years of age; has been in a hopeless condition all her life; is penniless, and her friends are poor and unable to care for her. No person is now drawing a pension because of her father's death.

Your committee, therefore, conclude that the Government, for whose preservation her natural protector sacrificed his life, should now, in her extremity, grant the relief sought by this bill, and recommend its passage with the following amendments:

Insert in line 7, after the word "her," the words "the legally constituted guardian," and amend title of bill by striking out the word "Mrs."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JACOB F. JOSEPH.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois) was the bill (H. R. 2064) granting a pension to Jacob F. Joseph.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob F. Joseph, of Camp Point, Adams County, Illinois, late captain of Company G, Seventy-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 2064, submit the following report:

From the great mass of evidence in this case the following summary is taken:

Capt. Jacob F. Joseph enlisted September 1, 1862, in Company G, Seventy-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, to serve for three years or during the war, and on the 26th day of April, 1863, he was honorably discharged on account of disability.

The following report in this case is taken from the record files of the Adjutant-General's Office:

"FRANKLIN, TENN., April 15, 1863.

"Capt. Jacob F. Joseph, Company G, Seventy-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, having applied for a certificate on which to base the resignation of his command, I do hereby certify that I have carefully examined this officer and find that he is suffering from diaphragmatic rheumatism, and in consequence of which disease he is incapacitated for the service. The disease was induced by exposure in camp, said officer being predisposed. Captain Joseph has not been able for duty for the last five weeks.

"Z. B. WILLIAMS,
"Surgeon in Charge."

From the testimony of Captain Joseph himself, and that of one neighbor, it seems that the soldier had an attack of inflammatory rheumatism some five or six years before enlistment, but that it did not last long, only two or three weeks, and that he fully recovered and was perfectly sound from then until after enlistment. This previous attack was the cause of the rejection of the claim.

Special Examiner Logan says, in reviewing this case: "The captain bears a good reputation for truth and veracity, and has been a great sufferer from rheumatism, affecting head, breast, and bowels, for many years last past, and is now in a very helpless, feeble, condition, and has the sympathy of the entire community in a marked degree."

The evidence shows clearly that the soldier recovered from his rheumatic attack in 1857 and was sound and free from any rheumatic trouble from that time until he enlisted, some five years later, during which period he did various kinds of manual labor.

As his disability was brought on from exposure in the line of duty the committee think he should receive a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WOODFORD M. HOUCHIN.

The next business on the Calendar (called up by Mr. HUNTER) was the bill (H. R. 9174) granting a pension to Woodford M. Houchin.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Woodford M. Houchin, late captain of Company E, Eleventh Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

It appears from the records of the War Department that claimant was enrolled at Rochester, Butler County, Kentucky, on the 18th day of September, 1861, and mustered into the United States service as captain of Company E, Eleventh Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, at Calhoun, McLean County, Kentucky, on the 9th day of December, 1861, to serve three years. He was on the 1st day of February, 1864, promoted to the rank of major, and was honorably mustered out of service on the 17th day of December, 1864.

He filed an application for pension on the 22d day of December, 1876, and alleged in his declaration disability from an ulcer or sore on his left leg, which existed, in a small way, prior to his enlistment, but was aggravated and enlarged by exposure in the service. The claim was rejected by the Pension Office March 29, 1877, on the ground that the alleged disability existed prior to enlistment.

Subsequently, September 27, 1879, he filed another declaration, alleging disability from an affection of his right eye, caused by an attack of measles contracted in September, 1861, and also for ulcerated varicose veins on his left leg, for which affection he claimed pension in his former declaration. His claim was again rejected July 13, 1881, on same grounds for which he was rejected in the first instance.

Dr. J. F. Kimbley, of Owensborough, Ky., who was surgeon of claimant's regiment, furnished an affidavit in the case, dated March 24, 1879, which is as follows:

"That he examined claimant as musteriug surgeon of the regiment, and considered him sound, and the small scar on his leg gave affiant no concern, nor did it claimant for nine or ten months; but after hard marching the leg became swollen and the sore inflamed, and gave him trouble to the end of his service. That he would have accepted claimant if he had been a conscript, and affiant believes that long marching and constant service rendered the leg incurable."

This same officer furnished another affidavit in the case, which was filed on the 3d day of September, 1879, and is as follows:

"That he is certain the sore on claimant's leg was of short standing before his enlisting in the service and of no consequence whatever, and that his present disability of leg was caused by long and continuous marching."

October 24, 1879, Surgeon Kimbley made another statement under oath, as follows:

"That at Calhoun, Ky., in November and December, 1861, claimant was confined at the house of Judge Little with measles contracted in the service; that in affiant's opinion said measles caused the loss of sight of right eye.

"That he knew the sight of claimant's right eye was good when he entered the service, and that after the attack of measles his eye grew gradually blind, and is now most entirely gone; that it was after the attack of measles that his eye beecame diseased."

S. P. Love, of Greenville, Muhlenberg County, Ky., who was lieutenant-colonel of claimant's regiment, furnished an affidavit in the case, which was filed on the 24th day of March, 1879, in which he states:

"That claimant some time in 1362 complained of a sore on his left leg between the knee and ankle joints, which rendered him at times unable for duty, and in consequence of said sores or ulcers he was sent to hospital at Louisville, Ky., in December, 1862, where he remained until February, 1863. That the sores continued until he was discharged."

This same officer furnished another affidavit in the case, which was filed October 24, 1879, and is as follows:

"That soon after claimant joined the regiment he was attacked with measles and taken to the house of Douglas Little; that after he became convalescent he joined the command and did duty with it almost continuously until he was mustered out; that frequently after said attack of measles he complained of and suffered, as affiant believes, from the effects of said disease, especially its effects upon the eyes, and that it was the cause of the loss of sight in one of them."

Noah Moore, who was a lieutenant of claimant's company and regiment, deposes the same as above, and adds "that he believes claimant's eyes were sound at date of muster into the service."

Claimant was examined by a board of United States examining surgeons of the Pension Office, in this city, on the 26th day of September, 1879, who made the following official report in the case:

"We find a large varicose ulcer, the lower margin of the ulcer, 2 inches above the internal malleolus of the left leg, 2 inches long, ranging diagonally across the leg towards the margin of the tibia, averaging three-fourths of an inch wide, deep and angry, discharging a sanious fluid. The superficial veins of the foot and some of the deep ones of the leg are varicosed. Has had to wear an elastic stocking, but does not wear one now. * * * The whole of the ankle is now discolored, not much swollen, but he complains of constant pain. Says that he had measles in 1862, which was followed by almost total loss of sight of right eye; claims that he can prove this; if so, he is entitled to one-fourth rating for this."

The Commissioner of Pensions addressed a letter of inquiry to the Surgeon-General United States Army, in regard to this case, and received the following reply:

"WAR DEPARTMENT, SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
"RECORD AND PENSION DIVISION,
"Washington, D. C., February 7, 1880.

"[Transcript from records.]

"It appears from the records filed in this office that Capt. W. M. Houchin, Company E, One hundred and eleventh Kentucky Infantry, entered No. 14 (officers') general hospital, Louisville, Ky., with ulcerated ankle, November 25, 1862, and returned to duty December 24, 1862.

"By order of the Surgeon-General.

"J. J. WOODWARD,
"Surgeon United States Army."

While your committee are of the opinion expressed by the Pension Office that claimant received the disabilities prior to his muster into the United States service, they believe that said disabilties were contracted after enrollment and prior to muster, and therefore make this favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JULIA BRYAN.

The next business on the Calendar (called up by Mr. SHIVELY) was the bill (H. R. 8704) granting a pension to Julia Bryan, late nurse at Jeffersonville hospital.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Julia Bryan, late nurse in Jefferson general hospital, at Jeffersonville, Ind., and pay her a pension of $25 per month as services as nurse in the late war of the rebellion.

The report (by Mr. MATSON), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

Miss Julia Bryan was commissioned as an Army nurse by the superintendent of women nurses at Washington City in April, 1864, and was assigned to duty at Jefferson general hospital April 14, 1864, and was honorably discharged May 20, 1865. H. W. Bissell and W. W. Wickham testify that they have known the applicant, respectively, fifty and forty years; that she is a person of good moral character, and is in every way worthy to receive the benefits of the pension laws; that she volunteered her service without hope of reward; and that she is without adequate means of support, having to depend on her own labor for subsistence.

C. W. Crary and B. G. Crary testify that they have known the applicant since the year 1834, and know that she is wholly dependent on her own labor for support; that all she has is a little home, wholly the avail of her own prudence and saving economy. She is between sixty-three and sixty-five years old, and is a seamstress, which is her only means of support. A large number of the business men and neighbors of the applicant certify to the foregoing fact, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The committee believe this to be a meritorious case, and therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELEANOR S. LAWSON.

The next business on the Calendar (called up by Mr. ARNOLD) was the bill (S. 175) granting a pension to Eleanor S. Lawson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eleanor S. Lawson, widow of Elias Lawson, late an acting ensign in the United States Navy.

The report (by Mr. SPOONER), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

That they adopt the following Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 164, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

Elias Lawson, the husband of claimant, an acting ensign in the United States Navy, served on board the United States steam-ship Maratanza. In March, 1865, while in command of a boat's crew, removing obstructions from the Cape Fear River, North Carolina, he was severely injured. He received a pension in January, 1884, for his disability, which pension was increased to $15 a month in April, 1884.

There is ample proof that he was a sound man at the time of his enlistment, and the evidence on file seems to establish conclusively the fact that he died from the effects of disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty on July 7, 1884.

Your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT H. STURGESS.

The next business on the Calendar (called up by Mr. LANE) was the bill (S. 767) granting a pension to Robert H. Sturgess.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert H. Sturgess, late lieutenant-colonel of the Eighth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension according to his rank as a lieutenant-colonel.

The report (by Mr. LANE), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 767, beg leave to report that they have considered the same and find that near to close of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress a bill granting a pension to said Robert H. Sturgess was passed by the Senate, and again at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress. The report of the Senate is very full in this case, and your committee adopts said report, which is as follows:

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 767) granting a pension to Robert H. Sturgess, have examined the same and report:

"A bill granting a pension to Robert H. Sturgess was passed by the Senate near the close of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

"The report, which covers the history of the case, is as follows, and is adopted:

"'The bill proposes to give Robert H. Sturgess, late lieutenant-colonel Eighth Illinois Infantry Volunteers, a pension according to his rank as lieutenant-colonel.

"'John M. Phipps, of Evansville, Ind., makes affidavit that he was surgeon of the Eighth Illinois Infantry, and that while acting in that capacity he treated Colonel Sturgess, on or about June 6, 1861, for an inflammation of the lungs. He was sent home while still sick. After Colonel Sturgess returned to the command affiant treated him for obstinate constipation at various times.

"'Dr. Phipps certifies that he has examined claimant, and finds that he has an inguinal hernia of the left side and also rheumatism.

"'Dr. Alva C. Bishop, of Butte City, Mont., late captain of Company H, Eighth Illinois Infantry, makes affidavit that he belonged to said company and regiment from its organization in April, 1861, until it was mustered out in 1866; that he was well acquainted with Lieutenant-Colonel Sturgess; that immediately after being mustered in the regiment was ordered to Cairo, Ill., where it was compelled to camp in the mud several days and nights without shelter of any kind, causing much sickness among officers and men; that early in June, 1861, Sturgess, then first lieutenant of Company H, was taken violently ill of lung fever and was sent home to Vandalia, Ill., in charge of Private Lewis; that although he returned in a few weeks, he was feeble nearly all that year. A few days after the battle of Shiloh, where he commanded the regiment the two days, he was taken very ill again, but would not leave the regiment. He was prescribed for by Asst. Surg. J. M. Phipps. During the siege at Vicksburg, in 1863, his health was much impaired; in fact, during the whole campaign, but being the only field officer, he would not leave the regiment, and remained constantly on duty. Affiant was personally acquainted with him before the war and never knew him to be sick, and believes that all his present disabilities are traceable to exposure during his service in the Army.

"'Before entering the Army Colonel Sturgess had the reputation of being one of the best men physically in his county, but, as a result of his exposure in the service, he has failed rapidly in the last few years. He is a builder by trade, but is now suffering from hernia and rheumatism, and is unable to do any work that requires stooping or extra exertion, and suffers from the least exposure.

"'When the war broke out and the Government called for troops claimant got out the first call for volunteers in Southern Illinois. He served as first lieutenant, captain, major, and lieutenant-colonel, and was always with his men. Neither the company or regiment ever marched a mile or fired a shot but he was with them. He never shirked a duty and never received any bounty or anything except his regular pay. Crippled up as he is, he has to work hard, every day that he can get work, to support his large family.

"'In June, 1861, while lying in camp at Cairo, he had a very severe attack of lung fever, so severe that he was sent home. He returned to duty before being entirely well and has suffered from the effects ever since. He commanded his regiment as a captain the two days at Shiloh, and commanded it all through the Vicksburg campaign as lieutenant-colonel—all through that long campaign being the only field officer with the regiment—during the summer, fall, and winter being compelled to be on duty all the time. Finally he became so worn out that he sent in his resignation, which was approved by Generals Logan and McPherson.

"'After his return to the Army after his sickness he was a constant sufferer from constipation and has been ever since. This caused his hernia. After returning home he suffered from rheumatism, and has ever since, been unable to use his left arm without great pain.

"'The bill is reported favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.'

"The committee therefore, in view of the facts of said case, report that said bill do pass."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THERESA HERBST.

The next business on the Calendar (called up by Mr. BAKER, of New York) was the bill (H. R. 8078) granting a pension to Theresa Herbst, widow of John Herbst, late private Company G, One hundred and fortieth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theresa Herbst, widow of John Herbst, late a private in Company G, One hundred and fortieth Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the widow of John Herbst or Harpst, who served in Company G, One hundred and fortieth Regiment New York Volunteers, and died of disease contracted in the service September 25, 1868. Her claim for pension has been rejected on the ground that the soldier while a prisoner of war joined the Confederate army.

The records of the War Department show that the soldier enlisted August 26, 1862. He was wounded in head at the battle of Gettysburgh, Pa., for which wound he was treated in hospital until September 5, 1863. At Petersburgh, Va., while in action, on August 22, 1864, he was captured, and taken to Salisbury, N. C., where he was found in the Confederate service at the capture of that place by General Stoneman's forces in the spring of 1865, exact date not shown. According to the record he made his identity known voluntarily, pleading that he joined those forces to prevent starvation. He was placed under arrest, but released without trial July 6, 1865, and finally honorably discharged October 11, 1865.

The evidence before your committee clearly shows that at date of discharge the soldier was a great sufferer from rheumatism and dropsy; thathe continued in this condition, gradually growing worse, and finally died of disease of heart, the result of army service.

The only point at issue is the soldier's enlistment in the Confederate service. The statutes exclude from the pensisn-rolls such persons or their heirs who have voluntarily aided or abetted the Confederates during the war of the rebellion, unless subsequent to the service in the Confederate army or navy such person served in the Army of the United States, and in the latter service contracted a disability.

It can hardly be charged against this soldier that disloyalty to the flag prompted him to take the step which thus far has kept his widow out of pension to which she would seem to be so justly entitled otherwise, for his patriotism is so fully established by the testimony of his officers and comrades as to remove all doubts on that point. The command to which he belonged was engaged in some of the fiercest battles of the war, among which it is only necessary to name Fredericksburgh, Chancellorsville, Gettysburgh, and Mine Run. Could any one doubt his patriotism and bravery when taken off the field with a bullet-shot in head, as he was from the bloody field of Gettysburgh?

Some other cause must therefore be assigned for the action taken by him. For the purposes of this report it does not seem necessary to enter into the acknowledged pitiable condition of those who by the misfortunes of war became the prisoners of the opposing forces, and by reason of this condition should not be held to a strict accountability for their acts.

Evidently this view of the case was taken by the proper authorities. "Starvation" was the excuse, and upon that plea the soldier was restored to his full rights, and after several months' faithful service was granted that which is the pride of the true soldier of every country—an honorable discharge.

As Congress, as heretofore stated, has already made provision for those who, after a voluntary service in the Confederate army, regardless of the length thereof, have become disabled in subsequent service in the Army of the Union, whether long or short, your committee are clearly of opinion that two years' faithful service and participation in the greatest battle of the century before capture should entitle a soldier of the United States or his heirs, who, while under duress and with almost certain death before him, seeks temporary relief by joining the enemy, to at least equal consideration.

The widow is poor, but highly respectable. A number of the soldier's officers and comrades, as well as the mayor of Rochester, N. Y., where she resides, and other reputable citizens, join in her petition for relief.

Your committee believe that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMSON M. DAVID.

The next business on the Calendar (called up by Mr. MACDONALD) was the bill (H. R. 6300) granting a pension to Samson M. David.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samson M. David, late a private of Company E, Thirty-first Regiment Missouri Enrolled Militia.

The report (by Mr. WALKER), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The beneficiary named in the bill served as a member of Companies A and E, Thirty-first Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia. He applied for pension September 5, 1886, on account of an injury to eyes incurred about November, 1864. The claim was rejected principally on the ground that the pension laws make no provisions for members of the militia force who did not file and complete their claims prior to July 4, 1874.

Claimant is shown to have been enrolled in Company E of the aforesaid regiment on July 20, 1864, was discharged August 23, 1864, again enrolled in Company A of the same command about October 9, 1864, and finally relieved from duty December 31, 1864. The alleged injury was incurred while in the latter service, he being one of a detail of 150 men of the regiment ordered into the field by Brigadier-General Craig against the Confederate forces under General Price, who had invaded the State of Missouri.

At or near Carrollton, Mo., while ordered to discharge their guns, preparatory to cleaning the same, the command having received orders to march against the enemy, the tube of claimant's gun bursted, a piece of the same striking him in the right eye. This is shown by the testimony of a number of comrades who were present at the time. In consequence of this injury the eye became diseased, and from sympathy the other eye is likewise seriously affected. There is an abundance of testimony, professional and lay, fully establishing the connection of the present disability with the service in the militia while co-operating with the forces of the United States. Medical examination of January 5, 1887, shows total loss of sight of right eye, and almost entire loss of sight of the left eye.

The pension laws make provisions for wounds or injuries received by militiamen while engaged in battle with Confederates or Indians under the restrictions heretofore referred to, and Congress always has favorably considered the claims of those who were thus disabled but from any cause failed to complete their claim within the prescribed limitation.

The claimant in this case, although not in actual battle at the time of the incurrence of the disability, was preparing to go into fight with the enemy then in close proximity, and under a liberal construction of the statute must be held to have been in pensionable service.

For this reason the committee ask that Congress extend the relief which this unfortunate man stands so much in need of, and therefore return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BENJAMIN F. HOWARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. CHEADLE,) was the bill (H. R. 4762) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Howard.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Benjamin F. Howard, a helpless cripple from the age of six years, and a son of Eli Howard, late a member of Company D of the Ninty-ninth Indiana Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the rules of rating governing all pension cases.

The report (by Mr. MATSON), which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

The claimant is the son of Eli Howard, late a member of Company D, Ninety-ninth Indiana Volunteers. As appears from the papers, the said soldier died on July 1, 1882, and at that time was receiving a pension of $18 per month. The mother being dead, Mary E. Howard, the only surviving child under sixteen years old, was placed on the pension-roll and was paid a pension until May 28, 1885, when she became sixteen and her name was stricken from the roll. The applicant herein, the son of said deceased soldier, was over sixteen years of age and received no pension as one of soldier's heirs. He now asks to be placed on the pension-roll as the dependent invalid son of Eli Howard, deceased. The evidence is to the effect, and it is not disputed, that the death of the soldier was caused by disabilities incurred in the Army and in line of duty.

The evidence before the committee shows that since the applicant arrived at the age of six years he has been a helpless cripple from falling off a sled, injuring his knee, since which time he has been perfectly helpless. Since the death of his parents he has been supported by begging, and by the township trustees, and has occasionally been at the poor-house. He is represented by his neighbors and those who have always known him as being unable to do any hard work, and will always be a cripple to the day of his death. He is unmarried, sober, and honest, and was entirely dependent on his father for support up to the time of his death. Since that time he has made his living by selling fruits and nuts, begging, and living off the county and township and the charities of the people.

The committee believe that this is a case for Congressional action, and therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment: Strike out all after the word "pension-roll," in line 7, and insert "at the rate of $8 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM E. WHEELER.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. CLEMENTS) was the bill (H. R. 2046) for the relief of William E. Wheeler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William E. Wheeler, late of Company G, First United States Sharpshooters, at $8 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of California) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2046) for the relief of William E. Wheeler, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Wheeler is now in receipt of pension at the rate of $2 per month for gunshot wound of right arm. In addition to this disability he claims that he is disabled by reason of the sequences of mumps. The latter claim has been rejected because in the opinion of the Pension Bureau the evidence is insufficient to show that present disease is a result of mumps.

Three comrades testify that in the latter part of May, 1862, Wheeler became suddenly blind from the effects of mumps, and was taken to the hospital. His testicles were in a high state of inflammation, and continued so for about three weeks, when he returned to the company and performed duty until captured.

Medical examination shows atrophy of testicles and varicocele of left, which, in the opinion of the examining surgeons, is due to mumps.

The absence of a medical history from discharge to present time is the principal cause of the adverse action of the Pension Bureau. When the fact of claimant's frequent changes of residence since his discharge and the privacy usually observed in this class of disabilities is considered, it is not strange that such a lack of evidence exists as to preclude favorable action under the rules governing the Pension Bureau in the adjudication of claims.

The present disability is a professionally conceded sequence of mumps, and the existence of the latter in service having been satisfactorily shown, your committee are of opinion that the relief asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass; amended, however, by striking out all after the word "sharpshooters," in line 6, and insert therein instead the words "at eight dollars per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. I desire to know whether gentlemen who are present to-night and have not been recognized will be recognized at the opening of the session next Friday night.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not state. It will depend on the order of the committee. This is a proceeding by unanimous consent.

MILTON MERWIN.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked for by Mr. DE LANO) was the bill (H. R. 9649) continuing the pension of Milton Merwin, a minor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to continue on the pension-roll, from and after August 23, 1887, during life the name of Milton Merwin, the child of Morris M. Merwin, late a private Company E, Nineteenth New York Volunteers, at the rate of pension paid said child at said date, the child having been since birth subject to an incurable, disabling, and hereditary disease.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9649) continuing the pension of Milton Merwin, a minor, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The beneficiary named in the bill is the son of Morris M. Merwin, who served as private in Company E, Nineteenth Regiment New York Volunteers, and died February 8, 1872, of rheumatism. His widow remarried August 18, 1875; from from which date his two minor children, Albert M. and Milton, were pensioned, and continued to draw pension until the younger, Milton, became sixteen years of age, August 23, 1887, since which date no one has been drawing pension on account of the aforesaid soldier.

Milton Merwin is shown by the testimony of prominent and reliable physicians of the town in which he resides to be utterly incapable of obtaining subsistence by manual labor. He is of unusually small size, with insufficient muscular development to perform manual labor, and is besides a sufferer from paralysis agitans, and subject to severe spells of sickness upon the slightest exertion; having no means of support he must become a charge upon the town. In the opinion of the physicians this unfortunate condition is due to the disability of the father contracted in the service of the United States.

Congress has on former occasions of this kind responded liberally to the request of this class of dependents, and therefore your committee report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by changing the title of the same so as to read: "Granting a pension to Milton Merwin;" also by striking out all between the words "to," in line 4, and "name," in line 6, and insert therein instead the words "place on the pension-rolls the;" also by striking out all after the word "Volunteers," in line 8, and insert therein instead the words "at the rate of $18 per month."

The amendment to the title of the bill was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM S. SIMS.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar (the consideration of which was asked by Mr. LANE) was the bill (H. R. 2077) to place on the pension-roll the name of William S. Sims, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 2, after "pension-roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Page 1, line 2, after the word "of," where it first occurs, insert "Salima A. Sims, widow of."

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after "volunteers" to the end of the bill.

Amend the title to conform.

The Senate amendments were concurred in; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1737) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner was, on motion of Mr. MORRILL, indefinitely postponed.

WILLIAM S. SIMS.

A bill (H. R. 2027) to place on the pension-roll the name of William S. Sims was reported from the Committee of the Whole House with the recommendation that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN C. WAGONER.

Mr. RICE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2530) granting a pension to John C. Wagoner.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John C. Wagoner, former chief packer in Custer's expedition against the Indians, and to pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2530) granting a pension to John C. Wagoner, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The records of the Quartermaster-General of the Army show that this claimant was employed under Captain H. J. Nowlan, Seventh United States Cavalry, acting assistant quartermaster expedition in the field, as chief packer in charge of pack-trains, at $100 per month, from March 1 to September 23, 1876, when discharged.

He was with the command at the battle of Little Big Horn, June 25 and 26, 1876, and the evidence shows that in that engagement with the Indians he received a gunshot wound of the forehead. He can get no relief before the Pension Bureau under the general pension laws, because he was borne, not as enlisted man, but as an employé of the Quartermaster Department, with the expedition, although it appears that his duties were important and necessary ones, and he was subjected to all the perils and casualties of the soldiers on that eventful undertaking.

Maj. M. A. Reno and eleven other officers of the Seventh Cavalry certify under date of September 4, 1876, that the claimant was wounded at the battle of Little Big Horn, and also that he was regarded as an energetic, trustworthy, and capable man.

Assistant Surgeon H. R. Porter, who accompanied the Custer expedition against the hostile Sioux, certifies under date of October 22, 1885, that Wagoner was wounded in the forehead on either the 25th or 26th day of June, 1876, while on duty, and surrounded by Indians during the fight at the Little Big Horn under Major Reno; that the ball struck him on the forehead above the nose, and that it was thought at the time deponent dressed the wound that the wound would prove fatal, as the ball passed through the skull and into the brain.

Testimony of reliable physicians show that the wound disables claimant, affecting his head and eyes and causing nervous irritability, headaches, and an intolerance to the heat of the sun, at times incapacitating him for manual labor.

Your committee are of the opinion that the claimant having been wounded while engaged in an action with hostile savages, and being without remedy under the general law, his name should be placed on the pension-roll at a rate commensurate with his disability.

(Precedents: Forty-eighth Congress, chapter 251, John C. Fensche; chapter 255, William J. Lee; chapter 266, Decatur Hamlin.)

Your committee therefore return the bill to the House and recommend its passage, amended, however, by adding thereto the following words: "At the rate of a private soldier."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. RICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TITUS WILDER.

Mr. DE LANO. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2064) granting a pension to Titus Wilder.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Titus Wilder, who served in the United States Navy as armorer during the war with Mexico in 1846 and 1847, at the rate of $72 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2064) granting a pension to Titus Wilder, have considered the same and report as follows:

The records of the Navy Department show that this man was enlisted in the Navy February 7, 1845, and served on board the North Carolina, the Saratoga, and the Lawrence until September 14, 1846, when he was discharged. He is a pensioner at the rate of $8 per month under the act of January 29, 1887, usually termed the Mexican pension act, by the terms of which no greater rate of pension can be granted by the bureau.

Mr. Wilder is now in his sixty-ninth year, and since 1877 has been totally blind. He is without means of subsistence beyond his small pension and the assistance given him by his wife, who goes out upon the streets selling articles for family use.

In the declaration of Mr. Wilder filed before the Pension Bureau, he declares that he incurred hisdisease of the eyes during his naval service in 1846; that in March of that year, while serving on board the brig Lawrence, in the line of duty, he was forging socket boat-hooks, when one of them fell from the tongs into a bucket of water, and the hot steam flying upwards struck him in the left eye, destroying the optic nerve, and affected the right eye until 1877, when he became helplessly blind.

The log-books and other records of the Lawrence are not on file at the Navy Department, not having been preserved, and claimant is thus unfortunately deprived of his best and most reliable evidence of his disability. His comrades and officers on the Lawrence he swears he is now unable to find, and the Department is unable to assist him. The only officer found was R. L. Laws, and he states that at this late date he can not remember any of the incidents of the voyage relating to the sailors.

It is, however, shown by reliable testimony that when the sailor reached his home in 1848 his left eye was affected; he was unable to distinguish objects clearly with it, and he then told the story that he now tells as to the manner of the incurrence of the disability. His eyes have continuously since service grown worse, and about 1877 he became blind.

These witnesses have been neighbors to him during the past forty years, and are represented to your committee as worthy of full credence and belief.

The board of surgeons at Syracuse, N. Y., in May, 1883, found Mr. Wilder totally blind, and recommended a rating of $72 a month, as fixed by law for such a disability.

Your committee are of the opinion that it is a fair legal presumption that the blindness was incurred during the man's naval service, and therefore return the bill to the House, recommending its passage.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DE LANO moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The House then, under the previous order (at 10.30 p. m.), adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 16, 1888.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION ON CONNECTICUT RIVER.

The SPEAKER, having laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Light-House Board of an appropriation for establishing lights and other aids to navigation on the Connecticut River, said: This communication will be referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to inquire whether this communication should not be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as this subject in regard to the Connecticut River should be treated of in the sundry civil appropriation bill, if at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the lights for which these estimates are made have not yet been authorized by law. Therefore the Chair supposed the communication should properly go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RANDALL. The communication relates, as I understand, to the Connecticut River.

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. RANDALL. And that subject (lighting of rivers) is treated in the sundry civil bill.

The SPEAKER. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, if there be no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no disposition to take the paper out of its proper course; but I would like to ask this question: If the estimate is in the possession of another committee, will that give jurisdiction of the subject to the Committee on Appropriations?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that if the communication should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations by order of the House, that committee would have jurisdiction.

Mr. RANDALL. I think so, too. But suppose this estimate should go to the Committee on Commerce, would the Appropriations Committee still have jurisdiction?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, as these lights are not authorized by law.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the Chair is right; but I wanted to have that proposition stated.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF WILLIAM W. ANDERSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact in the case of William W. Anderson against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DAM AT ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3025) to provide for the reconstruction of the dam at the Rock Island arsenal and for the immediate construction of a temporary dam to furnish water-power for said arsenal; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the subject-matter to which this bill relates has been under consideration in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. It has, and has been acted on in that committee. Their recommendations will be presented in due time to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will refer the bill to that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee thought that they had jurisdiction of this subject under the general submission to them of the estimates in relation to the arsenal at Rock Island.

The SPEAKER. Without examining that question, the Chair will refer the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

ALVARADO CEMETERY ASSOCIATION, GEORGETOWN, COLO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2922) setting apart a tract of land to be used as a cemetery by the Alvarado Cemetery Association of Georgetown, Colo., which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, for ten days.

To Mr. LA FOLLETTE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. OSBORNE, for ten days, to attend the Chicago convention.

To Mr. BREWER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BUNNELL, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. MOFFITT, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BAKER, of Illinois, for one week.

To Mr. ARNOLD, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WEBER, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'FERRALL, for four days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LYMAN, until the 25th instant.

To Mr. WADE, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. STRUBLE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask leave of absence for ten days for my colleague from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON].

There being no objection, leave was granted.

MARY E. HOPKINS.

Mr. LANHAM. The bill (S. 1914) for the relief of Mary E. Hopkins was referred to the Committee on Claims. As the question has been heretofore considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs, the bill should have been referred to that committee. I ask that the reference may be changed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think that under our new rule this bill belongs properly to the Committee on Claims. Under that rule all private claims, other than war claims or claims to lands, must go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LANHAM. The bill has already been considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Under the present rules of the House no private claim, other than pension claims, can be referred, unless by unanimous consent, to any other committee than the Committee on Claims, the Committee on War Claims, or the Committee on Private Land Claims. This bill seems to be a claim against the Government for $5,000.

Mr. SPRINGER. I notice that several bills which are really private claims have been referred through the petition-box to various committees other than the claims committees. I shall object to all such references.

The SPEAKER. The reference, the Chair thinks, is not an erroneous one.

Mr. LANHAM. I think, if the Chair will permit me, the Committee on Naval Affairs already has jurisdiction of the subject by the former action of the House——

Mr. FORAN. They have already reported a bill.

Mr. LANHAM. And, as I am informed, have already reported a bill on the subject.

Mr. FORAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims and the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be now passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have the report read first.

Mr. FORAN. I can make a brief statement that will perhaps satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1914) for the relief of Mary E. Hopkins.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think a bill of that kind ought to be considered by a committee of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. BURROWS, and Mr. WILKINS reserved points of order upon the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I give notice that I will call this bill up for consideration at the first practicable moment.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill (S. 1931) to increase the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a building for a post-office, court-house, and other offices at San Francisco, Cal., and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. RANDALL. Reserving the right to object, I wish to make an inquiry in regard to this bill; whether the bill—it speaks only of a site, and not for the construction of any building—proposes to appropriate $650,000 to be expended in the city of San Francisco for the purchase of a site for this building?

Mr. MORROW. I desire to say in response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that an appropriation was made last year of $350,000, and a commission was appointed to select a suitable site. They have, after a year's service, ascertained that they can get a site for $850,000, which would be an increase of the appropriation of $500,000. The committee, however, thought, after a careful investigation of the matter, that the site could be purchased for $650,000, and they propose to increase the appropriation by the sum provided in this bill, which is less than the amount the commission ascertained it would cost, but the committee believed it possible, as I have said, to procure a site for that sum.

Mr. RANDALL. In other words, then, it is proposed to buy what is worth $850,000 for $650,000?

Mr. MORROW. No, not exactly that; but several offers have been made of property, and the committee believe the commissioners can procure a site that will be suitable for the sum fixed, although of course not the best site.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a bill that ought not to be passed, I think, by unanimous consent. It is too important a bill. There ought to be careful consideration.

Mr. McCREARY. Where is this building to be located?

Mr. MORROW. In the city of San Francisco.

Mr. McCREARY. And it is proposed to use this sum in the purchase of a site?

Mr. MORROW. Yes, sir; and it is a less sum than has been appropriated to a similar purpose in any of the large cities.

Mr. McCREARY. How much is the building expected to cost?

Mr. MORROW. I hope there will be a suitable building erected, but I am not able to state what the amount will be yet.

Mr. LYNCH. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MORROW. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that demand.

Mr. CRAIN. If the gentlemen insist upon the regular order, I give notice that they will have it for the rest of the day.

Mr. LYNCH. I insist upon the demand.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask what is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees, unless a motion is made to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider revenue bills or appropriation bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do I understand if we pursue the regular order the hour will be the hour alloted to the Military Committee?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Claims had a matter under consideration when the hour expired, and has another hour, or at least sufficient time to complete the consideration of the matter, before the Committee on Military Affairs will be called.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understood the Committee on Military Affairs had reserved its hour.

The SPEAKER. It had; but another committee is now occupying the floor of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the Committee on Claims do not proceed any further, could we call up that bill?

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I will state that I understand the Committee on Claims has up the bill to reimburse the State of Florida for expenditures in the Indian war and has consumed one hour. If the matter could be passed over without the committee losing its place and losing the chance of consideration of the bill, I have no objection to yielding to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Florida that unless there is unanimous consent, the hour which now belongs to the Committee on Claims will be lost if it is not occupied this morning.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Then I would ask unanimous consent that the matter under consideration be passed over this morning so that the Committee on Military Affairs which has been passed heretofore may now be called.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. DOUGHERTY]?

Mr. OATES. I object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand the gentleman does not desire to proceed this morning. If he does not, I move that we go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] having objected, I am not in a position to follow my desire.

The SPEAKER. The motion which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] proposes to make is in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I know it is; but I would like to have the matter arranged satisfactorily.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. If the motion be made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of taking up this appropriation bill, will not this Florida bill retain its place on the Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It will remain just exactly as it now is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that so far as the Committee on Military Affairs are concerned we have no objection to business proceeding in regular order. I am requested by a number of gentlemen to press the Army bill, but it is apparent to all that there is no quorum here, and if there is any intention to make factious opposition to the bill, I certainly will not bring it before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Wait until you encounter that condition of things.

Mr. WILKINS. Will the gentleman agree to yield to two or three gentlemen who desire to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of bills?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am perfectly willing to do so.

The SPEAKER. If that is done, the Chair will be obliged to recognize gentlemen in the order in which they claim their rights.

Mr. WILKINS. If the gentleman from Illinois should yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] and myself, for example, would not that be in order?

Mr. GROUT. Other gentlemen might object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be obliged to recognize gentlemen in the order in which they claimed recognition.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement, and I ask the attention of the other side of the House. We have an understanding that the business from now on, extending, perhaps, through most of next week, be arranged so as not to put the other side of the House at a disadvantage because of the absence of many of their members, and therefore I urge that there be no opposition made to the consideration of appropriation bills in due order, even though there may not be at all times a quorum present in the House. The desire of gentlemen on the other side was that, so far as possible, tariff legislation might be suspended for a few days, and the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] looks in that direction, and with the same view, immediately after the disposition of the Army bill I shall insist on proceeding with the sundry civil bill. I hope the House will recognize the existing condition of things, and will proceed in the way indicated.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to say that "we have arranged" for legislation to proceed——

Mr. FARQUHAR. A general understanding; that is all.

Mr. CRAIN. Well, I accept that amendment, that there is a general understanding that business shall proceed with reference to the fact that there are absentees on the Republican side of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me qualify my statement in that particular by saying that I was requested by gentlemen on both sides to hasten the preparation of the sundry civil bill for the reason stated. That is, perhaps, as far as I ought to go. Of course I have no authority to speak for the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CRAIN. In that connection, I have to say, Mr. Speaker, that there seems to be also some character of arrangement with reference to the business that shall be proposed by gentlemen upon this side of the House who are not absent and who do not contemplate being absent. For six weeks the managers on the Democratic side of this House have permitted tariff speeches to occupy the time, and whenever any of us have asked unanimous consent for the consideration of measures of importance to our districts we have been met with objections, and the regular order has been called upon us, and I, for one, give notice that, so far as I am concerned, I shall antagonize this character of legislation until members generally have an opportunity to bring up for consideration bills and measures in which their districts are interested.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, owing to the large number of members on this side of the House who desired to be absent next week, the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means having charge of the tariff bill very kindly and courteously consented to postpone the consideration of that bill until after the close of the convention. It was supposed that the House would be ready in the mean time to consider any other business that might be presented, and I can assure gentlemen that on this side of the House there will be no factious opposition to the consideration of any measure that may be brought up, and I trust that both sides of the House will appreciate the situation and proceed with the public business as rapidly as possible.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPINOLA. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether a motion would be in order to allow members to ask unanimous consent to call up some of their short bills for consideration during the next half hour.

The SPEAKER. That would be in order only by unanimous consent, and the Chair thinks that if the House should make such an order there ought to be some rule prescribed by which recognition shall be governed. Otherwise a few gentlemen would get in their measures while others would not, because it is impossible for the Chair to recognize all gentlemen, however much he may desire to do so.

Mr. SPINOLA. I suggest that we now take half an hour for the consideration of short bills, and that the Speaker alternate his recognitions between the two sides of the Hall.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair always endeavors to do.

Mr. SPINOLA. Well, I suggest that we take half an hour for that purpose. I think that will be satisfactory to every gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am perfectly willing to consent that half an hour shall be occupied in that way.

Mr. SPINOLA. For the consideration of bills to which there can be no objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me very important that we should go on with the Army bill. I think that after to-day we may perhaps be able to agree upon some plan by which these other bills can be considered, but we can hardly make that agreement now, and I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] will insist on proceeding with his bill.

Mr. PETERS. Why can not we make the agreement now?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know why private business should have any special advantage in the absence of a quorum when there is public business waiting.

Mr. BLOUNT. I shall insist on the regular order.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether all points of order have been reserved upon this bill. If not, I desire to reserve them now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect, but will inquire of the Clerk and inform the gentleman.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to inquire whether it is necessary that points of order shall be reserved on an appropriation bill. I make that inquiry because during the last Congress the question was raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], and it was decided otherwise at that time.

The SPEAKER. The Presiding Officer of the House is not called upon of course to decide that question; that is to say, it is no part of his duty to decide it; but the Chair can give an opinion to be taken for what it is worth.

Mr. BLOUNT. We would be glad to have the opinion of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not necessary to reserve points of order upon appropriation bills prior to their reference to the Committee of the Whole, because under the rule of the House, which is very plain, such points of order, when made, must be made in the Committee of the Whole, not in the House. The Chair thinks the proper time to make such point upon any provision in an appropriation bill is when that provision is reached in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. I concur in the opinion of the Chair.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I was not in the Hall during the whole of this discussion; and I would like to inquire whether the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Claims have respectively waived their right to the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. They have not. The Committee on Claims did not insist on having the morning hour, and thereupon the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Another parliamentary inquiry: On the next legislative day will the Committee on Claims be still entitled to the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I now give notice that that committee must pretty soon take the morning hour or have a quorum to dispense with it. They are holding other committees back.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole) said: The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. CRAIN. I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 72, noes 4.

Mr. CRAIN. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. CRAIN were appointed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is apparent there is no quorum present; it is an idle ceremony for us to go through with a count. If the gentleman from Texas intends to persist in his demand for a quorum it is useless for us to attempt to go on with business.

Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has already been demanded.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 2.

Mr. CRAIN. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. WILKINS. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen who have not voted will please come forward and vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is evident that there is no quorum in the House. If the gentlemen persist in the demand for a quorum it is useless for us to stay here and occupy time. I therefore move that the House adjourn.

Mr. WILKINS. Assuming that there is an element of fairness on this side of the House which will allow members to have consideration for their private bills, I will withdraw my point of no quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Is the point of no quorum withdrawn?

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to ask whether there can be a conditional withdrawal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has put the question so as to ascertain whether the withdrawal is absolute or not.

Mr. WILKINS. I thought I made myself understood. I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought perhaps the gentleman coupled with the withdrawal some condition. On this question the ayes are 97, the noes 2. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills is agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BURROWS. Unless the gentleman proposes to make some general explanation in regard to the bill, I prefer that it be read for information before its consideration under the five-minute rule.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My only object was to save time. I do not propose to make any general explanation, although I am ready to answer any questions which gentlemen may desire to put in regard to the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have the report read before deciding whether the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TOWNSHEND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. 10234:

The Committee on Military Affairs submits the bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, with the following explanations:

The estimates on which the recommendations in the bill are based are to be found on pages 105 to 115 of the Book of Estimates for 1889, and aggregate in all $25,364,334.08, of which amount the committee recommend the sum of $24,289,700.

The amount appropriated by this bill is $1,074,634.08 less than the aggregate estimates submitted.

The appropriations for the same purpose for the four preceding years were as follows:

1884–'85	$24,454,470.00
1885–'86	24,014,052.50
1886–'87	23,753,057.21
1887–'88	23,724,718.69

For the pay and general expenses of the Army this bill appropriates the sum of $12,676,000, being an increase over the amount in the law for the current fiscal year of $14,081.31.

The cause of the increase in this bill for the Pay Department arises substantially from the natural increase arising from pay to officers both on the active and retired list for length of service, and by the increase in number of officers upon the retired-list or who will be placed thereon during the present fiscal year; and also by an increase of the number of enlisted men on the retired-list, to which also may be added the increased sum necessary to be provided for the payment of enlisted men to be discharged during the year, for travel, retained pay, etc.

The changes in the items in detail are as follows:

For pay of officers for length of service, the amount of the present law is increased by $2,230, which is made necessary by the increase in length of service of officers. For pay proper of the enlisted men of all grades, a reduction of $150,508 has been made below the appropriations for the current year.

In pursuance of the act of March 1, 1887, the committee have appropriated $150,000 for the hospital corps.

For pay of the general staff the amount is increased $5,590 for increased length of service.

For pay of retired officers, the item is increased $4,686.25, made necessary by increase in the number of officers.

For pay of retired enlisted men the item is increased $3,789 for a similar reason.

For pay of contract surgeons, etc., the committee believe that $100,000 is sufficient for this branch of the service and have reduced the item to that amount.

The item for paymasters' clerks has been reduced $5,800 on account of the decreased number of such clerks, resulting from the operation of the present law.

The item of $1,500 for securing information from abroad is fully explained by the following extract from the letter of the Secretary of War:

"I can not too strongly urge that the detail of officers to obtain information abroad should be so far recognized in the Army appropriation bill that the accounts may be passed by the accounting officers. In that view I would suggest that under the head, in the appropriation bill, 'Miscellaneous' insert an item, 'For the necessary expenses attendant on the collection and classification of military information from abroad $1,500; and the officers detailed to obtain the same shall be entitled to mileage and transportation and also commutation of quarters while on this duty, as provided when on other duty.'

"It is to be observed that this will not increase the expenses of the Government so far as the officers are concerned, for they will receive pay and allowances on this duty as on other duty at home or elsewhere. The $1,500 is for a clerk and the expenses of preserving and arranging the information when obtained."

The item for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers, etc., is increased $8,000, upon the basis of the disbursements of the last fiscal year.

For mileage to officers when traveling on duty without troop the amount is increased $15,000 for the reasons set forth in the Book of Estimates, page 298. The slight changes made in the phraseology of the item the committee believe are for the better interests of the service.

In the Quartermaster's Department no change has been made, except the amount for incidental expenses has been increased $1,500 for the reasons set forth in a letter from the Secretary of War, in which he says:

"As to the riding-master: In the incidental expenses, Quartermaster's Department, insert 'and of a riding-master, for the more thorough instruction of officers and cadets, a sum not exceeding $1,500.' I can best commend this appropriation by inclosing a copy of the report of the board sent to Boston to examine and report on Bussigny's method of riding and training horses. The officers composing this board were selected by reason of their large and varied experience. I do not believe there are better horsemen in any army than Captains Lawton and Anderson; and Captain Brinckle is among the first of our light-battery commanders. Indeed, I am inclined to think that when detailed for duty neither they nor the Lieutenant-General expected to find anything new or instructive for them. But they do not hesitate to acknowledge that there is much to be learned from this teacher which will be of great value to the service."

The amount appropriated last year for army transportation has been reduced $80,000.

An increase of $2,900 in the item for construction of quarters for hospital stewards, etc., is made upon the recommendation of the Surgeon-General.

For the medical and hospital department, the committee are of the opinion that $200,000, the amount appropriated, is sufficient.

The sums heretofore appropriated for the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., have been omitted, because that institution is properly a part of the medical and hospital department, and can be provided for out of the appropriation mentioned.

The increase in the items for the engineer depot at Willet's Point, N. Y., is made for the following reasons, set forth in the Book of Estimates:

"The failure of the appropriation for torpedo service for two years past has thrown all such expenses on the depot as far as it could do; and as the materials which had been previously purchased and put in store are nearly exhausted, if the school and instruction are maintained the expense should be provided for.

"This laboratory was unfortunately burned in November last, and should be rebuilt as soon as possible. The origin of the fire could not be ascertained, though it evidently occurred in a room that had been locked up for several hours previous to the discovery of the fire, and the most probable theory is that some of the chemicals stored in the room ignited spontaneously. The foundations and basement story, which were of granite, were very little injured, and it is estimated that $8,500 will restore the building to as good condition as ever."

For current expenses of the ordnance service, the amount appropriated last year has been reduced $10,000.

The amount appropriated for the manufacture of metallic ammunition for small arms has been increased $50,000, for the following reasons set forth in the Book of Estimates:

"The quantity of rifle ammunition on hand is very limited, the reserve supply at our arsenals being only 1,453,944 cartridges on July 1, 1887. A supply should be kept on hand for the hostile uses of the Army. Rifle and carbine ammunition costs to manufacture $18.50 per thousand, and revolver $10 per thousand. Existing orders from the War Department authorize the expenditure for target-practice of cartridges or reloading materials to the amount of $7.50 per man per annum, and about $1.93 per man per annum for gallery practice, and basing the strength of the Army (enlisted men and commissioned officers) at 20,000 men, it will require $188,600 for this expenditure alone. Soldiers should be made good marksmen, but this can not be done without a liberal supply of ammunition for target-practice. The amount asked for is reasonable, if the soldier is to be provided with cartridges sufficient for his proper instruction. To enable the Ordnance Department to carry out these orders, the reserve supply has been well-nigh exhausted. Unless the appropriation asked for is granted the supply for target-practice will have to be reduced, greatly to the detriment of the efficiency of the Army."

The items "For purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops," and "For infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipments," have each been increased $25,000.

The sum of $5,000 has been provided "for overhauling, cleaning, and preserving new ordnance stores."

The sum of $5,000 is appropriated for targets for artillery practice, on the following facts submitted in the Book of Estimates:

"At our forts we are obliged to make floating targets and anchor them in the roadsteads for artillery practice firing, which is necessary for the instruction of the troops. The Secretary of War decided (Circular No. 1, A. G. O., 1886) that these targets and the material and labor for their construction shall be furnished by the Ordnance Department, but the appropriations now made by Congress will not enable the Department to supply them."

The item appropriating $400,000 for the purchase of pneumatic dynamite guns, etc., is inserted in the bill upon the recommendation of the Secretary of War and for reasons set forth in his letter, a copy of which is hereto appended.

The item appropriating $100,000 for examining, testing, and experimenting with certain guns, shells, batteries, etc., is inserted in the bill in order to enable the Secretary of War to make such tests, etc., of new inventions as he may deem proper.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, May 17, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th ultimo, inclosing a proposition of the Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company, of New York, for the sale to the Government of several of their guns, and requesting my views as to the guns of this company and the advisability of making an appropriation for their purchase.

In reply I have the honor to say that this dynamite gun has been developed to a point of efficiency which entitles it to recognition as a formidable addition to harbor defense. In this connection I desire to call your attention to my annual report of December 5, 1887, page 31, in which I speak of this gun and its development and of the success which has attended the tests to which it has been subjected, and recommend the purchase of one gun of 15-inch caliber in order to determine the full extent of its fitness for coast defense.

Since then I have examined with much care the reports and opinions of officers and the evidence bearing upon the question whether the gun is still to be considered merely as an experiment and in the experimental stage or may be taken as having an established character on which legislation may be safely based.

It is well known that it has been for a long time under the charge of Captain Zalinski, of the artillery; and a board of officers of the Navy of high standing, especially in the ordnance branch of that service, after very careful test experiments under their direction, and witnessed by them, are of opinion that the gun is perfectly reliable in its action, that its accuracy of fire is remarkable, and that it is an important weapon for harbor defense. These are the main questions to be decided in determining the efficiency of any gun. It is true, its power of penetration is not great, but if its shell is exploded after entering the water near the hull of a ship the most destructive effect must result. The Secretary of the Navy, in his last annual report, reviews the result of the experiments witnessed by the above-mentioned board of officers detailed by him, and concludes with the assertion that the success of the gun for coast defense is established.

Attention is also called to the remarks of the Lieutenant-General of the Army on this subject in his last report, and also to the report of the chief ordnance officer of the Army, General Benét, which accompanies this letter.

I am therefore forced, on that evidence, to the conclusion that the gun is no longer to be considered as an experiment, but has well-established qualities and characteristics, upon which it will be safe for Congress to take action; and I accordingly recommend an appropriation which would enable us to purchase and install a number of these guns, with the necessary operating plants, not exceeding ten of different calibers. I consider it very desirable that these guns, when obtained, should be placed at different points on our coasts, say Boston, New York, San Francisco, the Lakes, and at some point on the Southern coast. I have no means of knowing whether the price named for them in the proposal of the company is reasonable. I can make no suggestion, however, in relation thereto, as there appear to be no data to estimate upon except the price named in its proposition, which seems to me to be very large. Unless the committee has the means of ascertaining more accurately than I can, I would recommend an appropriation of such an amount as the committee may deem reasonable, in view of the other requirements of the Department for ordnance, with which the Secretary of War may procure as many as he can for such sum.

It is not intended by this recommendation to supplant the previous recommendations of the Department, which call attention to the great needs of the country in the matter of coast and harbor defense, and the necessity of having guns of modern pattern and construction of great power and range. The pneumatic dynamite gun does not and can not take the place of such heavy ordnance, but will be a most important and necessary auxiliary thereto.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now renew the request that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to occupy the attention of the House with any general discussion of this bill. I will simply say that the bill has been carefully prepared, every line and every word having been gone over time and again, and it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs. It contains substantially the appropriations of last year with some additions which have been strongly urged by the War Department. It contains nothing, in addition to the appropriations of last year, that has not received the sanction and strong recommendation of the Department. I will now answer any inquiry which any gentleman may desire to put. If no gentleman wishes to ask any question, I ask that we proceed with the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. ROMEIS. I wish to inquire whether this bill provides for breech-loading ordnance.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir.

Mr. ROMEIS. The report of the Secretary of War, made to Congress last fall, shows that at the Military Academy there are not proper guns with which to drill the cadets; that in case of war the guns with which they practice would be entirely obsolete.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Upon an official visit to West Point last week I looked into this matter. The officer in charge of that particular branch, a very able officer, suggested to me a need for some additional appropriation to obtain appliances and machinery which would facilitate instruction to cadets in his department; but when I asked him to indicate the character of appliances for which he desired an appropriation, he said he would probably make soon a further investigation, and that the matter might very properly be deferred until next session. That provision does not apply to this bill, but belongs to the Military Academy bill.

Mr. ROMEIS. I merely ask for information on this subject.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They have now some breech-loading guns which are used for instruction at the West Point Academy.

Mr. ROMEIS. I thought it strange that Congress would fail to supply some improved breech-loading guns for the instruction of the cadets at the West Point Academy.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. They have such improved breech-loading guns there now for the instruction of the cadets. When I was there I was informed by the officer in charge that they needed more machinery and other appliances, which of course will be provided for in the Military Academy appropriation bill, and does not belong, as I have already stated, to this bill.

Mr. LAIRD. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that not by act of Congress but by savings out of appropriations, by economy exercised by the Ordnance Department, the construction of fifty 850-pound breech-loading guns was before this time authorized, twenty-five of which were constructed at the Cold Spring foundry, opposite West Point, and twenty-five more are being constructed at the Watervliet arsenal. These are improved breech-loading guns, having steel carriages and all other appliances of the most improved character.

A portion of this improved artillery has been placed at the West Point Military Academy for the use of the cadets, and the balance has been appropriated to the use of the Army, enabling some of these guns to be sent to the artillery school at Fort Riley, Kans.

This bill carries an appropriation for harness and other equipments for these new batteries, and that is the only portion of the appropriation which concerns these new batteries.

I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if he has any information as to the number of staff officers outside of the general staff.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no information in the possession of the committee except what is found in the Army Register. The question was not brought before the committee specially.

Mr. PETERS. I see here "Pay of Staff Officers, Ordnance Department: For pay of the officers in the Ordnance Department, as now authorized and provided by law."

The inquiry I wish to make is whether the statute law of the country fixes the number of staff officers in each department, or whether that is left to the discretion of the commanding officer.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the Army Regulations fix the number of staff officers. We have simply followed former appropriations in that part of the bill. In this bill it is the same that it has been for years. On examination of the Army Regulations the gentleman will find the number of staff officers, which is fixed by law.

Mr. PETERS. I am led to make the inquiry for this reason: There is a growing sentiment among the people, especially those at all conversant with our military organization, that the number of staff officers is in excess of the needs of the service, that a number of positions of that kind are filled by parties who are simply on dress parade, and who have no duties to perform. If the criticism made on this branch of the service is at all justified by the fact, then some inquiry should be made into it and the remedy applied. I have not had time to examine into it myself to see whether appointments on the staff in the various departments are confined to those strictly provided by law, or whether the commanding officer of each department has the right to appoint half a dozen or more, if he sees fit, of these staff officers simply for the purpose of giving that position to some officers and taking them from active duties in the field. It is to this criticism which has been made I desire to call the attention of this Committee of the Whole, and especially of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have before me the Revised Statutes, and if the gentleman desires he can have read the provision of law on this subject. It is there provided what shall be the number of staff officers.

Mr. BLOUNT. Do not the estimates of appropriations refer to the law under which the appropriation is estimated for?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is so.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not the appropriation therefore have to be in accordance with the law?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Certainly. I have the estimates before me, but there seems to be some mistake of reference.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is not a matter of favoritism in reference to the appointment of staff officers, but here what we have to provide for is the appropriation necessary to carry out the provision of law on this subject.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is no question that the statute fixes the number and pay of the staff of the Army. It did when I was a member of the House formerly and served on the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLOUNT. The estimates which are sent from the Treasury Department designate the statutes under which the appropriations are asked.

Mr. LAIRD. I desire to say but a word with reference to the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas, lest an erroneous impression should get out in regard to the attitude of the Military Committee on this subject. It must be obvious to the gentleman from Kansas that it is not in the power of any general officer of the Army to appoint any staff officers in the sense that his language might imply. He may assign or detail a staff officer to duty, but of course the power of appointment is not vested in him, nor can it be exercised by him. If there be any legitimate criticism against the Congress on account of an oversupply of gentlemen, who are a monument to a long peace, connected with the staff of the Army, it does not lie with the Military Committee, because that committee have submitted to the House one or two measures looking to the reorganization of the Army, involving an overhauling of the general staff department as well as the line, and the reconstruction of the entire system, putting it upon a peace basis; so that it can pass easily and without friction from an economical peace basis into an expansion which would be necessary to meet the exigencies of war. But Congress has so far failed to give an opportunity to consider any such measures.

So far as the Military Committee is concerned, I apprehend that it can see no criticisable qualities in this bill as far as the officers are concerned, line or staff. Of course we must follow the law, and that is all of it.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to ask this question of the gentleman from Nebraska. It seems to be pretty well settled that the law provides a number of staff officers, their pay, etc. Has any information come to the committee that any general officer has evaded the law by detailing an additional staff officer, not provided for by the law, and placing him upon his staff, taking him from field duty, for instance, and detailing him upon a staff in some city, or something of that kind, as an additional aide-de-camp, or placing him in some such situation or position upon his staff? My own impression is that the criticism has been made very particularly as to the attempt or alleged attempt that has been made to add to the staff officers of a general in order to furnish some officer, who really ought to be with his company in the field, a position at headquarters or in the city of Washington. I think that is perhaps the criticism that is made.

Mr. LAIRD. That is the gist of it.

Mr. PETERS. Yes, that is the gist of the criticism that has been made.

Mr. LAIRD. My answer is this, Mr. Chairman. I have no specific knowledge of that kind, as having come to the committee; and whatever might be the individual opinions of members of the committee as to that principle and that abuse, if it exists, of course it does not concern this measure. That is a matter of administration and belongs to the military not to the legislative branch of the establishment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now ask that the bill be read by sections for debate and amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay Department: For the pay of the officers in the Pay Department, as now authorized and provided by law, $116,500; for additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $33,500; in all, $150,000.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling attention to the difference between the amount of money provided as an expenditure for the Pay Department and the amount of money appropriatod for the Ordnance Department. The entire amount expended in the Ordnance Department is $174,460. Now, there probably is some little excuse for this large appropriation in connection with the Ordnance Department, because that department is continually carrying on experiments, and they are in the main carried on, I am informed, by staff officers. But here is the Pay Department of the Army which costs $150,000, or within about $24,000 of the whole amount appropriated for the Ordnance Department.

I am satisfied that there are too many paymasters in the Army now. I am convinced that this force is much larger than it ought to be.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORD. Does the gentleman think that paying the Army once in sixty days is too often?

Mr. PETERS. No, sir.

Mr. FORD. That is all they do now.

Mr. PETERS. I know, but——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How many paymasters are engaged in that duty?

Mr. FORD. I can not tell you, sir; but the law provides for about thirty-eight.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have not looked at the reports this year, but I have been familiar with this subject in the past, and I take the responsibility of saying that you will not find one in five of the paymasters engaged in the actual duty of paying the troops.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know how many are actually engaged in paying the troops, but we have a statute requiring that until the number is reduced to twenty-nine—I think there are forty-one now—but until the number is reduced to twenty-nine as the minimum that there shall be no other appointments. The object is to reach this minimum limit of twenty-nine. But there are more than that number in the service—forty-one, I believe, now in all. The estimates were made for the payment of that number, and there was nothing for the committee to do but to recommend the appropriation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I was concerned in the passage of the act to which the gentleman refers, and it was the investigation I then made which led me to make the observation I have made to-day. I was satisfied then, and I think the Paymaster-General was, that there was from one-fourth to one-third more officers in the Pay Department than the emergencies of the service required.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say this, however, to my friend, that upon inquiry I find as the Army is being more generally distributed, as they are establishing posts at distant points, there is a greater need for a larger number of paymasters than when the Army was more consolidated.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That is true.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And so it is believed by the Department that when the number shall be reduced to twenty-nine we will only then have a sufficient number to perform these duties to pay the troops once in two months.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There are upon the rolls of the Army something over twenty-one thousand men. If they were all together, of course one paymaster could pay them all, with a suitable force of competent clerks. But because they are distributed at a number of posts all over the country it evidently requires a larger number. The law as it is now will ultimately reduce the number to twenty, or nearly that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Twenty-nine.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am not proposing to attack the law. I think it will have to continue just as it is. But there are a great many supernumerary officers in the Pay Department, without doubt.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. We are reaching the minimum number as rapidly as time will permit.

Mr. PETERS. I hope the Military Committee will not entertain any idea of stopping that minimum at any point above twenty-nine, because while it is true that our military posts are being extended, yet our Army departments are not being extended. I can not see why one paymaster, with a corps of clerks sufficient to prosecute the business of his office, can not pay the troops in one department a great deal easier now than he could ten or twelve years ago with the means of communication then at hand.

Mr. FORD. However that may be, the officers of the department claim now that from a lack of force of paymasters they are unable to pay the troops oftener than once in two months.

Mr. PETERS. How many departments have we, commanded by a major-general or a brigadier-general?

Mr. FORD. I can not tell you the number.

Mr. PETERS. There are certainly not twenty-nine.

Mr. FORD. No; I think not.

Mr. PETERS. The point I am making is simply this——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Military Committee have no authority to change existing law, and therefore they did not attempt to interfere with the law as it now exists. The question as to whether the limit should be changed will arise when a bill to that effect comes before the House. That is not a question we ought to debate now. We are simply appropriating money in pursuance of law already made. I would call the attention of my friend to the fact that whatever criticism he has to make on the law should be made when a bill on that subject is before the House.

Mr. PETERS. I have not been criticising the Military Committee at all. That was not my intention. I am satisfied from this bill the Military Committee have done their duty fully. I simply call attention to these matters so that in the future in legislation we may, if possible, curtail the force in this Department at every point and at every opportunity that presents itself.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman ought to be aware that such action must be had by a separate bill and not in an appropriation bill; and therefore what he says is not at all pertinent.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say to my friend [Mr. PETERS] that I believe there is really an argument on both sides of the question. There are good reasons why the number of paymasters should not be fixed at too small a limit. But when the matter comes up that matter can be discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Judge-Advocate-General's Department: For the pay of the officers in the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, as now authorized and provided by law, $25,000; for additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $7,000; in all, $32,000.

RETIRED OFFICERS.

For pay of officers on the retired-list, and for officers who may be placed thereon during the current year, $920,000; for additional pay to such officers for length of service, to be paid with their current monthly pay, $275,000; in all, $1,195,000.

RETIRED ENLISTED MEN.

For pay of the enlisted men of the Army on the retired-list, $90,000.

MISCELLANEOUS.

For pay of contract-surgeons, hospital-matrons, and veterinary surgeons, in all, $100,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, in line 104 it is suggested by the Secretary of War that after the word "pay" the words "and traveling expenses" shall be inserted. That was not submitted to the committee. I received the communication yesterday too late to bring it before the committee. I think the suggestion is very proper. It does not change the amount at all. The War Department is paying the traveling expenses in another way, but prefer to have an explicit statement in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, in line 106, by striking out "forty-one" and inserting "forty-two." That is to correct a typographical error and provide for the number now fixed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETERS. Lines 104 and 105 provide for the pay of contract surgeons, hospital matrons, and veterinary surgeons; in all $100,000. The pay of the Medical Department of the Army as now authorized and provided by law is $426,700. Then there is a provision for additional pay, and the aggregate amount is $536,700. The disbursement of that sum of money would indicate a very large Medical Department in connection with our Army. The inquiry I wish to make is, why is it necessary, with this large Medical Department in connection with our Army, to employ in addition a large number of contract surgeons and pay to them nearly $100,000? It seems to me the Medical Department itself, when taken in connection with the other Departments—the Subsistence Department, the Ordnance Department, the Pay Department, etc.—is very much larger and the amount appropriated for its maintenance is very much larger than any of the other Departments; yet it is the only Department for which an additional sum is appropriated. Here is an appropriation of nearly $100,000 for contract surgeons. These contract surgeons, as I understand, are surgeons outside of the Medical Department of the Army, with whom contracts are made. I do not understand why it is necessary to employ contract surgeons when we have such a large Medical Department connected with the Army itself.

Mr. LAIRD. The aggregate strength of the Army—cavalry, artillery, and infantry—is correctly stated at less than 20,000. That is the active force. The allowance by law to a regiment is one surgeon and one assistant surgeon. A battery has an assistant surgeon; a regiment of cavalry has two surgeons. Now, the Army is divided into posts, scattered over the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. As I remember now, there are, I think, six in the State of Nebraska, five in the Territory of New Mexico, and four or five in the State of Kansas. Each of these posts, whether it be of a regiment, a company, two companies, a battalion, a battery, or a squadron of cavalry, must have medical attendance. If a regiment is assigned, it has its medical officers. If a regiment be divided into battalions and assigned, the regular medical corps of the regiment can supply only the home post and one other. Consequently, there must be drawn from some source the medical supply for these detachments, and it must come either from the existing medical force of the Army, or it must be obtained by the employment of what are called assistant or contract surgeons. That, I suppose, is the explanation of this matter.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to ask the gentleman whether there are not enough surgeons and assistant surgeons in the Army, so that whenever a detachment of a regiment is sent out one of these officers can be detailed to accompany it?

Mr. LAIRD. You can not supply more than two detachments from the medical officers that are allowed to a regiment by law.

Mr. PETERS. Then I understand the gentleman to say that the medical department of each regiment consists of a surgeon and an assistant surgeon, and that all of these are employed at the places where the regiments are located, so that whenever a detachment of the regiment is sent upon a scouting expedition it is necessary to employ a contract surgeon to accompany that detachment.

Mr. LAIRD. Not exactly that, my friend. You should understand me to say this: The legal supply of medical officers to a regiment of infantry is so much, to a regiment of cavalry so much, to a battery so much. As the gentleman knows, a regiment of infantry or cavalry is susceptible of division; there are five-company posts, four-company posts, three-company posts, two-company posts, and so on. And in some instances regiments, especially cavalry regiments, are sent upon expeditions and hold summer camps at some distance from the rendezvous or established post of the regiment. In such cases they must, in common prudence, be accompanied by medical officers, and of course if a regiment be divided into half a dozen battalions or detachments at as many different posts, they must be accompanied by medical officers.

Now, the regular legal supply of these officers to a regiment is not sufficient to meet that demand, and consequently the Surgeon-General is compelled to employ contract surgeons. The same condition of things existed during the war, and if you read the report of the Surgeon-General you will discover that the needs of the Army are such that he is compelled to ask Congress to increase the medical force to meet the requirements of the service, arising from the wide distribution of the Army at different posts along the frontier.

Mr. BLOUNT. These contract surgeons are employed all the time?

Mr. LAIRD. Certainly.

Mr. PETERS. I am very glad to have this explanation, in order that I may be able myself to explain the matter to others. I have frequently heard it stated, and undoubtedly it is generally believed, that at posts on the frontier contract surgeons are employed to perform the duties of men who properly belong to the War Department as medical staff officers and who should perform those duties themselves. I am very glad therefore to have the matter explained, so that I may explain it and meet in the proper manner the criticisms which I have heard made.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the formal amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS]. This committee have not now a bill before the House for general legislation in regard to the Army. This is merely a bill to provide for paying the Army in accordance with existing law. It is true the committee might have reduced the appropriation for contract surgeons if they had thought fit, but we had the Surgeon-General before us and questioned him closely upon this point, and he satisfied us that the employment of these contract surgeons was necessary.

I would add that there is a decrease of about $3,000 as compared with the appropriation of last year. I hope the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] will not catechise the committee here by putting questions as to matters of detail which, if this were a general bill, would be pertinent; but as this is merely a bill making appropriations in accordance with existing law, it really seems to me his remarks are not altogether applicable.

Mr. PETERS. I want to state to my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] in all good nature that I have not been able to get this information, perhaps because of lack of time; and as these very questions have been put to me by men who have arraigned Republican administrations for employing contract surgeons and giving them "fat jobs" as was stated, I want to be able, when such an arraignment is made again, to give the proper explanation. I therefore took this opportunity to seek to obtain the information.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman said "Republican administrations;" perhaps he meant the "Democratic administration."

Mr. PETERS. No, sir; I meant that in past campaigns Democratic speakers have arraigned Republican administrations in relation to this very question of contract surgeons; the matter has been thrown into my face.

Mr. TILLMAN. You see that the only duty of our committee was to provide appropriations in accordance with existing law.

Mr. PETERS. I understand that; and I wish to disclaim again any intention to criticise the committee. I am simply seeking information in order to guard myself against such attacks in the future.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of not exceeding forty-one paymasters' clerks, at $1,400 each, paymasters' messengers, and traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks, in all, $80,000: Provided, That the maximum sum to be allowed paymasters' clerks when traveling on duty shall be 4 cents per mile, and, in addition thereto, when transportation can not be furnished by the Quartermaster's Department, the cost of same actually paid by them, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car fare and transfers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In order that the limitation in regard to traveling expenses may apply to contract surgeons as well as to paymasters' clerks, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words "paymasters' clerks," in line 110, insert "and contract surgeons."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the necessary expenses attendant on the collection and classification of military information from abroad, $1,500; and the officers detailed to obtain the same shall be entitled to mileage and transportation and also commutation of quarters while on this duty, as provided when on other duty.

Mr. RANDALL. Reserving a point of order on the paragraph just read, I wish to make an inquiry. This provision as printed seems to be general in its character; but it appears by the report of the committee that this sum of $1,500 is to be used in the employment of a clerk at that salary. The provision in the form in which it is printed in the bill comes directly in conflict with the existing law as embraced in section 4 of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act of August 5, 1882—a provision of law which has resulted in great benefit to the Government, and has prevented the use of appropriations in bulk for the employment of additional clerks in the Departments.

If this bill made specifically on its face an appropriation for a clerk at $1,500, the provision might not be objectionable and in contravention of law. But in the form in which it now stands, it is directly in the face of the provision to which I have referred, and which, if the gentleman desires, I will have read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think that after the gentleman hears an explanation he will not insist on his objection.

Mr. RANDALL. It may be necessary to make this appropriation. I do not object to this service, but to the manner in which the appropriation is made, being in contravention of law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. After the gentleman hears an explanation, I think he will not ask for even a modification of the clause. While I admit that perhaps the provision is liable to the criticism which he has made, I will state that the purpose in framing the language in this shape was to avoid the danger of trouble in the Comptroller's Office in passing the accounts.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I want to create such "trouble in the Comptroller's Office," for I believe the Comptroller is an efficient officer and prevents the payment of money out of the Treasury except in obedience to the exact requirements of law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The very thing I wanted to do was to avoid the danger of trouble there by particularizing items.

Mr. RANDALL. This does not particularize.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It does state specifically the purpose of the appropriation, and if my friend will allow me to explain——

Mr. RANDALL. I would like the gentleman to hear the law read, that he may determine for himself whether this clause of the bill is in accordance with the law.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That no civil officer, clerk, draughtsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employé shall after the 1st day of October next be employed in any of the Executive Departments, or subordinate bureaus or offices thereof at the seat of government, except only at such rates and in such numbers, respectively, as may be specifically appropriated for by Congress for such clerical and other personal services for each fiscal year; and no civil officer, clerk, draughtsman, copyist, messenger, assistant messenger, mechanic, watchman, laborer, or other employé shall hereafter be employed at the seat of government in any Executive Department or subordinate bureau or office thereof or be paid from any appropriation made for contingent expenses, or for any specific or general purpose, unless such employment is authorized and payment therefor specifically provided in the law granting the appropriation, and then only for services actually rendered in connection with and for the purposes of the appropriation from which payment is made, and at the rate of compensation usual and proper for such services, and after the 1st day of October next section 172 of the Revised Statutes, and all other laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act, and all laws and parts of laws authorizing the employment of officers, clerks, draughtsmen, copyists, messengers, assistant messengers, mechanics, watchmen, laborers, or other employés at a different rate of pay or in excess of the numbers authorized by appropriations made by Congress, be, and they are hereby, repealed; and thereafter all details of civil officers, clerks, or other subordinate employés from places outside of the District of Columbia for duty within the District of Columbia, except temporary details for duty connected with their respective offices, be, and are hereby, prohibited; and thereafter all moneys accruing from lapsed salaries, or from unused appropriations for salaries, shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois assisted in making that law when he was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, if I recollect aright, and now I wish him to conform to it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. RANDALL. Put in one clerk at $1,500 to do this work.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am willing the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall be adopted. Let us pass over the paragraph for a moment, so the gentleman may prepare his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be passed over for the present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. When the gentleman has prepared his amendment we can come back again to this paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out the words "for the necessary expenses attendant on the collection and classification of military information from abroad" and insert "for the pay of a clerk attendant on the collection and classification of military information from abroad:" so it will read: "For the pay of a clerk attendant on the collection and classification of military information from abroad, $1,500."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That will be satisfactory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER'S DEPARTMENT.

Regular supplies: For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus, and repair and maintenance of the same, for heating barracks and quarters; of ranges and stoves for cooking; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, guards, hospitals, store-houses, and officers, and for sales to officers; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field, including its care and protection; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding; and of stationery, including blank-books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing division and department orders and reports, $2,678,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done by contract, after due notice and competition, except in such case as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice for competition.

Mr. LAIRD. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of that paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That after advertisement all supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation being considered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Where does that amendment come in?

Mr. LAIRD. It comes in after the paragraph in line 219.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, as well as I am able to understand the purpose of the gentleman from Nebraska, I am in sympathy with him, but I can not say this will not derange and seriously interfere with the operations of the Army, and for that reason, without the opportunity to submit the matter to the War Department, I am compelled to raise the question of order against it that it is a change of existing law, and therefore not in order.

I am in sympathy with the purpose of the gentleman from Nebraska that the supplies for the Army shall be purchased where it can be done the cheapest, but, as a matter of caution, I am compelled to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LAIRD. By the failure of the Committee on Military Affairs to provide for it in this bill the habit in the purchase of quartermaster's supplies has been to purchase them and concentrate them at certain stations—at Jeffersonville, Ind., for instance—for distribution to the frontier. The purpose of my amendment is to make it the duty of the purchasing officer to purchase the supplies for Nebraska at Omaha, if they can be purchased cheapest there, quality and cost of transportation considered, and to purchase the supplies at Fort Riley or Fort Leavenworth, if they can be purchased at a cheaper cost, instead of being purchased elsewhere and sent to those places from Jeffersonville, Ind.

I do not see how this can interfere with the order of proceeding in the purchase of supplies for the Army. It seems to me it provides a necessary safeguard which ought to be thrown around economical purchase of these Army supplies.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Secretary of War has the power, and it is his duty, to purchase supplies where he can purchase them cheapest, and when quality and cost of transportation are taken into consideration it is his solemn duty to do so. If the Secretary does not follow the line of economy it would be proper to enforce it by the law, but knowing the Secretary of War as well as I do, I think we can safely leave the discretion with him. If the amendment had been suggested before, so we might have obtained the opinion of the War Department on it, I might have reached a different conclusion, but for the present I must insist on the regular order. I have no doubt the Secretary will follow out the course suggested in the amendment.

Mr. LAIRD. The fact is that the Secretary of War has not done it, and that is something of light for the guidance of our judgment as to his future actions.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair this amendment does not change existing law. The law requires the Department to make contracts with the lowest bidder.

Mr. LAIRD. I understand that, Mr. Chairman; but under the interpretation which that law has received, position, with reference to the point of the assemblage of the supplies, has controlled the locus of their purchase.

Mr. McSHANE. It has been the custom heretofore in the purchase of such supplies to concentrate them at two points, namely, in Jeffersonville, Ind., and in Philadelphia, Pa. These were the two general depots of supplies for the Army, and from these two points the supplies were distributed throughout the country to the various posts and stations. Now, it was not part of the duty of the Secretary of War, where the supplies had been concentrated at these two points—or rather I should say he was not enabled to purchase where he could purchase cheapest, for the reason that it was necessary to concentrate the supplies at the points named, and proximity to those points was often an element in determining the purchase.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me interrupt the gentleman for a moment. Having left out that provision, requiring the concentration of these supplies at the two points, does it not now leave it discretionary with the Secretary of War to purchase supplies at Omaha, or any other place where they may be needed, provided in his judgment the offers made are such as to warrant the acceptance of the bids?

Mr. McSHANE. I will state to the gentleman that the amendment proposed by my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. LAIRD] is intended to take the place of provisions in former bills. It provides that the purchase of these supplies shall be made where they can be bought cheapest; but one of the most important elements of cheapness may be the cost of transportation. I do not see how there can be any objection to such an amendment as that, and from the fact that the distributing point in former bills has been stricken from this bill. So that it is simply right and proper that a provision should be put in this bill compelling the Department to purchase where they can purchase cheapest on the conditions named.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McSHANE. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Secretary of War, as the law now stands, has full power to do what is required in that respect.

Mr. McSHANE. Probably so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If then he has the power now conferred upon him by existing law, what is the occasion for the amendment?

Mr. McSHANE. If he has the power now under existing law, as the gentleman claims, what objection can there be to the amendment?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Because the power, under the existing law, gives this officer certain discretion; and before such a provision as this is enacted into law certainly the judgment of the Department should be taken upon it.

Mr. McSHANE. The Government does not pay much attention to transportation charges on supplies for the Army, as I am well aware.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, I think my friend is mistaken in that. The officer in charge is a very careful man.

Mr. McSHANE. The amounts expended each year for transportation are excessive.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the committee has made a very careful inquiry in reference to that branch of the service and was satisfied that economy has been practiced.

Mr. RANDALL. The present official, General Holabird, in charge of the Army transportation, has been continuously cutting down the expenditure and decreasing the expenses for Army transportation, until now it is reduced greatly over what it was in former years.

Mr. RYAN. Because formerly it was very excessive; in fact I think it is yet.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations and my friend here on my left, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY], Mr. RYAN, and General Holabird, have co-operated in the effort to reduce these expenditures.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The decrease in this manner on account of Army transportation is $50,000, and the officer in charge of that branch of the Department is a most efficient and economic officer, and he even goes forward and suggests reductions which we perhaps would never have been able to discover if it had not been for his care in this respect. I think we can safely intrust it to him, and if there is any abuse of the law as it now exists I will cheerfully join with the gentleman in securing a change.

Mr. LAIRD. I understand the decision of the Chair to be that this is not amenable to the point of order suggested by the chairman of the committee. It is possible that it is obnoxious to the objection that it is cumulative, that it is already a part of the duty of this officer to do as is here suggested. But it can neither be accepted in the spirit of offensive legislation nor as a charge of a want of diligence on the part or this officer in merely contributing our suggestion to the manner of transacting the public business on the part of the Quartermaster-General.

I trust the amendment will be adopted, because it can embarrass or harass no one.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. RANDALL. Would it not be possible that we would cut out the lowest responsible bidder, if the transportation was taken into consideration?

Mr. McSHANE. But no bid is received now without filing a certified check.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The objection I have to this is that we have not consulted the Department, and it ought to be considered there before action is taken.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand the effect, I know the gentleman's motive is all right—but the effect of the amendment will be to change the present method of the delivery of supplies purchased by contract. The question of the transportation from the point where the contractor delivers the supplies to the point where the quartermaster may want them is to be considered in awarding the contracts.

Mr. LAIRD. Yes, sir. Under the former rule of practice, and of course we have seen the effect of the old system, the habit has been to make the purchase of supplies near the point of assembling.

Mr. RANDALL. That is desirable.

Mr. LAIRD. In some respects, yes; near the point of assembling. Admitting that to be desirable, is it in the least desirable, excluding the transportation, if the same quality can be got for the same cost it should be obtained there? That is an advantage to the Government in dollars and cents. Is it not equally to the advantage of the Government in other respects?

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand the effect of your amendment, it would compel the Quartermaster-General to take into consideration the transportation between points the contractor in the East would deliver and the contractor in the West would deliver.

Mr. LAIRD. That would be a wholesome arrangement, would it not?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see any objection to that arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist upon his point of order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If my friend will allow me, I will ask that the amendment be passed over for the present and will think about it, and then we can return to it hereafter.

The amendment was temporarily passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

Incidental expenses: For postage; cost of telegrams on official business received and sent by officers of the Army; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the Quartermaster's Department in the erection of barracks, quarters, and store-houses, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, and as clerks for post quartermasters at military posts; for expense of expresses to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field, of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains, where military escorts can not be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, or at military posts and on the frontiers, or when traveling under orders, and of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the Quartermaster's Department, including the hire of interpreters, spies, or guides for the Army; compensation of clerks and other employés to the officers of the Quartermaster's Department, compensation of forage and wagon masters authorized by the act of July 5, 1838; for the apprehension, securing, and delivering of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; and for the following expenditures required for the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of light artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the trains, to wit: Hire of veterinary surgeons; and of a riding and training master for the more thorough instruction of officers and cadets, a sum not exceeding $1,500; purchase of medicine for horses and mules, picket-ropes, blacksmiths' tools and materials, horseshoes and blacksmiths' tools for the cavalry service, and for the shoeing of horses and mules, and such additional expenditures as are necessary and authorized by law in the movement and operations of the Army, and not expressly assigned to any other department, $626,500: Provided, That $225,000 of the appropriation for incidental expenses, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, shall be set aside for the payment of enlisted men on extra duty at constant labor of not less than ten days, in the Quartermaster's Department, but no such payment shall be made at any greater rate per day than is fixed by law for the class of persons employed at the work done therein.

For purchase of horses for the cavalry and artillery, and for the Indian scouts, and for such Infantry as may be mounted, and the expenses incident thereto, $130,000: Provided, That the number of horses purchased under this appropriation, added to the number on hand, shall not at any time exceed the number of enlisted men and Indian scouts in the mounted service; and that no part of this appropriation shall be paid out for horses not purchased by contract, after competition duly invited by the Quartermaster's Department, and an inspection by such department, all under the direction and authority of the Secretary of War.

Army transportation: For transportation of the Army, including baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of the necessary agents and employés; of clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and other quartermaster's stores from Army depots or places of purchase or delivery to the several posts and Army depots, and from those depots to the troops in the field; of horse equipments and of subsistence stores from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery under contract to such places as the circumstances of the service may require them to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small-arms from the foundries and armories to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and Army depots; freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferriages; the purchase and hire of draught and pack animals and harness, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, and drays, and of ships and other sea-going vessels and boats required for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters and other employés; extra-duty pay of enlisted men driving teams, repairing means of transportation, and employed as train-masters, and in opening roads and building wharves; transportation of the funds of the Army, the expenses of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; for procuring water at such posts as from their situation require it to be brought from a distance; and for the disposal of sewage and drainage, and for clearing roads, and for removing obstruction from roads, harbors, and rivers to the extent which may be required for the actual operation of troops in the field; for the payment of Army transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent. of the full amount of the service be paid: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service; in all, $2,800,000: Provided, That hereafter no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the purchase for the Army of draught animals until the number on hand shall be reduced to five thousand, and thereafter shall only be expended for the purchase of a number sufficient to keep the supply up to five thousand: And provided further, That no expenditure authorized by this act from the appropriations made herein for the Quartermaster's Department of the Army, including the transportation of troops and their supplies, and the expenses incident thereto, shall be made except by the Quartermaster-General, under the direction of the Secretary of War, unless an emergency exists that demands immediate action; and in such case the expenditure necessary to meet the emergency may be made upon the order in writing of the General commanding the Army, or upon the order in writing of a division or department commander in whose jurisdiction the emergency arises; but every such order from a division or department commander shall certify that an emergency exists requiring immediate expenditure, stating the emergency necessary to be met.

Barracks and quarters: For barracks and quarters for troops, store-houses, for the safe-keeping of military stores, for offices, and for the hire of buildings and of grounds for summer cantonments and for temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts, $620,000: Provided, That no expenditures exceeding $500 shall be made upon any building or military post, or grounds about the same, without the approval of the Secretary of War for the same, upon detailed estimates by the Quartermaster's Department; and the erection, construction, and repair of all buildings and other public structures in the Quartermaster's Department shall, as far as may be practicable, be made by contract, after due legal advertisement: And provided further, That no more than $1,300,000 of the sums appropriated by this act shall be paid out for the services of civilian employés in the Quartermaster's Department, including those heretofore paid out of the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, Army transportation, clothing, and camp and garrison equipage; and that no employé paid therefrom shall receive as salary more than $150 per month, unless the same shall be specially fixed by law; and no part of any of the moneys so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel and for quarters to officers or enlisted men.

For shelter, shooting-galleries, ranges, repairs, and expenses incident thereto, $10,000.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After line 364 insert "for the necessary buildings and wharf for the military post at Highwood, near Chicago, $300,000."

Mr. RANDALL. Is there any law authorizing this? If not I make the point of order.

Mr. ROWELL. Before the point of order is made——

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] there is a law authorizing the establishment of a post at or near Chicago, but the appropriation has not been made to carry that law into effect. There is a law authorizing it. The law passed Congress at the last session. I believe the amendment ought to be adopted. The construction of the post has been authorized.

Mr. ROWELL. There is no question it ought to be constructed. In explanation I desire to have the letter of General Sheridan read by the Clerk.

Mr. RANDALL. Why did not the committee recommend the appropriation?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was not estimated for, and so did not come before the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to ask your consideration of the matter of the proposed military post near Chicago, Ill.

The ground for that purpose having been purchased by individuals in that city, been presented to the United States, and its acceptance authorized by Congress, it, last fall, upon the action of the Secretary, passed into the possession of the Government, and two companies of troops have been stationed there this winter in temporary quarters.

No appropriation has yet been made for the construction of the post, and as the season when building operations should be commenced is rapidly approaching, I would recommend that the matter be presented for Congressional action and a request for an appropriation this year of $300,000 be made.

This sum will not be quite sufficient, probably, to complete the post for the contemplated garrison, four troops of cavalry and six companies of infantry, but would be all that could be profitably expended during the coming fiscal year.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.

To the SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. RANDALL. This amendment would be more appropriate on the sundry civil bill, where military posts are provided for.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this amendment would be more appropriate there; but knowing the necessity for the work, and inasmuch as the amendment is now offered, I am willing it should be agreed to.

Mr. ROWELL. This post is a very material part of the plant of the General of the Army for the disposition of the troops. There is immediate need of a wharf, so that the supplies can be landed from the lake. I think there ought to be no objection to the amendment being adopted. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I stated to my friend I believed the money ought to be appropriated, and I have no objection to the amendment going into the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is right that the amendment belongs more properly to the sundry civil bill; but I am willing it should go in here.

Mr. ROWELL. I think it ought to go in right now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend has offered his amendment with reference to the wrong line. It should be inserted at the end of line 362.

Mr. ROWELL. I do not care; let it go in at the end of line 362.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repairs of hospitals: For construction and repairs of hospitals, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, $100,000.

For construction of quarters for hospital-stewards, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, $12,500: Provided, That the posts at which such quarters shall be constructed shall be designated by the Secretary of War, and the quarters shall be built by contract, after legal advertisement, whenever the same is practicable; but the cost of construction of quarters at any one post shall in no case exceed $800.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment, to change the word "eight," in line 376, to the word "twelve." It will be observed that this paragraph provides for the construction of quarters for hospital-stewards, that is, a small drug store with an office and probably living-rooms for the hospital-stewards. It provides that those quarters shall be built only when designated by the Secretary of War; that is at the posts which he shall select as being suitable or requiring such quarters. I am informed by the Quartermaster-General that where temporary posts have been established a small sum is sufficient for this purpose—four or five hundred dollars; but that at posts in or near large cities, which are intended to be permanent posts, where the buildings are already of a permanent character, it will cost from ten to eleven or twelve hundred dollars. Therefore I offer this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 376 strike out "eight" and insert "twelve."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The amendment being in that form, I shall be compelled to raise the point of order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Then I will withdraw that amendment and offer the one which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the line 377 insert "except that when a post is situated at a city of more than 50,000 inhabitants, the cost of construction of said quarters may be not to exceed $1,200."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROUSE].

Mr. CROUSE. Mr. Chairman, the average cost of buildings for this purpose can undoubtedly be kept within the figure named in the bill, and probably such buildings could be provided in many instances for a less sum than $800; but the committee will remember that in some places—such a place as Columbus, Ohio, for instance, where there are permanent barracks—it would hardly do to erect anything but a permanent building, and for such a building $800 would not be sufficient. The amendment offered by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] is so worded as not to "let the bars down" promiscuously and allow extravagance in these matters, but in cities of the size mentioned in the amendment it will permit buildings to be erected that will be not only useful for this immediate purpose, but will also be in accordance with the other buildings of the place. I think the amendment ought to prevail.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase by the Secretary of War of pneumatic dynamite guns of different calibers, and the necessary plants, ammunition, and carriages for the same, for armaments and military use, $400,000, or so much thereof as he may deem proper.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make the point of order against that paragraph. From time immemorial, or at least as far back as I remember, appropriations for this character of armament have been embraced in the fortification bill. I make the point of order against this paragraph, and I object especially to the words "and the necessary plants." It will not be contended that there is any law providing for a plant in this connection, and I can not view this provision in any other light than as an attempt to edge in the beginning of a plant for the manufacture of these guns by the Government. I need not go now into the merits of such an undertaking. I make the point of order against the paragraph, and more particularly against the words "and the necessary plants," on the ground that there is no law authorizing a necessary plant for any such purpose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no question, in my judgment, but that it is in order on this bill to appropriate for the purchase of arms, small or large; but under the construction which the gentleman from Pennsylvania puts upon the provision in the bill, namely, that it contemplates establishing a plant to manufacture these guns, it is possible that his point of order may be good, and to obviate that objection I will agree to strike out the word "plants." It was not contemplated at all to provide for the establishment of such a plant as the gentleman has in mind. The only purpose was to provide the machinery necessary for handling and firing the guns.

Mr. RANDALL. Then why not say so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am willing to strike out "plants" and insert instead "machinery to fire and handle the same."

Mr. RANDALL. That will obviate the objection I have made to the language in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "plants," in line 457, and insert "machinery to fire and handle the same."

Mr. RANDALL. Let us hear the paragraph as it will read with the amendment.

The Clerk read the paragraph as proposed to be amended.

Mr. RANDALL. What is meant by "armaments" in this paragraph?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It means something of the same nature.

Mr. SPINOLA. It means the appliances for handling the guns.

The amendment of Mr. TOWNSHEND was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For overhauling, cleaning, and preserving new ordnance stores on hand at the arsenals, $5,000.

Mr. FORD. I move to amend by inserting after the line last read the clause which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For firing the morning and evening gun at military posts, prescribed by General Order No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, $30,000.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, in July, 1867, there was issued a general order providing for the firing of guns at our military posts upon the raising of the flag at sunrise and upon taking it down at sunset. Since that time no appropriation has been required to continue the observance of this custom because at the close of the war a large supply of powder was left on hand. But in March last the supply became exhausted, and since that time no gun has been fired as a salute to the flag at the different posts and reservations, with the exception of Fort Monroe, Fort Leavenworth, and the Military Academy at West Point.

It may be said by way of objection, Mr. Chairman, that this is altogether a "matter of sentiment." Suppose that be granted; the appropriation of $150,000 which Congress has recently made to enable a committee of Congress to take part in the celebration of the settlement of the Northwestern Territory is also a "matter of sentiment." The joint resolution which has been passed by the Senate appropriating $25,000 for the reunion of Federal and Confederate troops upon the battle-field of Gettysburgh during the coming month—a resolution which has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of this House—is also a "matter of sentiment." The statues of different military heroes which adorn the beautiful parks about this city, and the money for the erection of which has been appropriated by Congress, have been erected as a "matter of sentiment." The Washington Monument, as a gentleman suggests to me, was erected as a "matter of sentiment." The annual celebration of the 4th of July is a "matter of sentiment." Why, sir, if we are to draw the line upon "matters of sentiment," the flag itself is a "matter of sentiment."

We appropriate money to salute the arrival, on board of a man-of-war, of a commodore or an admiral or the President of the United States; and when a war ship of our country enters a foreign port, the first thing done is to fire a salute to the foreign flag.

I think, sir, when the chairman and members of the Committee on Military Affairs come to consider this matter, they will have no objection to inserting in this bill this appropriation, which, by the way, is the exact amount estimated by the War Department.

Every American citizen looks upon our flag as the symbol of the power of this, the grandest nation in history; the youngest, and yet the strongest; the infant, and yet the giant; the greatest in agriculture, in manufactures, in inventions, in educational facilities, in intelligent citizenship, in self-government; standing in the foremost rank in science and art—the emblem of all this is the Stars and Stripes. Shall we salute a commodore, an admiral, a President, and still fail to do reverence to the flag under which they serve, and whose folds protect us all? Shall our broadsides roar in foreign ports, in compliment to the flag of Kings and Queens, and yet remain silent when we unfurl our own? If so, for what reason? Why, simply because we can not afford it. I say such action would be too humiliating to contemplate.

If this House refuses to make this appropriation, it will be such a disgrace and shame upon our national pride as we ought not to impose. I entreat gentlemen not to be guilty of such parsimonious conscientiousness as to fail to pass this amendment, and thus continue this patriotic custom which has obtained ever since this nation was born.

Let the cannon boom at sunrise and sunset, when the flag first floats on the morning air, and when it is lowered at the close of day, to show that we honor and reverence this beautiful emblem of our greatness.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be unanimously adopted. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORD], in stating the reasons for the amendment, has substantially covered the whole ground, though he might have added, when referring to "matters of sentiment," that the flag above the Speaker's chair is a "matter of sentiment." Sir, the flag and seal of any nation are the symbols of its sovereignty. The flag in particular is an object of idolatry to every man who has a country. Irishmen, I believe, are the only people who claim to have no country.

A MEMBER. But they have a flag.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes, they have a flag, and one which they worship. But all nations adore the flag of their country. I trust no one here will be so parsimonious as to begrudge honoring the Stars and Stripes at every fort in the land, every day in the year. It will increase both the love and veneration of the people for their national emblem. Moreover a morning gun has utility as well as sentiment, because it wakes lazy people up; both the sunrise and sundown guns serve as a sort of timepiece for the poor.

What American, sir, will object to saluting by the morning and evening gun the sovereignty of his country, that the sound of the cannon may echo and re-echo, reverberating through the land to let the people know that their nation has power to protect them, and power to punish them when they go wrong? [Applause.]

Besides, sir, do not let us insult the immortal words of Webster, when he describes Great Britain, which always salutes her post flags at sunrise and sunset with cannon, as—

A power which has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, whose morning drum-beat, following the sun and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth with one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.

The echo of her morning and evening guns comes nearer encircling the earth than her drum-beat, and surely if the little mother country can thus honor her flag on every continent in the world, we her giant offspring, ought to be able to do the same thing for the Star Spangled banner on a single continent. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise to make a speech; it is not necessary.

Mr. BRUMM. Go on; you are doing well.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, this is altogether off hand.

Mr. BRUMM. All the better.

Mr. LAIRD. Go on. It is good for you.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is very kind on the part of gentlemen to ask me to "go on;" but I might not do so well if I should attempt to go further. As you have applauded me, and therefore rewarded me, I think perhaps this is a good place to stop. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say that the committee——

Mr. OATES. I ask that the amendment be again reported. I was unable to hear it.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, there has been no such item as this in any appropriation bill since the war, because at the close of the war there was an abundance of ammunition left over for this purpose. The committee did not insert a provision of this kind in the bill, for the reason that we thought it more important to appropriate money for target practice. We have largely increased the amount of appropriation for such practice, the supply of powder coming over from the war having been exhausted. I am, however, in harmony with the views of gentlemen who have expressed themselves in favor of the amendment. I have no wish to oppose it, but hope it will be adopted.

Mr. OATES. Is this amendment subject to a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not at this stage of the proceedings. The amendment has been under discussion about ten minutes.

Mr. OATES. I was not aware what aroused the patriotism of my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]; and when I heard his remark about the power of the Army to punish people when they do wrong, I wanted to know what was the question under discussion. I could not conceive what it was that made my friend from South Carolina so broadly national and poetic that he thought the Army was kept to punish people for doing wrong. There was a time when he did not think so. In my opinion he should not think so now. That duty seems to belong to another department.

Mr. FORD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] suggests to me to insert at the end of my amendment the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary." I have no objection to that addition; and I modify the amendment accordingly.

The question recurred on Mr. FORD's amendment as modified.

Mr. OATES. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 9.

Mr. OATES. I would raise the point of no quorum, but I know a quorum is not present, and under the peculiar circumstances I will not do it, although I am opposed to the amendment.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRACEY. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the bill (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

For the manufacture or purchase and test of cannon and carriages; for the alteration of carriages on hand to adapt them to improved service guns; for projectiles, powders, fuzes, and implements, their trial and proof; for experiments in the means of protecting torpedo lines; for compensation of draughtsmen while employed in the Army Ordnance Bureau on ordnance construction, and for the necessary expenses of ordnance officers while temporarily employed at the proving-ground and absent from their proper stations, at the rate of $2.50 per diem while so employed, $500,000.

For the erection of the necessary structures, and for the puchase or manufacture of machinery, tools, and fixtures, to enlarge the present plant at the Watervliet arsenal, West Troy, N. Y., including the erection of two sets of officers' quarters at a cost of not exceeding $10,000 each, $126,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. That there is no law authorizing such appropriations, and——

Mr. TRACEY rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I will withdraw or suspend the point of order if the gentleman from New York wishes to be heard on the subject of the amendment proper.

Mr. TRACEY. I understand from the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he will insist upon his point of order. My own opinion is, Mr. Chairman, that no point of order will lie properly against this amendment. Before replying to the point of order I should like to hear the gentleman state what his point of order is.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no doubt points of order lie against this proposition, because it is not in the nature of an amendment to this Army appropriation bill. But I am quite willing, if the gentleman from New York wishes to be heard on the proposition to reserve the points of order, otherwise I will insist on the points of order. I only wish to be as courteous to the gentleman from New York as I possibly can be.

Mr. TRACEY. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, it is very generally conceded that a wise course to pursue with respect to the public defense is to no longer delay in making preparations to prevent disastrous results in the event of a conflict between our Government and a foreign foe.

Opinions widely differ as to the extent to which the Government should carry expenditures for this purpose. But, Mr. Chairman, so important has the subject of coast defense been deemed by our men of prominence, that many extremely conservative in their views on questions of appropriations for public purposes, have most earnestly advocated the spending of very large sums in this direction, as a precautionary measure.

During the past fifteen years the subject of coast defense and the manufacture of guns in connection therewith has been discussed and examined by boards composed of members of the Senate, members of the House, and expert officers of the Army and Navy, and during the last five years the most exhaustive inquiries and complete reports have been made. The time of Congress has been much occupied by discussions of bills and reports of conference committees, but nothing has been accomplished further than the establishment of a gun factory for the Navy. In consequence of the reports made by several of the boards already alluded to, the War Department became so well satisfied that whenever the making of guns on an extensive scale commenced, Watervliet arsenal would be designated for the factory, that preparations were made for utilizing such suitable machinery as was already in possession of the Government by consolidating it at Watervliet.

This was done under the general law (section 1164, page 209, Revised Statutes of the United States, second edition, 1878) which prescribes the duties of the Chief of Ordnance, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in regard to the procurement of the necessary supplies of ordnance and ordnance stores for the Army, and also for the inspection and proof of the same, etc.

Under this general law there have been collected at Watervliet arsenal available machines and tools for the manufacture of guns, and a number of guns, namely, one 10-inch breech-loading steel rifle, one 8-inch breech-loading steel rifle, and twenty-five 3.2-inch breech-loading steel rifles are now in course of manufacture at that arsenal.

The appropriation asked for the improvement and enlargement of this gun-plant is therefore in continuance of work already begun under due authority of law.

The Statutes at Large (seventh paragraph, page 388, United States Statutes at Large, volume 18, part 3) provide a permanent appropriation from proceeds of sales of obsolete and unserviceable material (limited therein to $75,000 per annum), under which the authority of the War Department to procure or manufacture guns, projectiles, etc., is made continuous.

The appropriation of an additional amount for the same general purposes is a continuation of work already duly authorized by law, and now being prosecuted, as far as the permanent appropriation is available, by the War Department.

The proof and test of ordnance material and guns is authorized by the general law (section 1164) already quoted, and the test of all type guns is made obligatory by the act of July 5, 1884, section 2, page 159, United States Statutes at Large, volume 23.

Provision for the trial and test of ordnance (guns, etc.) has been made, for many years past, in the Army appropriation bill similar to that shown for the years 1885 and 1886. (See first paragraph under "Ordnance Department," pages 112 and 361, volume 23, United States Statutes at Large.)

The cost attending the manufacture of the guns now in course of construction at Watervliet arsenal is defrayed from the permanent appropriation already mentioned (page 338, volume 18, part 3, United States Statutes at Large) provided for that purpose.

It is possible that gentlemen who have not given careful attention to this subject may be disposed to listen to suggestions that action be delayed until a more extensive scheme can be prepared. I doubt the good faith of any one claiming to have an interest in this subject if I find him antagonizing this measure. Postponing action now means the same disheartening results as have for some years past followed the discussions and failures to agree. Let us wait no longer. The passage of this amendment will not interfere with other propositions which may be under consideration, but will enable the Department to continue good work which without this temporary relief must be almost suspended.

I ask for the reading of the letters which I send to the Clerk's desk.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, June 14, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the inclosed letter of the 14th instant from the Chief of Ordnance, stating that during the past two sessions there has been no appropriation for the armament of fortifications, and submitting an amendment to the Army bill, now pending in the House of Representatives, which, if approved, will relieve the Ordnance Department from its present embarrassment.

This matter is of great importance to the efficiency of the Department and of vital interest to the national defense and the public service, and I earnestly recommend favorable action by Congress.

Very respectfully,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the fact that at its past two sessions Congress made no appropriation for the armament of fortifications, through failure of the committee in conference to agree on the provisions of the fortification bill. As a consequence, the operations of the Department in manufacturing and purchasing guns, powder, projectiles, carriages, etc., have been greatly embarrassed, and in many respects altogether suspended, from want of funds, to the great detriment, it is believed, of the Government. Such failure on the part of Congress may happen again at its present session; it is not by any means improbable. It is in view of this possibility that I desire to suggest an amendment to the Army bill, now pending before the House, which, should it meet your approval and be favorably entertained by the Military Committee, would relieve this Department in a measure from its present embarrassment and enable it to retain its present vantage ground and proficiency by keeping up an activity in the manufacture of armament until Congress shall make adequate appropriations.

The proposed amendment is submitted herewith, and calls for an item of $500,000 for the general purposes of procuring guns, powder, projectiles, carriages, fuzes, etc., their test, etc., being generally similar in terms and amount to section 5 of House bill 8465, reported by the Military Committee at the present session, and in addition is embodied an item of $126,000 for completing the existing gun plant at the Watervliet Arsenal.

The necessity for these appropriations is set forth more at length in memoranda herewith, and they would enable the Department to complete and test the guns, etc., now under manufacture, and to proceed with the manufacture of guns, etc., in limited quantity for issue. In connection with this proposition, I desire to call attention to the provision already embodied in the Army bill for the procurement of pneumatic dynamite guns, for which purpose $400,000 is to be appropriated, in view of which it would seem proper to embody in the same bill the items for guns, etc., contained in proposed amendment, which may not become available by any other way. Should these items be embraced in the Army bill they could be omitted from House bill 8465, so far as they are embodied in that bill, should it ultimately be passed by Congress.

As further bearing on this subject, I quote the following paragraph from the letter of the Secretary of War of May 17, 1888, to the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, relative to the proposition of the Pneumatic Dynamite Gun Company for the sale to the Government of several of their guns, namely:

"It is not intended by this recommendation to supplant the previous recommendations of the Department, which call attention to the great needs of the country in the matter of coast and harbor defense, and the necessity of having guns of modern pattern and construction of great power and range. The pneumatic dynamite gun does not and can not take the place of such heavy ordnance, but will be a most important and necessary auxiliary thereto."

If no special appropriation for guns, etc., should be passed at this session of Congress, it would be in consonance with the above views of the Secretary of War that a small appropriation for guns, etc., as herein proposed, be embodied in the Army bill, as well as an appropriation for dynamite guns.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. TRACEY. After the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated his points of order fully against this proposition, I will take the opportunity to refer to authorities which may be necessary to reply to him.

Mr. RANDALL. This amendment has relation to the fortifications of the country and the enlargement of buildings connected therewith. Under Rule XI the amendment belongs to the fortification bill and not to the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman withdraw his point of order for a moment?

Mr. RANDALL. The appropriations for the buildings might possibly go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

In reply to the words which have fallen from the gentleman I will say we heard of this necessity more than a year ago, when the fortification bill failed by the Senate insisting on large appropriations not properly guarded. The House stood steadily against them, and the wisdom of that position has been made manifest by the manufacture in Pennsylvania and our ability to furnish such steel as will be adapted to this purpose without giving any bonus, as the Senate proposition in effect provided in that connection.

I now insist upon my points of order.

Mr. SPINOLA. I would like to say that what I suggested properly belongs to the public business. The Committee on Military Affairs have already reported a bill embodying these items, but it is apprehended they will not be reached in time to become law at this session.

Mr. RANDALL. That recognizes the point of order that there is no law authorizing it, and the Committee on Military Affairs recognized it by introducing an independent proposition, which is now on the Calendar.

Mr. SPINOLA. And therefore, Mr. Chairman, we were of opinion that in order to accomplish what was suggested by the bill referred to, and to carry out the suggestion which has already taken a strong hold upon the public mind in this country, that it was better to take the preliminary steps toward carrying on this much-needed work by appending it to this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a matter that belongs to the fortifications exclusively.

Mr. SPINOLA. That is true if insisted upon as a point of order; but by consent of the House, if no point of order is made against it by my friend from Pennsylvania, of course this could go through upon this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether it will go through or not, because it will be subject to the decision of the majority.

Mr. SPINOLA. The question in regard to fortifying our seaboard cities is one of the utmost importance, as my friend knows.

Mr. RANDALL. I think we had better have the points of order settled first, and then I will meet the gentleman on the argument if necessary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow the gentleman from New York to proceed for a few minutes, withholding the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course I have no objection to allowing the gentleman to proceed with that understanding, if he desires to be heard.

Mr. SPINOLA. In the present unprotected condition of the harbor of New York, with that great city and its surroundings, representing a moneyed value of thousands of millions of dollars in realty alone, irrespective of the immense sums which may be included in the personal property of the citizens there and in the immediate vicinity—all that vast aggregation of wealth is completely at the mercy of any foreign power whose naval equipment is superior to our own, and there are very few that are not.

Now, something should be done by Congress beyond mere delays. Some active course ought to be pursued, some prompt steps taken, or something done that will inspire confidence in the minds of our people in the way of giving protection to that vast amount of property; and not only to that city alone, but to the other dozen or more cities along the seaboard, which are in an equally defenseless condition. Undoubtedly such a condition of affairs as we all know to exist calls for prompt action; and although we are entitled to this consideration at the hands of Congress, there has been nothing done, but, on the contrary, Congress has been dilly-dallying for several years upon the question, and not a step towards any real action has been taken.

Now, if this appropriation can be allowed to go in this bill, it is one step at least towards satisfying this great public demand, and one which the people of that part of our country are looking for with anxiety. The attention of Congress was called to this a year or two ago by Hon. Samuel J. Tilden in a letter addressed to this House, in which he pointed out the great danger which existed at that time of the destruction of the city, in the event of a conflict with some foreign power, by the failure which seemed apparent on the part of Congress to incorporate in the appropriation bills a provision for the public defenses, and showed that an enemy approaching New York with war-ships, equipped with rifled cannon and armament capable of sending their shot and shell from 8 to 10 miles, could safely pass Sandy Hook in its present defenseless condition and place the city of New York completely at their mercy and demand a ransom of hundreds of millions from the city, which would have to be paid before they would let go their iron grip.

This weak and feeble condition of affairs has continued to such an extent that our representatives at foreign courts are almost powerless. They dare not speak out boldly and determinedly in dealing with questions which arise, in which our national honor is involved, for they know our defenseless condition, and they creep along, cringing, almost becoming sneaks, instead of standing up boldly and with that courage which should characterize Americans, and which has been exhibited in our past history when our country's defenses were more carefully looked after.

I ask my friend in all sincerity, in all candor, to allow us to take this first step toward affording protection to the vast amount of property that is aggregated in New York. It is but a small amount we ask, not a great sum; and I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in the name of New York, where he has so many friends and where we look to him with such admiration and love him so well, that he allow the amendment to be added to the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this is a step backward. The developments of the last few years (and particularly of the last year), since the failure of the fortifications bills, have demonstrated beyond controversy the fact that the fortification bill as proposed, if it had become a law, with the vast amount of money it incorporated for this purpose, would not have accomplished any good, and that the money would have been largely wasted.

Every country on earth that pretends to be a formidable power has adopted a different mode of securing heavy armament from that then proposed. We have been for twenty years waiting on the Ordnance Department of the Army and of the Navy to make us some guns that we dare fire off. What is wanted, in my judgment, to inspire confidence in our people, is, instead of continuing in that old rut, to invite individual capital and corporate capital, acting in conjunction with the Government, to make provision for the supply of armament such as we need upon terms that will be fair, and not subject the United States to an enormous expense without giving us what we really want.

Why should we not go into the market and buy a 12-inch, a 16-inch, or a 20-inch gun, and say distinctly what power we expect from that weapon; what shall be the velocity of its shot; the power of execution; the weight of the projectile; its range, and fix all the requirements that we should insist upon for that particular weapon? I am warranted in saying this: That under these conditions, if this preliminary action is taken, and the Government goes into the market to purchase this character of guns, that they can be bought without running to the expense and risk of having a great number of them before we secure one of the character we need. What we want is to be able to go as individuals go into the stores and purchase what is necessary. We do not go as individuals and subject ourselves to a large expense for the purchase of what we do not need. The very same principle ought to prevail in conducting the operations of the Government. Let the Government say to these manufacturers (and I think I am in a position to say that the manufacturers of the country feel themselves capable of performing the work), we want 12, 14, 16, or 20 inch guns of such power and range, and are willing to pay for them, and I guaranty to you that they will perform just such work as we want, and equal in quality to similar work anywhere else in the world. That is the way an individual would buy, and that is the way the Government ought to buy.

I have no thought for a moment that the mere entering upon this matter at Watervliet is going to make safe the harbor of New York with no enemy in sight. If an enemy was in sight the harbor would not be defended in that way. It must be defended with modern contrivances of defense, made according to the advance in science, and not by establishing plants. As the gentleman from New York who offered the amendment said, this is nothing more nor less than a gun foundry.

I have here the bill that this very committee reported.

Mr. TRACEY. I said they were making guns there.

Mr. RANDALL. I think in your remarks you spoke of the appropriation as establishing a gun factory. It has always been accepted, and never controverted before in the history of this House for the last five years, that such action as proposed did not require a law.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. It appears from the very lucid statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] that under authority of law now at the Watervliet arsenal certain guns are being manufactured. I submit, therefore, to the dispassionate judgment of the chairman (the fact being so) that this is simply a proposition to continue an expenditure for a public work already in progress. Now, if the gentleman from New York has correctly recited the facts in connection with the manufacture of guns and the condition of things at that arsenal, then I submit first to the Chairman that the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is not well taken; and I appeal to the Chairman that he will not permit, in making up his judgment, either the argument of friend or foe to this proposition, in favor of fortifications on the one hand or against fortifications on the other, to confuse his mind. It is not a question of fortifications which is involved in the proposed amendment. No language or word of that amendment authorizes such an argument to be made.

For one I am prepared now to say that I shall probably agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that an enlarged system of fortifications will be a mistake whenever entered upon by the United States. But, sir, I am not prepared to agree with that gentleman that it is a mistake upon the part of the Government to test the question of ordnance, its character and its power. Permit me to say from my observation of the condition of the country its great weakness is its inability to make guns.

If you had the power to-day to cause to spring into existence permanent fortifications at every port in the United States you could not man them nor arm them. To-day you are hardly able to put a ship afloat for the want of proper ordnance. To-day, I repeat, you can not man even your existing fortifications with modern ordnance. To-day, in my judgment, the logic and wisdom of the hour is to prepare the Government in its capacity, in its reserve power to manufacture ordnance ready for your fortifications whenever they become necessary, ready for your ships of war when they are needed.

Now, sir, when this pending proposition is distinguished upon the question of fortifications, and regarded solely and purely as their experiments in the manufacture of large guns, clearly the continuance of their experiments, I submit that that being authorized by law and the plant already secured, the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] is germane and is in order; germane to the purpose of the bill, germane to every object contemplated by it, and in pursuance of existing authority.

This being the case, I may be permitted before I conclude to notice one observation of my friend. Every gentleman who is familiar with the efforts being made by all the civilized nations of the world in improving the power of guns, in other words, in improving aggressive force with a view of thereby securing peace, knows that such experiments when made should be made by the Government. I am willing, and have always been willing, to test the resources of the Government when it becomes necessary that you shall man your fortifications. When there is such a demand I am willing to travel in the road designated by the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. Do you not know perfectly well the Government is not capable of making 14, 16, or 20 inch guns?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. If you will include in that question steel guns of the greatest power required by modern progress and skill, and if you will include any individual with the Government, I will answer in the affirmative.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman does not quite answer my question.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I do fully.

Mr. RANDALL. I can say to the gentleman that the Government can not to-day make a 14, 16, or 20 inch gun. I say here to-day the manufacturers of this country are ready to contract with the Government for all three calibers.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I can not call to mind but one existing gun foundry or establishment in the United States, and I think that is limited to iron guns. That is the establishment in the city of Boston of W. P. Hunt & Co. In regard to modern steel guns there is no individual capable of their manufacture. But I say to my friend if I go out and advertise to the world, if I advertise a contract as an inducement, I know enough of American genius, I know enough of American enterprise, I know enough of the disposition of American manufacturers to know they will venture to undertake anything, even the building of a cannon.

Mr. RANDALL. My statement is not an idle one. It is well considered, and made upon information, that American manufacturers are ready to supply the guns I name.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Again, sir, it is because of that fact, because I recognize the weakness of the National Government and the weakness of individuals to do this thing, that I say we who are clothed with the legislative power should aid every effort at doing it in the name of the Government, and by the authority of the Government, and should say that whatever risk there may attend it shall be the risk of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. If the Government can buy guns such as I have described, why enter upon an expenditure of millions for the creation of a gun foundry?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The gentleman knows as well as I do that when a contractor fails (and that is the fate of most Government contractors) he comes to Congress, appealing to our honesty and our mercy and gets a ready hearing, and is almost certain to obtain relief.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman knows that I have never voted for any such thing.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am speaking of what Congress does, and the gentleman knows the fact very well. So that ultimately the Government, in one way or another, has got to take the risk of this experiment; and inasmuch as it has got an established arsenal; inasmuch as it has commenced the work, and inasmuch as some of these guns are incomplete, I hold not only that this amendment is in order, but that it is the duty of the Government to continue this work.

Mr. SAYERS. Suppose the Government should contract with a manufacturer that he, the manufacturer, should take the risk of making a gun of such and such a capacity, does the gentleman think that in case of failure Congress would then relieve the man from his contract?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly. We have been doing it all the time.

Mr. PETERS. Do not we make contracts for ironclads, and require a certain rate of speed before we take them off the contractor's hands?

Mr. BUCHANAN. And if we require the contractor to assume the risk, will he not take that element into consideration in fixing his price?

Mr. RANDALL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in regard to the point of order. Although it is not expressed in so many words, it is very manifest that the appropriation contemplated by this amendment, except as to the plant, and, in fact, including proposed enlarged buildings, has reference to the matter of fortified defense, and not to the current movements of our Army. It has reference to seacoast defense, a matter which under the rules belongs to the Committee on Appropriations. To the extent, however, that it involves any expenditure for the enlargement of existing structures, the subject belongs, if not to the Committee on Appropriations, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. As I have remarked, although it is not expressly stated that the proposed ordnance is for fortification purposes, that appears to be sufficiently clear, so much so that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] will not call it in question.

But, Mr. Chairman, as the question of the necessity for this expenditure has been referred to here both by the gentlemen from New York [Mr. TRACEY and Mr. SPINOLA] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE], I desire to say a word about that. Surely my friend from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] misapprehends the greatness of our country and its standing among the nations. I think he unintentionally does his Government injustice.

The United States, instead of being an inferior power among the nations or not being prepared to assert itself on all occasions, has passed far beyond the stage when a nation has occasion to vaunt its power or display its strength. Speeches of this kind would have answered very well half a century ago, when we were comparatively a feeble people. Some of these speeches would have answered thirty years ago, when our country had not displayed to the present generation the martial spirit of its people or its vast resources.

But, now, sir, the case is entirely different. What occasion have we beyond the matter of sentiment and excessive precaution? and to that extent I am willing to make reasonable appropriations of money. What occasion have we, I ask, to even stop to discuss this matter of national defense? What nation is in a condition, or can be, to excite even the slightest apprehension of danger on the part of the American people? What nation? Is it Great Britain? Strangely enough we noticed not long ago that that country was thrown into a state of alarm because of the alleged unprotected condition of her own coasts.

Is it Great Britain that could for a moment excite uneasiness on the part of this country? Providence opening to the human race at the proper moment this great continent, placed us in a position on the globe where none of the considerations which have influenced the policies of other nations in regard to the matter of defense can have any application to us whatever. Our remoteness from ambitious powers, our policy of peaceful industry and progress, and our vast resources are our defense against all comers.

Besides that, Providence has happily given us securities for the keeping of the peace toward us by other countries, such securities as no nation has ever held since organized governments began. Great Britain!

Why, Providence has placed at our mercy, by way of guaranty of the continuance of peaceful relations with us, her vast possessions extending from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the Pacific Ocean, has placed almost in our hands her island possessions on our coasts, and all her possessions contiguous to this continent.

Mr. Chairman, I saw with amazement not long since remarks made by some gentleman at the other end of the Capitol, in regard to the defenseless condition of Chicago—remarks which in the minds of unthinking persons might for a moment create a sentiment of alarm. The possibility was suggested of English ships of war, ironclads, entering the Great Lakes by the Welland Canal and passing on unobstructed to Chicago, and bombarding that magnificent city. It requires only a moment's reflection to see the absurdity of such a thing occurring even in case of war between this country and England.

Did any government ever purposely deliver up its ships into the hands of its enemy? How long would the Welland Canal last if it became necessary for us to destroy it? In the event of a war with England the Welland Canal itself would disappear, and a million of men thrown upon Canada on the sounding of the very first tocsin of war would end the dominion of Great Britain on the American continent. Not only that, her commerce would be driven from the ocean. As to Spain, Providence has happily placed one of her most important outlying possessions at our door. The very moment an unfriendly shot was fired Cuba would become a part of our domain.

What does the history of the past teach us? The war of 1812 came on with reasonable opportunity for preparation, yet our fathers with a courage which belonged to that period postponed preparation until the hour of action came, and then what grand results were seen! And do we, their descendants, in a time of profound peace, palter here about a question of national defense, when the experience of the last twenty-five years shows that the nations recognize the greatness of our Republic and the high sense of justice of its people, so that the law uttered by the United States is the recognized law of the national intercourse of the world, and is so accepted by the nations?

Can a citizen of the United States contemplate the events of the last twenty years and then talk about our being in any possible peril from a foreign nation in any possible contingency, independent of the guaranties of peace to which I have already referred? A nation which at the close of an exhausting war was in a position to say to France, backed by England and Italy, that the presence of a foreign power in Mexico was a menace to its Government and must not continue—a nation which would say this with such a positive right to command attention that three of the foremost of European powers at once abandoned their designs on our continent, leaving their unfortunate victim, Maximilian, to his fate, stands up absolutely the arbiter of peace to the world.

Mr. Chairman, I came to this Capitol at the opening of the late war in 1861, when President Lincoln summoned the two Houses of Congress to meet in special session. Sales were then occurring on every hand of the accumulated military rubbish of former years, worthless arms, ordnance, etc., which were sold as worthless, condemned war material, when an actual occasion for the use of arms arose—sold to be reconstructed, perhaps, being worthless for the purposes of war. Such was the natural result of a policy of accumulating military supplies in a time of profound peace. Notwithstanding the old maxim, our Government has never prepared for actual war until war came, and never will.

At the time referred to thousands of men were pouring hourly into this capital. Contracts were being made every day for the supply of arms. Capitalists were offering to furnish with the utmost expedition ten or twenty times the quantity of arms required by the needs of the Government. In a short time—shorter than would have been necessary if we had made the grandest preparation—the arms required for equipping one of the grandest armies that ever marched under a banner were well supplied.

What about your forts? You had been spending millions of dollars for forts for years and years, through successive generations, before the late war came. Yet when war came earth-works thrown up on the spur of the occasion were found to be the best military instrumentality for meeting the purposes for which forts had been designed. Millions of dollars had been expended upon the seaboard; hundreds of thousands had been spent to protect the Mississippi Valley against an invading enemy from the Gulf of Mexico; forts had been constructed and maintained for generations, yet they were found absolutely worthless when the peril came.

In the old structures which had been designed for national defense and security you had nothing effective when, in 1861, unhappily, the two sections of this country came together in the clash of arms. Yet how speedily all the appliances necessary for national defense and aggression sprang into life! Why, sir, are we the descendants of the men who in 1812 improvised in a few months from the forests a navy strong enough to drive Great Britain from the Great Lakes? Are we here discussing seriously the importance and necessity of great and costly provision for the public defense when the safety of the nation was never so absolutely assured?

Again, sir, there is no nation which could possibly strike a blow at America that is not to a greater or less extent a commercial power, and such is the commercial dependence of all commercial powers upon the American people, and so absolutely secure our position, that war could only be fatal to them.

Mr. TILLMAN. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is addressing himself to the merits of the question, and not to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman says my remark is true. Why does he not adhere to the rules?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am only doing what has been done already on both sides.

These remarks, Mr. Chairman, were designed as an answer to my friend from New York; but without further pursuing that line of argument, I will address myself to the practical view of this question of coast defense. In regard to our dynamite system, I concede that out of abundant caution—not because I dream there is anything to apprehend—it seems to be proper to appropriate, as we are doing year after year, a large sum of money for experiments in connection with dynamite as a means of harbor defense. There is a possibility that at the Golden Gate such means of defense may be needed, instead of forts on the one side or the other, which might be swept away by the great guns that experience may invent.

The hopes of all mankind are against any such possibility, but there is still a possibility that this nation will find it necessary to prepare for national defense, and that justifies us to resort to every reasonable means to make our shores absolutely sure against any possible peril that may arise. So I always have favored, and do still, appropriations of reasonable sums for experiments in dynamite, which manifestly must become the great defensive power for coasts so extended as ours against invasion from any quarter.

I have said this much for the reason, Mr. Chairman, I can not sit in my seat patiently and hear this greatness of our country questioned, a greatness which has been achieved through the noble arts of peaceful labor; and I am not willing that the possibilities of the future should lead us into the old methods of oppressing mankind. With the pending bill, appropriating $24,000,000, a sum equal to the entire expenses of the Government fifty years ago, for the support of the Army alone, it seems to me such a scheme of grand expenditure of public money as this amendment points to, out of mere sentiment, is, I think, altogether indefensible. Among the people there is no apprehension, and they do not ask you to take their hard earnings to build up costly structures and war material valueless when war shall come. They know this Government has reached that commanding position among the nations when war is one of the most improbable events which can occur to us.

Let me inquire of my friend from New York whether a government coming out of a great struggle which said to so powerful a nation as Great Britain, you have violated the law of nations and we demand the penalty for that violation, and that nation quietly submits to arbitrators to be appointed like notaries public to take evidence, and they made up an account of $15,000,000, which was paid into our Treasury; does my friend think that such a nation should be anxious about emergencies and the defense of its shores? Is it not fair to presume the American people will be equal to any emergency in the future as they have been in the past? I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has not yet been disposed of, and the Chair will confine gentlemen in their remarks to its discussion.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I intended simply speaking to the point of order before the Chair made his suggestion in reference to confining discussion to that point; but I may say in passing, before reaching that subject, that if the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is correct, we must follow to its legitimate conclusions the letter, referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], of Governor Tilden, a man who in accumulated experiences and knowledge of public affairs compared favorably with any public man during this century in this country or any other—I say that the deductions and conclusions of that letter show the necessity to be as great then as at any other time, and the necessity is no less great now than it was then. That letter of Mr. Tilden, if there be no objection, I will insert in my remarks without taking up time by having it read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

The letter is as follows:

Letter of Mr. Tilden to Hon. John G. Carlisle on our seacoast defenses.

GRAYSTONE, Yonkers, N. Y., December 1, 1885.

DEAR MR. CARLISLE: As public opinion points to you as the Speaker of the next House of Representatives, I desire to submit a suggestion as to one of the public objects for which an appropriation ought to be prompt and liberal.

In considering the state and management of the public revenues the subject involves the questions whether we shall extinguish the surplus by reducing the revenue, or whether we shall apply the surplus to payments on the public debt, or whether we shall seize the occasion to provide for our seacoast defenses, which have been too long neglected. I am of the opinion that the latter is a paramount necessity which ought to precede the reduction of the revenue, and ought also to precede an excessive rapidity in the payment of the public debt.

The property exposed to destruction in the twelve seaports—Portland, Portsmouth, Boston, Newport, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, New Orleans, Galveston, and San Francisco—can not be less in value than five thousand millions of dollars. To this must be added a vast amount of property dependent for its use on these seaports. Nor does this statement afford a true measure of the damage which might be caused to the property and business of the country by a failure to protect these seaports from hostile naval attacks.

They are the centers not only of foreign commerce, but of most of the internal trade and exchanges of domestic productions. To this state of things the machinery of transportation of the whole country has become adapted.

The interruption of the currents of traffic by the occupation of one or more of our principal seaports by a foreign enemy, or the destruction of them by bombardment, or the holding over them the menace of destruction for the purpose of exacting contribution or ransom would inflict upon the property and business of the country an injury which can neither be foreseen nor measured.

The elaborate and costly fortifications which were constructed with the greatest engineering skill are now practically useless. They are not capable of resisting the attacks of modern artillery.

A still greater defect exists in our coasts defense. The range of the best modern artillery has become so extended that our present fortifications designed to protect the harbor of New York, where two-thirds of the import trade and more than one-half of the export trade of the whole United States is carried on, are too near to the great populations of New York City, Jersey City, and Brooklyn to be of any value as a protection.

To provide effectual defenses would be the work of years. It would take much time to construct permanent fortifications. A small provision of the best modern guns would take several years. Neither of these works can be extemporized in presence of emergent danger. A million of soldiers, with the best equipments, on the heights surrounding the harbor of New York in our present state of preparation, or rather in our total want of preparation, would be powerless to resist a small squadron of war steamers.

This state of things is discreditable to our foresight and to our prudence.

The best guaranty against aggression, the best assurance that our diplomacy will be successful and pacific, and that our rights and honor will be respected by other nations, is in their knowledge that we are in a situation to vindicate our reputation and interests. While we may afford to be deficient in the means of offense, we can not afford to be defenseless. The notoriety of the fact that we have neglected the ordinary precautions of defense invites want of consideration in our diplomacy, injustice, arrogance, and insult at the hands of foreign nations.

It is now more than sixty years since we announced to the world that we should resist any attempts, from whatever quarter they might come, to make any new colonizations on any part of the American continent—that while we should respect the status quo we should protect the people of the different nations inhabiting this continent from every attempt to subject them to the dominion of any European power, or to interfere with their undisturbed exercise of the rights of self-government.

This announcement was formally made by President Monroe, after consultation with Mr. Madison and Mr. Jefferson. It was formulated by John Quincy Adams. Our Government has firmly adhered to the Monroe doctrine, and even so late as 1865 it warned Napolean III out of Mexico. It is impossible to foresee in the recent scramble of the European powers for acquisition of colonies how soon an occasion may arise for our putting in practice the Monroe doctrine. It is clear that there ought to be some relation between our assertion of that doctrine and our preparation to maintain it.

It is not intended to recommend any attempt to rival the great European powers in the creation of a powerful navy. The changes which have rapidly occurred by the diminution of the relative resisting power of the defensive armor of ironclads, and by the increased efficiency of modern artillery—which on the whole has gained in the competition—suggest that we should not at the present enter largely into the creation of armored vessels.

In the questions that beset this subject until they shall have reached a solution, we can content ourselves with adding but sparingly to our Navy. But what we do add should be the very best that experience and science can indicate. This prudential view is reinforced by the consideration that the annual charge of maintaining a war vessel bears an important proportion to the original cost of construction.

In constructing permanent fortifications, and in providing an ample supply of the best modern artillery, the annual cost of maintenance is inconsiderable. Nearly the whole expenditure is in the original outlay for construction.

If we do not make the expenditure necessary to provide for our seacoast defenses when we have a surplus, and have no need to levy new taxes, we certainly will not make those expenditures when we have no longer a surplus in the Treasury.

To leave our vast interests defenseless in order to reduce the cost of whisky to its consumers would be a solecism.

The present time is peculiarly favorable for providing for this great national necessity too long neglected. Not only does the surplus in the Treasury supply ample means to enable us to meet this great public want without laying new burdens upon the people, but the work can now be done at a much lower cost than has ever before been possible. The defensive works would consist almost entirely of steel and iron. These materials can now be had at an unprecedentedly low price. A vast supply of machinery and of labor called into existence by a great vicissitude in the steel and iron industries offers itself to our service. We should have the satisfaction of knowing that while we were availing ourselves of the supplies which would ordinarily be unattainable, we were setting in motion important industries and giving employment to labor in a period of depression. With encouragement by the guaranty of work, or perhaps by the Government itself furnishing the plant, the inventive genius of our people would be applied to the creation of new means and improved machinery, and establishments would spring into existence capable of supplying all of the national wants, and rendering us completely independent of all other countries in respect to the means of national defense.

I endeavored to impress these ideas upon Mr. RANDALL the last time I had the pleasure of seeing him.

With my highest regards to Mrs. Carlisle and yourself, I remain,

Very truly yours,

S. J. TILDEN.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, when we emerged from the war of 1812 it was when wooden ships and small armaments were used by all the nations of the world. Now we have armed vessels which were unknown to our ancestors.

I will now address myself to the point of order invoked by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. It would seem from the proviso, in connection with what has been read by my friend from New York [Mr. TRACEY], that this is an establishment at Watervliet arsenal for the manufacture of guns and gun carriages and other means of defense not applicable to fortifications alone, but every means of defense known to be used along our extensive line of seacoast on the Atlantic and Pacific. I say now, addressing myself to the point of order, that this establishment is there now and has been located there for some time, and in my judgment it ought to be maintained and sustained by ample appropriations from the Government so that it may be in the most efficient condition to manufacture these vessels, for the purpose of constructing these iron-clad vessels. We need them and must have them. We can not do without them.

And it has been said, by the bye, that broken-down, effete Italy, a mere dot upon the world's map, owns one armored vessel that to-morrow could enter the port of New York by way of the Sandy Hook channel and destroy the entire city, nor could the whole American Navy stop it. That was said in the Senate of the United States within six months past, and there has never yet been a contradiction of the statement.

But, Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer in this connection to the rule upon this subject by which the Chairman, in determining the question of order, must be governed. It is to be found in our code of rules, whereby authority is conferred upon the committee of the House to consider certain classes of legislation in the following words:

All proposed legislation relating to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy, shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

This is to be found on page 244 of the Rules of the House.

Now, in reference to the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that this is new legislation and not authorized by any existing law or former legislation. I say that point of order can not be sustained, because it is not new legislation; for this amendment proposes simply to carry out and to carry on a law which is already in existence, and make appropriations in continuance of a work already in progress.

Mr. RANDALL. Then why did your committee introduce a separate bill?

Mr. HOOKER. Because we did not know that we could get it upon this bill. If we can get it upon this, of course there is no necessity for the other. Why did your Committee on Appropriations consider this matter?

Mr. RANDALL. We are considering it.

Mr. HOOKER. But do you not consider that it is a part of the duty of the Military Committee, under a proper construction of the rules, and that that committee has also jurisdiction of the subject?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not.

Mr. HOOKER. I understood you did. I think the Committee on Military Affairs, under the rule which I have quoted, has jurisdiction, and having exercised that jurisdiction that the amendment is proper and in the line of its authority.

But, Mr. Chairman, I want to quote a ruling which has been heretofore made upon this subject, and directly in the line of this amendment—a ruling which was made when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration in the Forty-ninth Congress, during the last session of that Congress. I was not here at the time, but the question was raised on a point of order made against a proposition providing an appropriation of some four millions of dollars for the construction of war-ships, at which time my honored friend from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] was presiding as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. This question arose as to whether that appropriation was in order as coming within the rule of an expenditure to carry out existing legislation. The Chairman of the committee in ruling upon the subject, when the point of order was made by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] with his usual ability, just as he has sustained the point of order to-day made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], used the following language:

The general rule has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana.

That is, Mr. HOLMAN, who made the point of order; and I quote now from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 26, 1887:

It is laid down in subsection 3 of Rule XXI, and provides that—

"3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law."

But to that general rule there is an express exception, as follows:

"Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress."

This is a work already in progress.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole then proceeds, after this extract from the rule, and after quoting from the proviso, showing that in this instance, although the proposed appropriation was enormous in its character, it fell within the exception:

That is to say, if the work be a public work, or if the object is a public object, and it is already in progress, then there need not be any previous legislation authorizing it.

No one can say this work is not already in progress.

The Chair believes that the construction of a Navy is a public object or a public work, and the language of the bill which we have been considering, and the appropriation made at the last session show that the construction of the Navy is in progress. It may be said, also, that the proposed amendment providing money for the construction of vessels does not change existing law, and is not prohibited by law.

It is very agreeable to the present occupant of the chair to be able to refer to a precedent bearing upon the point of order now raised. In the Forty-sixth Congress (Mr. CARLISLE in the chair) it was decided "that appropriations for public works and objects" already in progress could be included in general appropriation bills or could be inserted as amendments; and that the word "objects" meant something in addition to the word "works," and must be held to include the public Departments of the Government, and the civil, military, and naval establishments recognized by law and supported by the Government. The Government has undertaken to maintain, and is annually maintaining, a naval establishment, and under the rule appropriations may be made for it in a general appropriation bill, and such has always been the practice until last session, when appropriations for the construction of ships for the Navy and armaments for them were made in a separate bill. Before the last session such appropriations were made in the naval appropriation bill, under the rule exactly as it now is.

There is no law prescribing the number of ships that shall constitute the Navy, or the number of guns they shall carry. Those matters depend entirely on the amount of money appropriated for those purposes, just as the number of clerks and other employés in the Departments depends upon the appropriations made.

And by parity of reasoning this may be applied to fortifications and the manufacture of guns.

The present Speaker of the House, as has been stated, has already ruled on this point of order, and the Chair believes the ruling was correct, and feels it his duty to decide this question in accordance with that ruling. This decision allows an important amendment to be offered, but it gives to the Committee of the Whole the right to pass upon this interesting question, and an opportunity to say whether it is in favor of increasing the Navy or not.

I think that so far as this amendment refers to the exception to the rule it clearly falls within that exception, and that this work being already in existence, in progress, and previous laws having been passed in regard to the manufacture of guns for defenses, and for the equipment of the Navy, that this proposition is clearly in order as being in the line of that previous legislation upon the subject, and is in continuation of public works already begun.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a bill providing for the military establishment of the United States, and not for fortifications. That branch of the public service is covered by a separate bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I wish to ask unanimous consent to be permitted to occupy one minute in making an explanation of a remark of mine which appears to have been entirely misunderstood by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. He has certainly misunderstood me. When I spoke of our representatives abroad being forced to act as "sneaks," I did not mean that the American people were sneaks, I referred only to our representatives abroad. I spoke only of the position which was forced upon them by our defenseless condition in dealing with foreign governments. I know the courage and the pride of our people. I know what we can do, and what we have done as a nation. I know the bravery and endurance of all our people in the late struggle, and if the Great Ruler of the universe should send back the great men who commanded the two armies in that struggle, the survivors of that contest, with their old captains to lead them, could whip the world. I did not say that we were deficient in anything as far as courage and endurance were concerned, for we are the most enlightened and progressive people on earth, and if it ever comes to war we can meet any power whether in the field or on water, especially if we have a little time to get ready, and it is the part of wisdom to get ready in advance.

But I am only looking now to the protection of our seacoast cities, which are in great peril at this time in case of trouble with any foreign power. I agree with my friend from Pennsylvania that the Government may advertise for 12, 16, or 20 inch guns——

Mr. RANDALL. Those are the only guns that would defend New York to-day.

Mr. SPINOLA. We want some other guns besides those.

Mr. RANDALL. Private manufacturers are now ready to contract for such guns.

Mr. SPINOLA. We will make contracts in due time. But let us have a chance to continue the work now in progress at the Watervliet armory, in order that the people may feel a little security in regard to the seacoast cities.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, it is perhaps scarcely fair to the House to attempt to discuss the merits of this question when we stand face to face——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to remind the gentleman that the point of order is under consideration.

Mr. LAIRD. I will try to come to the point of order.

A MEMBER. Just as the rest did.

Mr. LAIRD. Just exactly.

It is perhaps scarcely fair to attempt to discuss the merits of this controversy in the face of an objection which, if insisted upon, is summary. But nevertheless there is something due to the truth of history, to the course of legislation, and our responsibility to the country for the attitude in which the country confessedly stands to-day.

It is in the memory of many of the gentlemen listening to me that when, in the last session of the Forty-ninth Congress, the Senate sent here a bill, the consideration of which by the Senate had secured an appropriation of several million dollars looking to the defense of the undefended coast of the country, looking to the erection of plants for the manufacture and assemblage of ordnance which, by the confession of all the men intelligent on the subject, does not exist to such an extent as even to promise a defense of the country in case defense were needed, that upon the reference of that measure a question arose between the Military Committee and the Committee on Appropriations, and upon a decision of that controversy the bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] contending therefor, and the Military Committee of the House, as then composed, contending against such construction of the rule. This bill, appropriating millions for the construction of plant and ordnance, and the assemblage of the same, never came from the Committee on Appropriations, but died unconsidered with the Forty-ninth Congress.

So much in regard to the responsibility for the position in which the country confessedly finds itself. Proceeding, it can not be successfully gainsaid that outside of the arms purchased by appropriations made by Congress through the Committee on Naval Affairs there does not exist within the limits of the Republic a gun, a carriage, or a charge of powder to fire a gun if we had the gun and the carriage in any sense adequate to the defense of our coast. There does not exist a fort having the appliances sanctioned by modern scientific warfare which could protect itself, even, from the onset of the navies of the world anywhere along the entire undefended limits of the country, to say nothing of its constituting a defense to the port or city where it is placed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will pardon the Chair the request that he endeavor to confine himself to the point of order under discussion.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, I must plead a bad precedent in defense of a good cause. The other gentlemen have discussed the merits of this matter, and I beg leave to speak in defense of the Military Committee, upon which it has been my pleasure to sit as a member during my terms in Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may do that upon a subsequent passage. The Chair prefers to hear gentlemen upon the point of order.

Mr. LAIRD. If the Chair is disposed to pass from its passive position, which I suppose is the attitude of the Chair, and become an active competitor in this debate, I suppose I might as well decline to proceed further, because I do not care to split hairs about a question of order. But I did wish to discuss some suggestions presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and my amiable and distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], which I think it sensible to discuss, even though we thereby violate some threadbare rule of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. We will bring in a bill providing for 14, 16, and 20 inch guns, and fortunately, as I state, we will have people ready to supply them upon fixed prices and with required efficiency.

Mr. LAIRD. I hope you will. You certainly will have my support for any such measure.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to the gentleman from Nebraska proceeding.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, one word. There is not to-day in the United States for land defense, outside of the recently manufactured 3-inch steel field-pieces, a single piece of modern ordnance; there is not a single gun-carriage adequate for the mounting and management, nor a single emplacement for a gun or battery. Nor is there even powder enough on hand to fire such a gun, if we had it, belonging to the public. So stands the case confessed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who, recently of the Committee on Appropriations, parades what that committee has not done as a virtue, and points with a perversity of pride to the defenseless condition of the country, and says that we are defended by the ignorance of inventors, who have not yet evolved a scheme of wholesale destruction.

That until they do invent some cheap element of devastation it is our duty to wait and let the lazy millions rot, trusting the defense of national honor and municipal and private property to the world's memory of the puissance of American arms, when American arms were scientifically equal to any on earth, while to-day they are, as invention rates time, a hundred years behind the balance of the warlike world. And that this is so is chargeable not to the Committee on Military Affairs, which now seek to remedy the neglect of a committee, one of whose advocates pleads its non-action as cause for congratulation because it has cost nothing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] makes the point of order that the amendment should be reported to the House in the fortification bill, which, by the rules of the House, is intrusted to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not know debate was closed. Is the Chair making a decision?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to decide the point of order, but if the gentleman desires it the Chair will withhold the decision.

Mr. TRACEY. Do I understand the Chair has made the decision?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not. The Chair has stated the point of order that was made.

Mr. TRACEY. I only wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that a good many gentlemen who have spoken in opposition to the point of order and in defense of the amendment have perhaps not paid quite so much attention to the subject as I have. Therefore I wish to call the particular attention of the Chair to the ruling of Mr. MCCREARY in the last Congress, and also to the fact that this measure makes no provision for fortifications, has nothing whatever to do with fortifications in the proper sense of the word. It is confined entirely to the creation of modern arms. A great many of these arms are used by the Army; the great bulk of the small guns that are being made are so used. The Committee on Military Affairs, according to the rules of the House, certainly has a right to treat in its appropriation bill questions of public defense, and this clearly is within their province as such a question.

I would like to call the attention of the Chair to the fact which I stated in my remarks awhile ago, that the appropriation bills of 1885 and 1886 carried just such appropriations as this. Gentlemen have wandered away from the subject in the discussion of the question; but the Chairman of the committee is more conversant with the rules than I am, and if he gives attention to them and to the precedents heretofore made, I feel confident that the point of order can not stand.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SPRINGER). The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] makes the point of order that the proposed amendment, if reported at all, should be reported in the bill known as the fortifications bill, which, by Rule XI, clause 3, is committed to the Committee on Appropriations; and also that the clause in the second paragraph of this amendment providing for the erection of "necessary structures" comes within the provisions of clause 3, of Rule XXI, as not being a work already authorized by law. The Chair is of opinion that the second clause of this proposition, namely, that which provides for the erection of the necessary structures to enlarge the plant at Watervliet arsenal is not an object heretofore authorized by law. "Additional structure" would cover any kind of a public building which the Department might deem necessary for this purpose. Hence this is not a work previously authorized by law, and that part of the amendment is obnoxious to clause 3, of Rule XXI, and the point of order is sustained.

As to the other point, there might, perhaps, be some doubt as to what bill this should be reported in. The attention of the Chair has been called by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] and others to clause 11 of Rule XI, which provides that all legislation in reference to the military establishment and the public defense, including appropriation for its support, shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The attention of the Chair has also been called to the decision of the gentleman who occupied the chair when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration at the last session of Congress. At that time the Chairman of the committee held that a proposition for the purchase of guns for the use of the Navy was an object previously provided for by law and that the appropriation was a continuation of such work. The present occupant of the chair, had he presided at that time, would doubtless have made a similar decision; but if it were now proposed to appropriate a sum of money for the armament of ships it certainly would not be contended that that was in order upon this bill, although it might be held to be necessary for the public defense. The words "the public defense," in clause 11 of Rule XI, refer to such public defense as is committed to the Army of the United States, and as clause 3 of this rule has committed the subject of fortifications to the Appropriations Committee, all provisions for public defense to be made by fortifications should go to that committee, just as all provisions for the public defense relating to the Navy should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Secretary of War has transmitted to the committee certain letters, among them one from the Chief of Ordnance, to the effect that this appropriation is desired for the armament of fortifications. The Chair will take cognizance of the fact that the proper officials of the Government who have communicated this matter to Congress have stated that the appropriation is for the purpose of providing armament for fortifications, and such being its object, it should be reported in the fortifications bill as provided in clause 3, of Rule II.

For these reasons the Chair sustains the point of order as to both propositions.

The Clerk read as follows:

For targets for artillery practice, $5,000.

RECRUITING SERVICE.

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits from rendezvous to depot, $100,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. At the suggestion of the Secretary of War and by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 472 insert, after the word "hundred," the words "and thirteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, I understood the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to agree awhile ago that the amendment offered by myself should be considered before the committee rose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes; I withdraw my point of order in order that the committee may vote upon the question.

The amendment was read, as follows:

"Provided further, That after advertisement, all the supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation considered."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am satisfied that this is not intended to be in any sense a reflection upon the administration of the War Department; and, while I shall not vote for it, because I have not had any intimation of the views of the Department, I am perfectly willing that the House shall vote upon the question.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Chairman, before the bill is disposed of, I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] a question, so that his answer may go into the RECORD. I see by a query submitted to me on this side that it is claimed that the Quartermaster-General asks $60,000 with which to purchase headstones for Union soldiers. Is that provided for in any other bill?

Mr. RANDALL. It is provided for in the sundry civil bill. I think the appropriation last year was $15,000, though I speak only from memory. The estimate, I think, is $60,000, and the appropriation in the sundry civil bill this year is $85,000. The committee were of opinion that $60,000 was not sufficient, so they increased it $25,000 over the estimate, in order that the friends of deceased soldiers may be able to get stones promptly upon application.

Mr. LAIRD. That is good.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the committee now rise and report this bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10234) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. RANDALL. If members object to the motion, let them vote it down. I promised to make the motion.

The motion was agreed to, there being—ayes 34, noes 32; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. PADDOCK presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Omaha, Nebr., officially signed, remonstrating against the passage of the measure known as the Wilson bill, providing for the imposition of customs duties on property seeking entrance into the United States, even if originating in this country, crossing Canadian territory and returning into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the village trustees of Pierce, Nebr., officially signed, praying for the passage of the so-called Outhwaite bill for the extension of the time of payment by the Union Pacific Railroad Company of its bonded indebtedness to the Government; which was referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for a change of reference of the bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher. It is a bill for the relief of a citizen on account of losses by Indian depredations. It ought to have gone to the Committee on Indian Affairs, but it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher, to report it without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill which has just been reported had been previously reported on Thursday from the Committee on Indian Affairs, which at that time had not jurisdiction, the bill having been referred to the Committee on Claims. The action of the Senate this morning renders it necessary to have unanimous consent to amend the Journal of the 14th by striking out the clause professing to show the report of the bill from the Committee on Indian Affairs, which will be done if there be no objection. The bill reported by the Senator from Massachusetts will be placed on the Calendar.

A. B TYAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further resolutions, concurrent or other, the order of morning business is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to move to take up a bill for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first bill on the Calendar, under Rule VIII, will be first stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1051) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DOLPH. I am in receipt of a personal communication from the State Department calling my attention to the urgency of the passage of a bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, being the bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan. I move to take up the bill for present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7255) for the relief of A. B. Tyan.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to A. B. Tyan the sum of $3,618.80, being the sum found due to the said A. B. Tyan from the United States when the Secretary of State, in obedience to an act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of Victor Bean Voucher, passed March 29, 1886" (private No. 20), audited the expenditures of Victor Bean Voucher, late consul of the United States at Jerusalem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. My attention is called to a fact which I observed in the Committee on Foreign Relations, that there is a mistake in the name of the consul. Instead of being "Bean Voucher" it should be "Beanvoucher," one word. I move that the amendment be made in that particular.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed change in the name will be taken as agreed to, if there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

OHIO CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 63, introduced by my colleague [Mr. PAYNE] some time ago and reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the joint resolution will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. R. 63) making an appropriation to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government, and the Bureau of Agriculture, the Government Printing Office, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the Ohio Centennial, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, from September 4 to October 19, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment, to strike out the whole of the original joint resolution and insert a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment striking out the preamble will be agreed to, and the Chief Clerk will read the amendment.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to strike out all of the joint resolution and to insert:

Whereas the States which comprise the Northwest Territory and the adjacent States will hold at Columbus, Ohio, from September 4 to October 19, 1888, a Centennial Exposition commemorative of the organization of the Northwest Territory, under the ordinance of 1787, in which exposition all the States and Territories of the United States and the General Government have been invited to participate, the object being in said exposition to present a panorama of the nation's resources and present state of progressive development, by an exhibition of the products of agriculture, of the various industries and fine arts; also the results of advancement made in the sciences; the whole illustrating the opportunities secured to and the possibilities which wait upon the citizens of this Republic; and

Whereas the citizens of the State of Ohio and the several States adjacent thereto have made suitable and adequate preparation and arrangements for holding said exposition, and are desirous—and it being fit and proper—that the several Executive Departments of the Government, the Department of Agriculture, the Government Printing Office, the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and Commission of Fish and Fisheries, should participate in said exposition: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the head of each of the several Executive Departments of the Government, the Commissioner of Agriculture, the Government Printing Office, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and Commission of Fish and Fisheries, under the direction of the President of the United States, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to prepare and make suitable exhibits at the said Ohio centennial, to be held at Columbus, beginning on the 4th of September, and closing October 19, 1888.

That to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government, the Government Printing Office, the Department of Agriculture, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in said exposition, to be held as aforesaid, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $40,000, apportioned as follows:

For the War Department, $3,000.
For the Navy Department, $1,000.
For the Treasury Department, $4,000.
For the Interior Department, $10,000.

For the Smithsonian Institution, including the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, $10,000.

That the President may, if in his judgment it shall be deemed necessary and expedient in order to secure the best results with greatest economy, transfer a part of the fund hereby apportioned to one Department or bureau to another Department or bureau. The term bureau wherever used herein shall be construed to include the Agricultural Department and the Smithsonian Institution.

That all articles imported from the Republic of Mexico or the Dominion of Canada for the purpose of being exhibited at said exposition shall be admitted free of duty, subject, however, to such conditions and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may impose and prescribe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment of the committee, including the change of structure from a joint resolution to a bill, striking out the preamble to the joint resolution and the insertion of a new preamble and new bill, will be taken as one question and regarded as agreed to. The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not rise to object to this appropriation, but to call attention to the fact that during this session of the Senate we have been making appropriations for expositions in various parts of the world, one at Melbourne, one at Paris, and several in this country, and this practice is increasing year by year. I suppose the appropriations made this year will amount to very nearly a million of dollars, and I think we ought to call a halt in the matter.

I do not know especially what advantage an exposition at Columbus, Ohio, will be to the people of this country, yet I suppose it will be very gratifying to the people of Ohio. It is a luxury merely for the gratification of the people of the locality.

I do not object to this appropriation, because it is following in the line that has been pursued heretofore; but I rise to emphasize the fact that we are wasting, in my opinion, the public money in these exhibitions all over the country and outside of the country. Some good may possibly be derived from them, but my impression is that they are a very expensive luxury to the people of this country.

Mr. SHERMAN. I differ with my friend from Delaware in regard to the value of these expositions. The amount he states is larger than has been appropriated this year; the total is less than half a million dollars; but the amount is not material. I believe that the amount expended by the United States in aiding expositions is well spent, because all it does in this case is to exhibit its own productions, its own handiwork, the machinery of Government. It pays none of the local expenses at all. It simply exhibits what it chooses of its own productions for different States and bears no part of the local expense.

But whether it did or not, I believe that the expositions, including county fairs, State fairs, and international expositions, have been the most beneficial agencies of civilization in modern times.

The expositions at Paris and London—that at Paris I attended—and the exposition at Philadelphia, I believe, have contributed more to give variety to the productions of the world than any other events in modern times.

Even if we should spend $1,000,000 a year in exhibiting the growth and progress of our country here and in foreign countries it would be money better expended than any other that I know of in our civil list. That is the view I take of it. The Senator from Delaware and I differ about this matter.

I have always felt that the best appropriation that could be made was to exhibit to foreign countries and to our own people the enormous progress in all kinds of productions made by the people of the United States. The most prosperous counties in the State of Ohio and the most enterprising people in the State of Ohio, and probably of every State, are those who take the greatest pains to show the extent and nature of their productions.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill (S. 3182) making an appropriation to enable the several Executive Departments of the Government, and the Bureau of Agriculture, the Government Printing Office, and the Smithsonian Institution, including the National Museum and the Commission of Fish and Fisheries, to participate in the Ohio Centennial, to be held at Columbus, Ohio, from September 4 to October 19, 1888."

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 1051, being the first bill in order on the Calendar under Rule VIII, will be proceeded with.

The bill (S. 1051) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, approved February 18, 1875, and amended March 24, 1876, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize said company to lay tracks and run cars thereon from the intersection of its tracks on M street south with Seventh street east; along Seventh street to G street south; along G street to Third street east; along Third street to E street south; along E street to Canal street; along Canal street to B street south; along B street south to Third street west; along Third street to Missouri avenue; along Missouri avenue to Sixth street west; along Sixth street to B street; north along B street to a point near the Center Market to be named by the commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the said company shall complete the above-mentioned tracks and run cars thereon within one year from the approval of this act, and from the intersection of its tracks on M street south with Second street west; along Second street to its tracks on Canal street: Provided, That said company shall complete the last-mentioned tracks and run cars thereon within two years from the approval of this act. The company is also authorized to extend its tracks and run cars thereon from its track at Seventh and G streets southeast herein mentioned, along G street to Seventeenth street east; along Seventeenth street to E street south; along E street to and beyond the entrance to the Congressional Cemetery at a point to be named by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, after the said streets shall have been improved.

SEC. 2. That the said company may be permitted to place or cause to be placed upon the Anacostia bridge an additional track, and the rails of both tracks shall be of such form as will offer the least obstruction to ordinary traffic, and subject to approval by the commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said company shall also construct at least a single track, with necessary switches and turn-outs, along Harrison street, in Anacostia, to the entrance to the grounds of the German Orphan Asylum, and run cars thereon within six months after laying the track mentioned on said bridge.

SEC. 3. That the said company is also authorized to extend its tracks and run cars thereon from its present terminus on Nichols avenue, near Anacostia, by the way of Nichols avenue to the entrance to the grounds of the Government Hospital for the Insane, and along said avenue and the Livingstone road to the District line.

SEC. 4. That should any part of the track extension herein authorized coincide with portions of any other duly incorporated street railway in the District of Columbia, but one set of tracks shall be used when, on account of the width of the street, or for other sufficient reason, it shall be deemed necessary by the commissioners of the District; and the relative conditions of use and of chartered rights may be adjusted upon terms to be mutually agreed upon between the companies, or, in case of disagreement, by the supreme court of the District of Columbia, on petition filed therein by either party, and on such notice to the other party as the court may order.

SEC. 5. That in the construction of tracks herein specified the pattern of rail used shall be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and in any extensive repairs to the tracks now owned by the company requiring new rails the pattern of rails shall likewise be approved by the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 6. That the company shall place cars of the best construction on said railway, with all modern improvements necessary to the convenience and comfort of passengers, and shall run cars thereon as often as the public convenience may require, in accordance with a time-table or schedule adopted by the company, a copy of which shall be filed with the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and be approved by them.

SEC. 7. That the said Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company shall, on or before the 15th day of January of each year, make a report to Congress of the names of all the stockholders therein and the amount of stock held by each, together with a detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures from whatever source and on whatever account, for the preceding year ending December the 31st, which report shall be verified by affidavit of the president and secretary of said company; and said company shall pay to the District of Columbia, in lieu of taxes upon personal property, including cars, tracks, and motive power for the next ensuing year, 2 per cent. for the first ten years after completion, and thereafter 4 per cent. of its gross earnings upon traffic for the preceding year as shown by said verified statement, which amount shall be payable to the collector of taxes at the times and in the manner that other taxes are now due and payable, and subject to the same penalties on arrears; and the franchise and property of said company, both real and personal, to a sufficient amount, may be seized and sold in satisfaction thereof, as now provided by law for the sale of other property for taxes; and said per cent. of its gross earnings shall be in lieu of all other assessments of personal taxes upon its property used solely and exclusively in the operation and management of said railway. Its real estate shall be taxed as other real estate in the District of Columbia, and the tracks shall not be taxed as real estate: Provided, That whenever the net receipts of said company from its business upon said road shall, for any years, exceed 10 per cent. of the actual cost of such road, then the company shall, under the direction of the said commissioners, reduce the rate of passenger fare to an amount as near as the same can be approximated, so that the net receipts of said company from its business upon such road shall not exceed 10 per cent. of the actual cost for the construction, equipment, and maintenance thereof.

SEC. 9. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. HARRIS. In section 1, line 11, I move to strike out the word "Third" where it occurs in that line, and to insert the word "Fourth;" so as to read:

Along Seventh street to G street south; along G street to Fourth street east; along Fourth street to E street south.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. VEST. I have not a copy of the bill before me, but in listening to its reading I understand that the rails which are to be put down by this company are subject to the approval of the commissioners of the District. But there is no provision that they shall be upon the surface, even with the surface of the streets. In my judgment there should be no charter given to any railroad company which has not such a provision in it. It may be that the commissioners of the District of Columbia will never consent to let any rails be laid here of the T pattern which project above the surface of the street, and which are an absolute nuisance.

I am told by men engaged in the construction of vehicles, the hiring of vehicles, and the repairing of them here, that at a very reasonable estimate $100,000 damage is done yearly in this city to carriages and other vehicles by the unexampled system of railroad rails now used by the railroads on the streets of Washington. Every Senator knows what a nuisance they are.

Would it not be well for the Senate to put a provision in every one of these charters that no rails laid down by any company shall be above the surface of the street? If I had a copy of the bill here I could suggest an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. That is what they claim in reference to all these roads when you talk with them about it. There is a kind of rail which has been used and tested in London and introduced in the city of New York and other large cities; I do not know the name of it, but that is the rail of all others which is necessarily on the surface, even with the surface of the street. If I knew the name of that, and if we could put it in the bill and not leave it to the discretion of the commissioners, to be operated upon by the common assurance of all railroads that they would so lay their tracks, it would accomplish what we all desire; otherwise it will not be accomplished.

Mr. VEST. That is exactly my purpose. I have my reason to distrust——

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator if he knows the name of that rail?

Mr. VEST. I know of no technical name for it. I know there is not a city in the United States where the rails that are used now in the city of Washington would be tolerated for a moment. I live in a new town in the West, and no ordinance can be passed through the city council of Kansas City to permit any such nuisance as we have to-day in the city of Washington. The carriages that go along these streets, some of the narrow streets, as, for instance, from Fifteenth street up to Pennsylvania avenue, near the Treasury building, are ruined, absolutely ruined, and I use the word with its full meaning. No gentleman drives down that street in his vehicle if he can avoid it. There are three tracks laid there. They have rails there that project one inch and a quarter above the surface of the street, and, as a matter of course, when a vehicle undertakes to pass the tracks, going across them, even if it goes directly across, it is jarred and shaken and injured.

I see no objection to putting a plain provision in this charter and every other charter that no rail shall be put down by any corporation in this city that projects above the surface of the street. Recent inventions have made the best rails so that they are embedded in the streets and offer no obstacle, no hinderance to any vehicle that passes along.

I have not the bill before me, and therefore I do not know exactly where the amendment ought to come in.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish the Senator had. I will send him my copy.

I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri and to the Senate that the commissioners of the District of Columbia and, I think I can say with absolute certainty, every member of the Committee on the District of Columbia are quite in sympathy with the views expressed by the Senator from Missouri. I quite agree with him that many of the roads which have been long existing here are tolerably serious obstructions to carriages and ordinary road vehicles.

At the last Congress a select committee, composed of a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, were charged with the duty of investigating the whole question of street railroads in the District of Columbia. They instituted a careful investigation of the subject with a view to requiring every railroad in the District to conform to what might be determined to be the safest, the best, and the most convenient system of street traffic, but failed to report a bill because of the fact that the electric motor was found to be in an active state of development, though not sufficiently developed for the committee to adopt it as a certainty and recommend its adoption by all the railroad companies here. Therefore we agreed to give a reasonable time in order that we might determine whether the electric motor, which we think probably the coming power for street traffic, an opportunity for fuller development. At no distant day, however, I can assure the Senator from Missouri that if the counsels of the Committee on the District of Columbia shall prevail, every street railroad in the city of Washington will have to conform to what may be determined to be the safest, the most convenient, and the best method of street traffic, giving the least inconvenience and presenting the minimum of obstacle to other travel upon the streets.

Mr. DAWES. I do not doubt what the Senator says in reference to the desire and purpose of the Committee on the District of Columbia and of the commissioners of the District, but I know also how easy it is for a railroad corporation to go along as it is going on. I mean they give the assurance to the public and to the committee that they will keep their tracks on a level with the surrounding surface of the streets; but nevertheless they either forget it or omit to know where the difficulties are. There is a kind of rail which, if they were compelled by law to put down, the Committee on the District of Columbia and the commissioners would be relieved of any trouble or importunity whatever; and if the Senator will put into his bill a requirement that that shall be used, he will be certain to accomplish what I am afraid he will not, notwithstanding the honest effort on the part of the committee to accomplish, otherwise.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not know the name of the rail referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts; but the practical suggestion that I intended to make to the Senator from Missouri and to the Senator from Massachusetts and to the Senate was that the interests of the public, so far as that question is concerned, are absolutely secure in the fixed resolve of the commissioners to approve no rail that is going to prove an obstacle to other traffic. The Senator from Missouri need have no fear in reference to that matter, and I shall not antagonize an amendment going to the extent he suggests.

Mr. VEST. I make no question on the Senator's statement, for I know the personnel of the District Committee; but I offer the following amendment to section 5:

Provided, That all rails laid upon the streets of the city of Washington by said company shall be on a level with the surface of the streets and shall not project above the same.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator to modify that by saying "under the authority of this act." This is an amendment, and I do not want to put in anything that will compel them to take up rails already laid.

Mr. VEST. I would be very glad to go to that extent if I could, but I accept the suggestion. I will hail with joy the day when all the rails in the city shall be on a level with the street surface.

Mr. HARRIS. Allow me to assure the Senator that at no distant day he will have an opportunity of voting on a bill requiring every railroad in the District to conform to that policy.

Mr. VEST. I hope to be here to record my vote in favor of it. The destruction of property in this city from year to year now is very great.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 5:

Provided, That all rails laid upon the streets of the city of Washington by said company under the authority of this act shall be on a level with the surface of the streets, and shall not project above the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTORS.

Mr. BROWN. I present an amendment to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I ask that it be read for information and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and also that a copy of it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 11, after the word "collectors," it is proposed to insert:

And including one collector for the internal-revenue district of Georgia and Florida, at $5,000, and two assistant collectors, at $3,000 each.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the duplicate copy referred to the Committee on Finance, if there be no objection.

SHOSHONE AND BANNOCK INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 1466, Senate bill 2266.

Mr. COCKRELL. We shall get to it if it is on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. If it is on the Calendar regularly, I think we shall reach it in a short time.

Mr. DAWES. I should agree to that if I were not afraid of a threatened motion to adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator will withhold that threat and the motion, too.

Mr. COCKRELL. We shall vote down the motion to adjourn.

Mr. DAWES. If you will agree to do that, very well. I ask, however, for the consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2266) to accept and ratify an agreement made with the Shoshone and Bannock Indians, for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of a portion of the Fort Hall reservation, in the Territory of Idaho, for the purposes of a town-site, and for the grant of a right of way through said reservation to the Utah and Northern Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, in section 11, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," at the end of line 16, to insert:

Except that at and near its station at Pocatello, in Idaho Territory, said railway company is granted for its use for station grounds, depot buildings, shops, tracks, side-tracks, turn-outs, yards, and for water purposes, not to exceed 150 acres, as shown by maps and plats of the definite location thereof; and said company shall pay for said 150 acres, in addition to the $8 per acre provided in said agreement, a further sum equal to the average appraisal of each acre of town lots in the proposed town site of Pocatello outside of said 150 acres provided for in section 4 of this act, said $8 per acre to be paid within one year from the passage of this act, and said additional sum immediately upon the completion of the appraisement aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move to strike out the seventeenth section, which is altogether unnecessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 17, as follows:

SEC. 17. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WINNEBAGO RESERVATION IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8372) authorizing the sale of a portion of the Winnebago reservation in Nebraska, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Massachusetts from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill just reported be now considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Senator from Nebraska to allow the bill to go over to to-morrow. I wish to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Has the Senator his amendment ready to offer now?

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not expect the bill to come up this morning, and there has not been time enough to prepare an amendment since the bill was reported.

Mr. PADDOCK. The bill was recommended by the Indian Office; it passed the House committee unanimously, and passed the House. It is demanded by the Indians themselves.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no earthly objection to the bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can only proceed by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no earthly objection to this bill, but there are provisions in reference to another matter, something of the same nature, that I should like to add to this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that there will come up a bill to which the amendment to which he alludes is more germane, and if he will await his opportunity he will have a chance to move his amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. After that statement from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs I will yield and avail myself of some other opportunity for offering the amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I will only say for myself that the Senator will have an opportunity on another bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF NEVADA.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next order of business on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator reporting that bill [Mr. STEWART] is not here, and there is a minority report. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under Rule IX, or without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. Without prejudice, as the Senator from Nevada is absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT ACCOUNTS.

The bill (S. 2403) to adjust the accounts of the Department of Agriculture was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the substance of this bill was incorporated in the agricultural appropriation bill as an amendment. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations the bill will be passed over, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over informally.

WILLIAM M. KEIGHTLEY.

The bill (S. 111) for the relief of William M. Keightley was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments: In line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "one;" after the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ninety" and insert "fifty;" after the word "dollars" to strike out "and thirty-three cents that;" in line 7, after the word "being," to strike out "the amount of commissions earned and disallowed and of," and insert "amount of;" and in line 8, after "clerk-hire," to strike out "and rent;" so as to make the bill read:

Keightley, postmaster at Durango, Colo., the sum of $1,350, being amount of clerk-hire paid by him from January 4, 1881, to March 31, 1882, during which period said office was in the fourth class; and a sum sufficient to pay said amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT PARKVILLE, MO.

The bill (S. 1404) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River and to establish it as a post-route was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 5, before the word "court," to strike out "district" and insert "circuit;" so as to make the section read:

That said bridge shall not interfere with the free navigation of said river beyond what may be necessary to carry into effect the rights and privileges herein granted; and in case of any litigation arising therefrom such litigation may be tried and determined by any circuit court of the United States whose jurisdiction embraces either terminus of said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "three," and after "hundred" to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

Nor shall the span of said bridge be less than 350 feet in length, and the piers thereof shall be parallel with the current of the river. The main span shall be over the channel of the river and not less than 250 feet in length.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 14, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two," and after the word "hundred" to strike out "and twenty-five;" so as to read:

In case the said company shall elect to construct said bridge as a draw-bridge, the same shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel with spans not less than 200 feet in length in the clear on each side of the pivot piers, and the next adjoining spans to the draw shall not be less than 100 feet, and the said span shall not be less than 30 feet above low-water mark, and not less than 10 feet above extreme high-water mark, measuring from the bottom chord of said bridge; and the piers of said bridge shall be parallel with the current of the river where said bridge may be erected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 13, before the word "said," to strike out "therefrom," and in the same line, before the word "proceed," to insert "them;" so as to read:

Which said drawings and other information aforesaid shall be examined by him, and if he shall approve the same, he shall so notify the said railway company of such approval, and said company may then proceed to the erection of said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, line 21, after the word "authorized," to insert "and all expense attending any such changes shall be paid by the company;" so as to read:

The said railway company may, at any time, make any alterations deemed advisable to be made in said bridge, but must first submit such proposed alterations to the Secretary of War, and his approval shall be first had before they shall be authorized; and all expense attending any such changes shall be paid by the company.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 7, after the words "bridge as," to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Secretary of War," and in line 11, after the words "judgment of," to strike out "Congress" and insert "the Secretary of War;" so as to make the section read:

There shall be displayed on said bridge from sunset to sunrise such lights and signals as may be directed by the Secretary of War. And such changes may be made from time to time in the structure of said bridge as the Secretary of War may direct at the expense of said railway, in order the more effectually to preserve the free navigation of said river; or the said structure shall be altogether removed, if, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, the public good may require such removal, and without expense or charge to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 8. That this act shall be null and void unless actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of this act being approved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 1, to add:

And if tolls shall be charged for the passage of wagons or other vehicles, or of animals and foot-passengers, the rates thereof may be fixed by the Secretary of War, on appeal to him for that purpose, and no higher charges shall be made than shall be established by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 4, to add:

And all expenses attending such changes shall be paid by the company constructing said bridge; or, if the Secretary of War shall require any change in said bridge or the entire removal of the same after its completion, the same shall be at the cost of the company, and if such changes or removal shall not be made when required, the Secretary of War may make such changes or removal, and cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States in any circuit court of the United States in whose jurisdiction any part of said bridge is located to recover from the company or persons owning said bridge the amount which may be expended by the United States in such alterations or removal.

The amendment was agreed to.

PUBLIC PARK AT ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA.

The bill (S. 2946) granting the use of certain lands to the city of St. Augustine, Fla., for a public park, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN FINN.

The bill (S. 489) for the relief of John Finn was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that in October, 1863, John Finn and William P. Milliken were partners in trade, engaged in the purchase of horses and mules for the Government, under the firm name of John Finn and Company, and during the latter part of the year 1866 Milliken withdrew from the firm and conveyed and relinquished to Finn all of his interest therein by way of settlement and adjustment of the partnership affairs and accounts of such firm, in order to dissolve the same, whereby Finn became, and is now, the sole owner of the claim for the horses and mules herein mentioned; that Finn, on or about the 10th of October, 1863, furnished to the Government twenty-four horses and seventy-eight mules, which were inspected and accepted by a regularly appointed deputy inspector of the Army, according to the regulations, practice, or custom of the Quartermaster's Department at St. Louis, Mo., at that time, and for which he has not received any pay; that Finn has prosecuted his claim before the Quartermaster-General, who dismissed the same for want of jurisdiction, and he thereafter appealed to Congress for relief, and his claim was, by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, referred to the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman act, where, upon hearing, the claim was dismissed for a want of jurisdiction; and he then procured and adduced newly-discovered evidence and applied for a rehearing before the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, which rehearing was granted and the claim transmitted to the Court of Claims under section 1063 of the Revised Statutes, and the court heard the case and found the facts for the claimant, but by conclusions of law again dismissed the petition for want of jurisdiction. Finn then appealed from the judgment of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the judgment of the court below was affirmed; and that it has been demonstrated at great expense and delay that neither the executive department nor the courts have jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim.

The bill therefore proposes that the claim of John Finn, of St. Louis, Mo., for the value of twenty-four horses and seventy-eight mules, with interest, be referred to the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to hear, determine, and allow the same; and, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court that the horses and mules were duly inspected and accepted as suitable for the service for which they were intended by an officer of the United States under the regulations, practice, or custom in force in, and observed by the Quartermaster's Department at St. Louis, Mo., in the purchase of horses and mules for the Government at the time the claim originated, the court shall render judgment for the agreed price of the horses and mules, with legal interest from the date the said claim first accrued.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 18, after the word "contrary," to strike out:

And also without regard to the restrictions as to the assignment and transfer of any claim upon the United States or part, share, or interest therein, as contained in section 3477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That said court shall hear and determine said claim, notwithstanding the bar of any statute of limitation to the contrary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I see the committee recommend another amendment in lines 15 and 16. In the report of the committee it is said:

The committee is also of the opinion that the delay of the claimant in prosecuting his case, until after the same was barred by the statute of limitations, ought to preclude him from a recovery of interest against the Government. They therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out of the fifteenth and sixteenth lines the following words: "with legal interest from the date the said claim first accrued."

That amendment is an amendment offered by the committee. I wish the Senate to disagree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). The amendment will be reported.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know what the general rule of the Senate has been in regard to allowing interest upon all claims. The rule has been almost universal, I believe, against the allowance of interest. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who represents the Committee on Claims, can say what that rule is. This case, I think, ought to be an exception; but the committee did not feel justified in reporting it as an exception, but made that recommendation. The Senator who reported the bill [Mr. SPOONER] is not here, and I would not want to take any advantage of his absence. I do not know how the committee stood upon the question, and if it could be done fairly and justly I would like to have the amendment disagreed to. The Senator from Arkansas can state what the report is.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This report was made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. In the absence of that Senator I think it better to allow the bill to pass as it came from the committee. If there is a committee of conference the Senator from Missouri can present such reasons as satisfy him that an exception ought to be made and the amendment of the committee not adopted. It can be easily taken care of by that means. I prefer that that course should be taken, and I hope that the Senator from Missouri will agree to let that course be taken.

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course I can not let the bill go over under the circumstances. If the Senate adheres to the action of the committee, very well. I would rather have the bill passed in that way than not passed at all.

Mr. FRYE. Is the Senator from Missouri asking that interest may be allowed on a claim?

Mr. COCKRELL. I say this seems to be an exceptional case. I admit the rule all the time is against interest.

Mr. FRYE. I have seen thousands of cases which were claimed to be exceptional, and yet the rule was adhered to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Senate act.

Mr. PASCO. I will say that the committee on this matter was unanimous that the amendments ought to be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 15, after the word "mules," it is proposed to strike out "with legal interest from the date the said claim first accrued."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The preamble will be agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. The preamble should be disagreed to, according to the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the preamble will be stricken out. The report does not mention the preamble. If there be no objection, however, the preamble will be stricken out. The Chair hears none, and it is stricken out.

SURETIES OF WILLIAM J. STOKES.

Stokes, as pension agent at Nashville, Tenn., their heirs, executors, and administrators from all liability to the United States upon the bond.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OAKLAND, CAL.

The bill (S. 1553) to provide for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a public building at Oakland, in the State of California, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported an amendment, in line 4, after the word "purchase," to insert "acquire by condemnation or otherwise procure;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, acquire by condemnation, or otherwise procure a site for, and cause to be erected thereon, a suitable building for post-office and other Government purposes, at Oakland, in the State of California. The plans, specifications, and full estimates for said building shall be previously made and approved according to law, and shall not exceed, for the site and building complete, the sum of $250,000: Provided, The site shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and no money appropriated for this purpose shall be available until a valid title to the site for said building shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of California shall have ceded to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN FLETCHER.

The bill (S. 2265) for the relief of acting assistant surgeons of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. What was done with Order of Business 1363?

Mr. HARRIS. Order of Business 1363 is next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order of Business 1363, Senate bill 1331, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1331) for the relief of John Fletcher.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who reported the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be informally passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A House bill, which is an exact copy of the Senate bill, has been reported to-day.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be pursued if there be no objection.

ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS OF THE ARMY.

The bill (S. 2265) for the relief of acting assisting surgeons of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to that bill. Let it go to the other Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR ALMA, WIS.

The bill (S. 2816) to authorize the construction of a bridge for railway purposes across the Mississippi River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota, to be located north of and in the vicinity of the city of Alma, Wis., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 2, line 5, after the words "less than," to strike out "one hundred and sixty" and insert "two hundred;" and in line 6, after the words "draw and," to strike out—

The next adjoining spans of said bridge on either side of said draw-span shall give a clear width of water way of not less than 247 feet, and each of the other spans of said bridge shall give a clear width of water way of not less than 146 feet: Provided, That the span of said bridge over the west channel of said river shall give a clear width of water way of not less than 247 feet, and all spans of said bridge shall not be less than 26 feet above low-water mark and not less than 12 feet above extreme high-water mark, measured to the bottom chord of the bridge;

And insert:

In addition to said draw openings shall have one or more fixed channel-spans, each having not less than 350 feet clear channel-way, and every part of the superstructure of said bridge shall give a clear head-room of not less than 19 feet above high-water mark: Provided, That all spans shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodation to the river traffic, and a draw opening shall, if practicable, be located next or near shore: Provided, also, That if the physical characteristics of the locality so require, and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the lengths of the fixed spans or the number of draw openings may be reduced: Provided, also, That for every two adjacent openings of 200 feet each, one draw opening of 300 feet may be substituted if the interests of navigation be not injured thereby:

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said bridge shall be built with a draw, so as not to impede the navigation of said river; said draw shall be a pivot-draw, over the channel of said river usually navigated, near the Wisconsin shore, and giving a clear width of water way of not less than 200 feet on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw, and in addition to said draw openings shall have one or more fixed channel-spans, each having not less than 350 feet clear channel-way, and every part of the superstructure of said bridge shall give a clear head-room of not less than 10 feet above high-water mark: Provided, That all spans shall be so located as to afford the greatest possible accommodation to the river traffic, and a draw opening shall, if practicable, be located next or near shore: Provided, also, That if the physical characteristics of the locality so require, and the interests of navigation be not injured thereby, the lengths of the fixed spans or the number of draw openings may be reduced: Provided, also, That for every two adjacent openings of 200 feet each, one draw opening of 300 feet may be substituted if the interests of navigation be not injured thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 35, after the words "as the," to strike out "Secretary of War" and insert "Light-House Board;" so as to read:

Provided, That said draw shall always be opened promptly upon reasonable signal, and said corporation shall maintain at its own expense, from sunset to sunrise, such lights or other signals on said bridge as the Light-House Board shall prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 29, after the word "thereof," to insert "or to remove the same entirely;" so as to read:

And provided, also, That if said bridge when constructed shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, be a substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river, the Secretary shall require said corporation to change the construction thereof, or to remove the same entirely, so as to avoid any serious and substantial obstruction to the navigation of said river, at the expense of the owners of said bridge.

SEACOAST DEFENSES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 62) to provide for fortifications and other seacoast defenses.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that will be informally laid aside for a little while until we dispose of a few more bills on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no objection to the bill being laid aside if we are to proceed with the Calendar. I do not know what opposition will be made to the fortification bill, but I hardly feel like pressing it to a vote in the condition the Senate is to-day. It may be informally laid aside, to be called up at pleasure.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it retain its place as unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that it be postponed until Monday next. We are not going to have a full Senate before that time. If agreeable to the Senator from Oregon, I ask that it be regarded as the unfinished business on Monday next.

Mr. DOLPH. I suppose that it is quite possible that some Senator may be ready to address the Senate upon the bill before that time. I would prefer that it be informally laid aside.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be laid aside, then, from day to day informally until the contingency happens which the Senator suggests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the unfinished business will be informally laid aside.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR ALMA, WIS.

SEC. 9. That this act shall be null and void, if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year, and completed within three years, from the date thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE AT GUNTERSVILLE, ALA.

The bill (S. 2911) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Tennessee River at or near Guntersville, Ala., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be indefinitely postponed if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2875) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of certain settlers on public lands, and to provide for the repayment of certain fees, purchase-money, and commissions, paid on void entries of public lands," approved June 16, 1880.

"SEC. 2. In all cases where homestead, pre-emption, or timber-culture, or desert-land entries or other entries of public lands have heretofore or shall hereafter be canceled for conflict, or where, from any cause, the entry has been erroneously allowed and can not be confirmed, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be repaid to the person who made such entry, or to his heirs or assigns, the fees and commissions, amount of purchase-money, and excess paid upon the same, upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said land, whenever such entry shall have been duly canceled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and in all cases where parties have paid double minimum price for land which has afterwards been found not to be within the limits of a railroad land grant, the excess of $1.25 per acre shall in like manner be repaid to the purchaser thereof or to the heirs or assigns: Provided, That in all cases of pre-emption or commuted homestead entries, in which from any cause the patent can not be issued, and in which it shall be satisfactorily shown that the entry was made in good faith and without fraud, and was paid for with the money of a third party acting in good faith and without fraud, and that he has not been reimbursed therefor, the money shall be refunded to such third party on the cancellation of the entry, upon the surrender of the duplicate receipt and the execution by him of a proper relinquishment of all claims to said lands."

So as to make the bill read:

French, deceased, late of Nashville, Tenn., be, and are hereby, authorized to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of the net proceeds of 230 bales of cotton, taken at Jonesborough, Ga., in September, 1864, by General William G. Le Due, by order of General Sherman, and turned over to the Treasury agent, and by him sold and the proceeds paid into the Treasury of the United States; and for this purpose jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine and render judgment in conformity with the rights of the respective parties: Provided, That an appeal shall lie in said cause from said court to the Supreme Court as in other cases.

DISTRIBUTION OF "FISH AND FISHERIES."

The next business on the Calendar was the House concurrent resolution for the correction of an error made in the distribution of a document known as "Fish and Fisheries," and the Senate proceeded to its consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 27, 1888.

Whereas it appears by the report made to the House of Representatives from the Committee on Printing, February 16, 1888, that there are in the hands of the Public Printer 507 sets of the document known as "Fish and Fisheries," held by him for sale; and

Whereas it also appears by said report that in prorating these books about the 1st of February, 1886, a mistake was made by prorating 6,000 copies instead of 5,000 copies, the actual number printed for the House. This mistake credited each member with 3 more sets of this book than they were entitled to receive, making the folding-room about 1,000 sets short of the number credited. As the mistake was not discovered for nearly eighteen months after, and very many members had in the mean time drawn the number thus placed to their credit, it was too late to fully correct the error. After it was discovered, however, 3 sets were deducted from the accounts of members who had that number still remaining to their credit, and where only 1 or 2 sets were to the credit of members the account was canceled. On account of this error there are 437 sets of this book still to the credit of members and ex-members which can not be furnished until some provision is made to supply the folding-room with that quantity of them:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be directed to withhold from sale and turn over to the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives 437 copies of the document known as "Fish and Fisheries," the same to be used in making good to the respective members of Congress entitled thereto under the joint resolution passed July 21, 1882, the deficiency occurring to them by reason of the mistake made in the prorating and distribution of such documents under said resolution.

The resolution was concurred in.

The preamble was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT FORT SMITH, ARK.

The bill (S. 2823) to authorize the building of a railroad bridge at Fort Smith, Ark., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, line 3, after the words "for the," to insert "Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company;" so as to read:

That it shall be lawful for the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Arkansas, to construct and maintain a bridge, and approaches thereto, over the Arkansas River, at a point on said river at or near the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and to lay on and over said bridge a railroad track or tracks for the more perfect connection of any railroad or railroads that are or shall hereafter be constructed to the said river, on either or both sides thereof, at or opposite said point, under the limitations and conditions hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 19, after the word "war," to strike out "as to railway trains; and as to wagons, vehicles, animals, and foot-passengers, such rates as may be provided by the laws of Arkansas;" so as to read:

Said bridge shall be constructed to provide for the passage of railway trains, and, at the option of the builders and owners thereof, may be used for the passage of wagons and vehicles of all kinds, for the transit of animals of all kinds, and for foot-passengers for such reasonable rates of toll as may be approved, from time to time, by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 7:

And if any litigation shall arise in regard to said bridge, the same shall be had in the circuit court of the United States in whose jurisdiction the bridge or any part thereof is located.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] who I see reported the bill with this amendment, whether it is intended by the amendment to give the circuit court of the United States exclusive jurisdiction of any suit or controversy that may arise in regard to the bridge, as it might respect a suit for damages by a traveler, or by a freighter on account of the insufficiency of the bridge which led to the destruction of his property, or whether that phrase is only intended to cover questions of litigation regarding the bridge being an obstruction to navigation?

Mr. VEST. The latter construction was the intention of the committee, although I suppose the language might include the former.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I venture to suggest the doubt whether it would be wise to compel every private person who might have any litigation with the company, into which the bridge should be drawn as an element, to sue in the circuit court of the United States.

Mr. VEST. It was not the intention of the committee to oust the jurisdiction of the State courts. I have no objection to a change in the verbiage. The idea of the committee was to give jurisdiction to the United States court as to any litigation which arose out of the insufficient construction of the bridge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So far as anything arising under this proposed act is concerned, the laws of the United States would give the circuit court jurisdiction without the amendment, because the question would arise under a law of the United States, and it is perfectly right that it should be in the circuit court, so far as any great and main question is concerned regarding the existence of the bridge, etc.; but to have language which would raise a question as to a private person having a controversy of any kind, as a contract for building it, for instance, which would compel him to sue in the United States circuit court rather than in a State court, I should think would be going too far. It would strike me so.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to limiting the clause, for it might be susceptible to that construction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the river between two States?

Mr. VEST. The bridge is all in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. One abutment of the bridge may possibly be in the Indian country. At one point in the town, crossing directly over the Arkansas River, it would go into the Indian country. The bridge can be built so that both ends may be in the State of Arkansas, or it may be built so that one abutment may be in the Indian country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not see that that would really make any difference after all, so far as anything arising under this act, the authority to build, and how it was built, is concerned. I suggest that the amendment is unnecessary, because any litigation growing out of the construction of the bridge would clearly arise under this act of Congress and in conformity with it. So far as respects private interests of contractors and people engaged in traffic across the bridge, in whatever form, I do not see that the circuit court of the United States ought to be given exclusive jurisdiction; for I repeat, all questions that arise under this or any other law of Congress, or that arise under our general jurisdiction laws about citizenship, must go to the circuit court of the United States. What I am afraid of is, that this language would compel mere private persons having controversies with the company to go into the circuit court.

Mr. VEST. A suit might be instituted in the State court against this corporation by a citizen of Arkansas which would arise out of questions coming from this act. Then, of course, if the statute of the United States became involved the case could be removed, and would be removed to the United States court; but as to the original jurisdiction, it might be commenced in the State court. That fact afterwards appearing would amount to a change of venue. It would have to go then to the United States tribunal.

The idea of the committee was to put in the general provision which we have in all these bills, that as to any question growing out of the insufficient construction of the bridge, its impeding navigation, etc., the United States circuit court within whose jurisdiction it was should take charge of the matter. It might be that the language is a little too broad, but that was the idea the committee had.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much afraid of it. I wish the language could be put in some way so as not to compel mere ordinary litigations between private parties regarding the bridge to be brought into the circuit court of the United States.

Mr. VEST. Let the Senator from Vermont make a suggestion, and I have no doubt we can arrange that matter. I agree with him about it. I confess I did not think of that aspect of it when I drew the amendment. I have stated what my idea was about it. I have no objection to changing the phraseology.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont suggest an amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I would suggest to have it read "under the provisions of this act," and that will cover all the questions of obstruction. It might be better to save the phrase, because if it should strike two separate jurisdictions, like Arkansas and the Indian Territory, the question as to whether the case should be brought in the judicial tribunal on one side of the river or the other might present a difficulty. So I would suggest, after the word "arise," to insert the words "under the provisions of this act."

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will save the question of Territorial difficulty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 4 of section 7 as proposed to be amended, after the word "arise," insert the words "under the provisions of this act;" so as to read:

And if any litigation shall arise under the provisions of this act in regard to said bridge, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest another amendment at the foot of page 4 at the end of section 5, being the same one that in some former bills we agreed to in regard to changes in the plan of the construction of the bridge. This bill follows the old form, that the change "shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War," but we have recently thought it necessary and safe to insert the additional provision that no such change shall be made until it is approved by the Secretary of War, as some of the companies have gone on in some instances that I have known of and proceeded to make their change in a different way, trusting to luck to get the approval of the Secretary of War afterwards, and when he said he doubted, and so on, they would say "We are very sorry; we thought you would approve; but the bridge is done, and we can not do anything about it now." So I think it ought to be limited to the changes in plan of construction heretofore carried into execution until they are approved, so that they must stop it.

Mr. VEST. That is all right. I have no objection to the amendment suggested.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to add after the word "War," at the end of section 5, the words:

And no such change shall be made until such approval has been obtained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN FLETCHER.

Mr. DAWES. In my absence the bill (S. 1331) for the relief of John Fletcher was passed over. I move to take up that bill now. It will take but a moment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I move that, instead of the Senate bill, House bill 128, reported this morning, which is identical with it, may be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the House bill will be reported and considered in lieu of the Senate bill.

The bill (H. R. 128) for the relief of John Fletcher was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John Fletcher, of Franklin, Ind., $3,450, for loss of cattle, while in the employment of the United States, in the year 1870, by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no report, the clerks inform the Chair.

Mr. DAWES. There is a report made to the House of Representatives upon the House bill which has been made to the Senate on two separate occasions unanimously, and the same report has been adopted. There was no report made with this bill at this session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there any Indian fund out of which the claim is payable?

Mr. DAWES. No, there is no Indian fund out of which the money can be paid. These Indians are supported out of the Treasury now, so that if it should be confined to the Indian fund nothing would come of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no fund applicable to that purpose?

Mr. DAWES. No, there is no fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator state briefly what were the circumstances?

Mr. DAWES. This man was employed under contract with the Government to supply cattle for the Indians at the Cheyenne and Arapaho agency. In taking them to the agency, after they were got upon the reservation, but before they reached the agency, a raid was made by some Indians, who could not be controlled, upon the cattle he had there, and this amount of cattle was captured by them.

This matter was before the Senate at two separate sessions, and the bill passed the Senate unanimously. It has been reported unanimously twice this session by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and has passed the House of Representatives also.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Indians ate the cattle?

Mr. DAWES. The Indians consumed the cattle, but this man lost them.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not rise to object to the consideration of the bill, but I should like to have the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs explain how it is that this claim for Indian depredations is singled out of the hundreds of claims that are pending in the Senate, numbers of which have been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. A great many bills for what may be called Indian depredations have been referred, session after session, to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and a good many more to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims at this session found themselves so overwhelmed with the matter that they could not cope with it, and they instructed a subcommittee, after conference with the Committee on Indian Affairs, to submit to the Senate a resolution for a special committee to take care of the subject. That resolution was reported to the Senate by the Senator's colleague, and remains pending in the Senate.

This claim was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs to be somewhat different from the others in the fact that this was a man in the employ of the Government taking these cattle under contract with the Government to these very Indians, and he had got the cattle upon the reservation, and on their way to the agency, when they were raided upon by these Indians and captured. It is somewhat different from the general question of Indian depredation claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did not the Indians appropriate them to the same purpose that they would have been appropriated to if they had been delivered?

Mr. DAWES. Yes, they appropriated them to the same purpose, but the loss was taken out of this poor fellow who had the cattle driving them there. The cattle were not accounted for, and he could not get pay for cattle he did not deliver to the agency.

Mr. DOLPH. Under the same principle, whenever there is a raid made by Indians from a reservation into the surrounding country and horses are stolen or cattle taken and eaten, they are appropriated to the same purpose for which the beef that is bought by the Government to feed them is appropriated.

Mr. DAWES. There is no doubt about that, but it is taking private property to feed the Indians when the Government is under treaty obligations to feed them itself. The Government made a contract with this man that if he would deliver to the agency these cattle it would pay him for them. On his way to the agency and after he got within the jurisdiction of the agent himself, the Indians destroyed his cattle before they were accounted for.

Mr. DOLPH. I can not see that this is a stronger case than the 4,500 cases which are now pending for payment by the Government for Indian depredations.

Mr. DAWES. This case has one advantage, if no other, over those. It has been reported favorably by this committee in two previous Congresses, and passed the Senate unanimously, as it has now passed the House of Representatives unanimously; and it has been to some extent adjudicated upon as a fair and proper claim against the Government (whether the other claims were or not), because the Government ought to have taken care of these cattle after it had got them upon the reservation.

Mr. DOLPH. I simply desire to say that I think it is a burning shame that claimants have been for the last twenty-five or thirty years waiting for the Government to take action upon their claims for Indian depredations. I think the Government is under a legal obligation to pay for all depredations committed before 1860. There has been a provision of law all the while, before 1860 and since, for the presentation of all such claims to the Secretary of the Interior, for the auditing of the claims by him, and for a report by the Secretary to Congress. The reports of the Secretary of the Interior are before Congress. Congress has all the information that has been obtained by the Secretary of the Interior, together with the findings of facts in the cases; and then numerous bills, bills of a general character and bills for private relief, have been introduced into both branches of Congress and referred to the respective committees.

I admit that the present claim has this advantage, that the Committee on Indian Affairs has taken it up, and reported it favorably; but upon its merits it has no advantage over the four thousand five hundred claims now pending and waiting to be paid; and I hope the committee and Congress will find time to act upon those claims.

Mr. DAWES. I agree with the Senator that it is a shame that these outstanding claims are left to be knocking at the door of Congress and get no hearing. Many of them are just claims which ought to be paid.

Some of them in the nature of the case are exaggerated and swollen, and some of them are groundless. There is a vast number of them, involving a very large charge upon the Treasury.

From time to time the Committee on Appropriations, pressed with these claims to be put upon their bills, have devised ways to eliminate those that ought to be paid out of the others, and as yet they have failed. The proposition which came from the Committee on Claims, and had the co-operation of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to constitute a committee here whose sole business it should be to sift out these claims and report such as ought to be paid, should be adopted by the Senate. Upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his report, just such a committee was created in the House of Representatives at the beginning of this session, but they have somehow or other been appalled, and like all other committees have gone to work picking out here and there those claims which have had the greatest pressure behind them, but no general disposition of the claims has been made.

I do not think the Committee on Indian Affairs is very much to blame. The Committee on Indian Affairs is a pretty industrious committee with other matters. These are claims, and the Committee on Indian Affairs ought not to be burdened with them this much. That committee will bear me out in saying that if they undertook to pass upon these claims they could not do anything else.

I have not a word to say in contravention of what the Senator from Oregon has said. Nobody upon any of these committees who has seen the character of these claims and the appalling amount which has been rolling up from year to year, and the condition and need of many of the claimants, will hesitate a moment in saying that it is a shame they are left undisposed of.

This claim has certain elements which I have tried to point out, in addition to the fact that it has had the indorsement of two or three committees and of the Senate on two or three occasions.

Mr. DOLPH. It seems that we are all in favor of paying these claims. As far as I know, everybody agrees that they should be paid. We are constantly passing bills for private relief and passing bills of a general character for the adjudication of claims against the Government. It seems very strange that these just claims, which have been for over a quarter of a century awaiting the action of Congress for their payment, and which have been adjudicated over and over again by the Secretary of the Interior, can not be paid. I can not say, I will not undertake to say, where the blame lies, but it seems to me that there ought to be some action taken, either by the passage of a general bill, or a committee should be appointed to take up these cases one by one and pass upon them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think this case is distinguishable from the great mass of the Indian depredation claims, as stated by the chairman of the committee, and so I can vote for it without committing myself to the great mass of claims, some of which, presumably, are good ones and just ones, and some of which are bad ones, and others of which are greatly exaggerated. But I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the possible value, not on this bill, but on two others that I see he has reported and are on the Calendar, concerning the Shoshones, if they are the Indians concerned—Order of Business 1465——

Mr. DAWES. This case relates to the Cheyennes and Arapahoes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, I understood you to say Shoshones. Then my remarks would not apply. I was going to suggest that if it was a taking by the Shoshones, it might be well in paying them for their property, as it is proposed apparently by these bills to pay for some of their land, they should be taught the propriety of peace and good behavior by taking the amount of the depredation out of the price of their land.

Mr. DAWES. I agree, if it should happen that the depredators were the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I misunderstood the Senator in respect of the name of the tribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. 1331) for the relief of John Fletcher will be indefinitely postponed, if there be no objection.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2531) to amend section 993 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the District of Columbia, so as to make Inauguration Day a holiday within said District; and

An act (S. 1948) to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FRYE. Inquiries have been made of me this morning as to the time when I proposed to call up the river and harbor bill. I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

WILLIAM T. CRUMP.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Alabama to yield to me just one moment, that I may call the attention of the Senate to the condition of the bill (S. 353) for the relief of William T. Crump. I find that it is on the Calendar favorably reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. He presented with the bill at the time it was reported a written report which was subsequently withdrawn with the understanding that the views of the minority were to be submitted and printed at the same time. In case of my absence, I desire that no action may be taken on that bill until those reports are presented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Whenever the views of the minority are filed they can be printed with the report of the majority.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes, sir; but my purpose is to give notice to the Senate that the written reports, favorable and unfavorable, to the bill will be presented before there is any action taken on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Alabama that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope that the Senator from Alabama will withhold his motion and allow the next two bills on the Calendar, two House bills which are very unimportant bills, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, Order of Business 1383 and 1384, to be taken up.

Mr. MORGAN. I will give way to those two bills.

GENERAL G. CLUSERET.

The bill (H. R. 474) for the relief of General G. Cluseret was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment, in lines 8, 9, and 10, to strike out "rendered to the Department of State in carrying out a circular instruction of that Department of May 23, 1880," and to insert "and expenses in procuring information and specimens of benefit to the United States and;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, upon vouchers duly approved by the Secretary of State, the sum of $500, to be immediately available, to pay to General G. Cluseret for services and expenses in procuring information and specimens of benefit to the United States and relative to statistical information in the Turkish dominions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JOHN P. HAGEMAN.

The bill (H. R. 4691) for the relief of John P. Hageman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to restore a certain Mexican bond belonging to John P. Hageman, of Kingston, Ulster County, New York, for the sum of $50, and numbered 298, due July 4, 1885, and signed by Josie M. Carvijal, as governor of Tamaulipas and San Luis Potosi, now in the custody of the Department of State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report in that case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. DOLPH May 23, 1888:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4691) for the relief of John P. Hageman, having had the same under consideration, respectfully report:

The committee adopt the report made by Mr. HITT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House at the present session of Congress, which is as follows:

"The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom was referred House bill 4691, beg leave to report:

"That John P. Hageman, of Kingston, Ulster County, New York, in 1865, did certain advertising in his newspaper, the Rondout Courier, for the Mexican Government, amounting to $50, which was not paid except by the delivery to him, by the duly authorized agent of the Mexican Government, of a bond for $50, on which nothing was or has been paid. In 1870 Mr. Hageman submitted to the United States and Mexican Claims Commission his claim for this amount, $50, and filed this bond, with the papers, before the commission. Owing to the fact that he failed to produce proof of his citizenship or of the authority of the parties who made and executed the obligation, the claim was dismissed by the umpire February 3, 1874. The Government of the United States has nothing whatever to do with the payment of this bond, which is one of a series known as the Corlies-Carbajal bonds, issued by the Mexican Government in 1865. Our State Department has received information, and caused it to be made public through the newspapers, that the Mexican Government has recently provided for their redemption. In reply to Mr. Hageman's inquiry, the Secretary of State said, December 17, 1886:

"'Your bond is apparently one of these genuine bonds. But before you can take any steps looking to the redemption of that bond, as provided by the Mexican Government, you will have to procure an act of Congress authorizing this Department to return to you the bond in question. It being a part of the record of that Claims Commission, can not be removed therefrom except upon such permission.'

"In reply to an inquiry from this committee, the Secretary says:

"'In view of the precedents set by Congress in acts authorizing the surrender to their owners of original papers which have formed a part of the files of the said Claims Commission, I see no reason to object to this bill.'

"The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill."

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, D. C., December 17, 1886.

"SIR: I have received your letter of the 15th instant, touching a Corlies-Carbajal bond issued by the Government of Mexico in 1865.

"This bond, as you are aware, was transmitted to the Department with your letter of March 7, 1870, and with that communication was brought before the late American-Mexican Claims Commission organized pursuant to the convention of July 4, 1868, between the United States and Mexico. The claim was docketed No. 452, and was dismissed by the umpire, February 3, 1874, on the ground that you did not attempt to prove your citizenship, the authority of the parties who made and executed the obligation which you filed, or any other fact in connection with the transaction.

"This Government has nothing whatever to do with the redemption of these bonds, as you intimate, but the Mexican Government has lately provided for their redemption.

"With a dispatch, No. 723, of December 26, 1883, Mr. P. H. Morgan, at the time United States minister at the City of Mexico, forwarded hither a Presidential order upon the subject, which is as follows:

"'The President has directed that the general treasury shall instruct the Mexican consul at New York to inform the holders of the Carbajal bonds that, from the 1st day of January, 1884, the said bonds will be received as cash money in payment of 5 per cent. of import duties, payable at the Vera Cruz maritime custom-house, and in payment of 10 per cent. of such duties payable at the custom-houses of Tampico, Matamoros, Monterey, Laredo, Mier, and Camargo: Provided, however, That in view of the fact that the genuine bonds put into circulation by Messrs. Corlies & Co. may be confounded with the fraudulent emission of Woodhouse, they must be previously presented to the general treasury, in order that, being certified as genuine, they may be received by said custom-houses without further requisites. The interest that may have accrued on said bonds shall be paid at par, and if any bondholders should desire to receive the capital also, although the same may not be due, the bonds will be taken at a discount of 7 per cent. per annum from the date of the acceptance until September 30, 1885, which is the time when said bonds became due.'

"The Department caused this order to be made public through the newspapers, but has taken no further action in the premises, except to make inquiry of the Mexican Government, at the instance of several bondholders, as to the genuineness of their bonds. Your bond is apparently one of these genuine bonds. But before you can take any steps looking to the redemption of that bond, as provided by the Mexican Government, you will have to procure an act of Congress authorizing this Department to return to you the bond in question. It being a part of the record of that claims commission, can not be removed therefrom except upon such permission.

"I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"T. F. BAYARD.

"J. P. HAGEMAN, Esq.,
"City of Kingston, Ulster County, New York."

"DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 19, 1887.

"SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th instant, transmitting from the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom it had been referred, a bill introduced in the House of Representatives January 10, 1887, designated H. R. 10545, and entitled 'A bill for the relief of John P. Hageman.'

"The bill provides for the restoration to Mr. Hageman of a Mexican bond for $50 filed by him as a claim against the Government of Mexico with the United States and Mexican Claims Commission, which was organized under the convention of July 4, 1868, between the two Governments.

"In reply, I have to state that the bond in question is preserved among the papers of that commission in this Department, and for your further information concerning the case I will cause to be sent herewith a copy of the letter from Mr. Hageman to the Secretary of State, dated March 7, 1870, presenting his claim and a copy of the opinion of the commissioners dismissing the same.

"In view of the precedents set by Congress in acts authorizing the surrender to their owners of original papers which have formed a part of the files of the said claims commission, I see no reason to object to the passage of this bill.

"I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

"T. F. BAYARD.

"Hon. R. R. HITT,
"House of Representatives."

"KINGSTON, N. Y., March 7, 1870.

"SIR: Agreeably to a published notice emanating from you in regard to claims against the Mexican Government, I inclose you Mexican bond, which I obtained from a duly-authorized agent in payment for advertising bonds for sale in the Rondout Courier, a newspaper published in the village of Rondout, in the town of Kingston and county of Ulster. I also inclose you affidavit.

"J. P. HAGEMAN,

Hageman, being duly sworn, says that in the year 1865 he advertised to the amount of $50 in the Rondout Courier, a paper printed and published in the village of Rondout and county aforesaid, for the Mexican Government, agreeably to the directions of an authorized agent, and that no part thereof has been paid or satisfied.

"J. P. HAGEMAN.

"Mr. Commissioner Wadsworth delivered the opinion of the commissioners, as follows:

"'Claimant does not attempt to prove his citizenship, the authorities of the parties who made and executed the obligation which he files, or any other fact.

"'The claim is therefore dismissed.'"

And recommended the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2077) to place on the pension-roll the name of Selina A. Sims, widow of William S. Sims; and

A bill (H. R. 7783) to authorize the construction of a bridge at or near Knoxville, Tenn.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BROWNSVILLE, TEX.

Mr. CRAIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9512) for the erection of a public building at Brownsville, Tex., and that the bill be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the donation of a site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, custom-house, post-office, and for other Government offices and uses at Brownsville, in the State of Texas. The building, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $50,000; and no plan for said building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sum of $50,000 for said building; and the site donated shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Texas shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

Mr. SPRINGER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to hear the report read.

The report (by Mr. BANKHEAD) was read, as follows:

Brownsville is the headquarters of the customs district of Brazos Santiago, in Texas, through which there were imported and exported during the ten years ending June 30, 1885, goods, wares, and merchandise amounting in value to $28,586,960.

The circuit and district courts of the United States meet at Brownsville on the first Monday in January and July.

The net revenue of the post-office for the fiscal year 1887 was $1,421.29, and for the first and second quarters of the year 1888 it amounted to $810.

The Government is now paying an annual rent of $1,700 for the custom-house and for a building for the use of the Federal courts.

The bill provides for the erection of a public building for the use and accommodation of the United States courts, custom-house, and post-office. Brownsville has a population of upwards of 6,000 people, and the troops at Fort Brown receive their mails through the post-office at Brownsville.

The original bill provided for the appropriation of $60,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of the building, but the city council of Brownsville having passed an ordinance donating a site to the Government, the committee have prepared a substitute for the original bill, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to accept the donation of a site for the building, and which provides for an appropriation of only $50,000 for the cost of the building.

The committee recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute.

Mr. SPRINGER. As I understand, $50,000 is the whole sum proposed to be expended for this building?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. If I heard the report correctly, the net receipts of the post-office at Brownsville for the year 1887 were $1,000.

Mr. CRAIN. I do not remember the exact figures.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read again that portion of the report:

The Clerk read as follows:

The net revenue of the post-office for the fiscal year 1887 was $1,421.29, and for the first and second quarters of the year 1888 it amounted to $810.

Mr. BURROWS. Is there any special necessity for this building?

Mr. CRAIN. Yes, sir. The Federal courts meet at Brownsville, and there is a custom-house there.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CRAIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. After there has been a recognition on the other side (there having been one on this side), I desire to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WICHITA, KANS.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1451) for the completion of a public building at Wichita, Kans., and that the House now proceed to consider the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the additional sum of $100,000 is hereby appropriated for the completion of a suitable building, with fire-proof vaults therein, for the accommodation of the post-office, United States courts, and other Government offices, at the city of Wichita, State of Kansas, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the requirements of an act for that purpose approved March 3, 1885. The limit of cost prescribed in said act is hereby extended as aforesaid, and no plan shall be approved which will involve an expenditure for site and building complete, including approaches, greater than the limit herein fixed.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was read, as follows:

In line 3, strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty;" so as to read, "that the additional sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated," etc.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the report of the committee had better be read.

The report (by Mr. WADE) was read, as follows:

Under the bill that was passed in the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress the appropriation for a public building at Wichita, Kans., was increased to $100,000. Under this bill the ground was obtained and the foundation of the building put in, but the growth of the city and country tributary to it has been so remarkable that the inadequacy of the proposed building to meet the necessities of the Government business became apparent.

The marvelous increase in the growth of the city is shown by the following official figures:

POPULATION OF WICHITA.

1884	12,470
1885	16,019
1886	20,129
1887	31,709

This is the last official knowledge of the population, but a reasonable estimate places present population at 40,000. Two thousand six hundred buildings were erected in this city from June 1, 1886, to June 1, 1887.

The real-estate transactions for the first five months of 1887 were $34,893,565, being the largest in any city in the United States during that period excepting only New York and Kansas City, Mo.

The business in the United States courts held in this city and in the post-office has increased very greatly. The aggregate receipts of the post-office now equal ——.

The United States courts held in this city have criminal jurisdiction over offenses committed in the Indian Territory.

These are some of the reasons that have led to the conclusion that a larger building than was originally contemplated is demanded.

The committee is informed that the foundation of the building can be enlarged in such a way as to utilize the foundation now in.

The Supervising Architect, the United States attorney, and United States marshal of the State all recommend an increased appropriation; and your committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment:

Strike out "100,000" and insert "$50,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object, unless we can have some explanation. What was the limit fixed by law for the cost of this building?

Mr. PETERS. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to me that sum is sufficient and ought not to be exceeded. Just now we appropriated only $50,000 for a public building at Brownsville, which is to be used for the custom-house, post-office, and United States courts.

Mr. PETERS. Before the gentleman objects I trust he will allow a statement. The public business has increased very largely at Wichita. It has now a population of 40,000, and is in a district which has half a million people. There are United States courts held there; there are land offices, and there is a post-office, the net receipts of which during this fiscal year have amounted to over $50,000. The Supervising Architect has joined with the United States marshal and the United States district attorney in recommending the additional appropriation proposed in this bill. The foundation of the building has been constructed; but all work has been suspended since these recommendations, because it has been ascertained that if the building be erected according to the plan originally contemplated it will be insufficient to meet the wants of the Government. The building was commenced when the population of the city was only about 18,000. The population has since doubled; and, as I said, the net receipts of the post-office alone during the present fiscal year have been over $50,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I see the site has been purchased; I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas what was the cost of the site.

Mr. PETERS. I would state that the cost of the site to the Government was just $1,400. The city made up the rest of it, amounting to $9,000. The Government could to-day sell its square of ground for $100,000 in cash; and yet it cost, as I have said, only $1,400.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the fact that the site has been already attained, leaving something over $98,000——

Mr. PETERS. Seventy-three thousand dollars is all that remains.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought you said the site cost $1,400.

Mr. PETERS. Yes, but the foundation is in.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, at all events the amount available for the building is something over $98,000; and I suggest to my friend that the principal objection to this class of bills is the very large sums involved.

This building need not be any larger for public purposes, for post-office, court-house, etc., than in a town containing but one-half or one-fourth of the population; and one of smaller size would require the same accommodation as far as the post-office is concerned. There is no difference practically in that respect between a city of fifteen or twenty thousand inhabitants and one of from forty to seventy-five thousand, for they only want post-office accommodations and necessary offices for marshal, sheriff, and clerks. Therefore I think the simple fact that a town has a large population ought not be used here for the purpose of securing extravagant appropriations. It does injustice to all other communities, and the whole system is broken down in consequence of excessive appropriations for particular localities.

I do not desire to object in this instance, but still I think the present appropriation of $100,000, leaving $98,000 for the construction, ought to be ample.

Mr. PETERS. I wish to say that the increase in the receipts from the post-office business at this point has been so large as to indicate clearly that the first story of the building, as at present designed, will be entirely inadequate, and not at all sufficient to meet the wants of a post-office building. It is absolutely necessary that there should be this extension.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee to strike out "$100,000" in the bill and insert "$50,000."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PETERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the call of States for to-day.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Mississippi desires to ask the appointment of a conference committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether the gentleman's motion is privileged or not.

The SPEAKER. It is not privileged; but if the gentleman yields, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi to submit the request.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill for the retirement of General Pleasonton, and agree to the request of the Senate to appoint a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. OATES. What is the amendment of the Senate? I ask that it be read.

Mr. HOOKER. There is but a single amendment, which is to retire him as major instead of colonel. The House passed a bill to retire him with the grade of colonel.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks to have the amendment read.

Mr. OATES. I withdraw that as the gentleman from Mississippi has stated the character of the amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to inquire if this is a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that it is not a privileged motion.

Mr. BURROWS. I shall be obliged in obedience to a request of a member on this side of the House, who is absent, to interpose an objection.

Mr. HOOKER. It has been already referred to the Committee on Military Affairs——

Mr. BURROWS. I shall have to object, at the request of a gentleman from this side.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well, then, I give notice that I shall object to everything offered on that side or on this, I do not care from whom it comes, until this question is determined. This is simply a request to appoint a committee of conference.

Mr. BURROWS. Perhaps the gentleman did not understand my statement. I did not object for myself, but at the request of an absent member from this side.

Mr. HOOKER. I shall object to everything by unanimous consent until this is determined.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the call of States and Territories, and that gentlemen having bills to present may be permitted to hand them in at the Clerk's desk for reference under the direction of the Chair.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I believe to-day is suspension day for committees. If during the morning it is the desire of any of the committees to have the privilege that the rule grants them, I am willing they should exercise it. I do not know whether any of the committees are now ready to make motions for suspension, and if not, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Military Affairs has a proposition that it is ready to submit now and ask the suspension of the rules upon.

Mr. RANDALL. Upon what subject?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Making an appropriation of $25,000 for the reunion at Gettysburgh.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to that; but I give notice that after that I shall ask consent to go into Committee of the Whole on appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs is first on the list.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs was called.

Mr. COBB. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

The Committee on Military Affairs was called.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURGH.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 169) appropriating $25,000 for the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburgh.

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburgh, on the 1st, 2d, and 3d days of July, 1888, by the survivors of the Army of the Potomac and the Army of Northern Virginia; said sum to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the erection of temporary barracks, kitchens, and mess quarters, for the flooring of tents and for straw for the same, for the building of stands and their decoration, for a band of music, and for the necessary incidental expenses for the purposes mentioned: Provided, That a part of said sum, not to exceed $5,000, may be used to guaranty contractors against loss in order to secure subsistence at a moderate rate: And provided further, That no part of said sum shall be used to procure or pay for spirituous or intoxicating liquors.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Yes; I demand a second.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I object.

The SPEAKER. A second being demanded, the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 11.

Mr. BURROWS. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Michigan having raised the point of no quorum, and there being within my knowledge eighty-two pairs, involving the non-voting of 164 members, I must ask that the House proceed with the sundry civil bill, on which bill I do not believe the point of no quorum will be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois can withdraw his motion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel warranted in withdrawing the resolution. If a resolution of this character can not pass the House, in my judgment we had better suspend business. I feel that if a resolution of this character can not be voted upon without the question of no quorum being made against it, the House had better adjourn and wait until the other side of the House are ready to vote.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] practically gives notice the resolution shall not pass.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. There is no occasion for the observation of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND]. I raised the question in this case upon my individual responsibility, because I believe this expenditure ought not to be made out of the national Treasury. It has come to pass that whenever a centennial of some important or unimportant historical event comes about in some section there is a proposition to have a celebration and Congress is at once asked for an appropriation. If there is to be an exposition abroad at Australia or somewhere else——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Debate is not in order.

The SPEAKER. There having been no second, the gentleman makes the point that debate is not in order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am simply responding to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. This is not a local matter. This is a national celebration. It is a national affair and every American ought to be in favor of it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may proceed with his statement.

The SPEAKER. How much time shall be given?

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. RANDALL. Five minutes on each side.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I was proceeding to say that in the case of every event of a historical character a centennial or semi-centennial celebration is proposed, and there is always an attempt to have an appropriation made by Congress to pay the expenses.

When a locality proposes to do this a call is at once made upon the people of all the States to pay the expenses out of the national Treasury. We have expositions in France, England, and in the islands. Some ambitious merchant desires to send his wares to one of these expositions for his own private benefit. He asks that his advertising be paid by the national Treasury and we do it. When there is a centennial at Yorktown, and of an event certainly hallowed in the memory of every American citizen, we take money out of the Treasury to pay the expenses of one of the most disgraceful orgies that has ever occurred in the history of a nation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman permit me to remind him——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am not opposed to the celebration because Confederate and Union soldiers meet. I am as glad to see the meeting as any gentleman on the other side. The war is over. A long time ago I said in this House I would, if I could, have that bloody experience of the nation taken up, like Uncle Toby's oath, to Heaven's chancery, let the recording angel drop upon it the tear of pity and blot it out forever. I put my opposition to this resolution solely upon the ground that it is undemocratic and unconstitutional. There is no warrant for it in the Constitution. If the gentlemen on the other side will find a warrant to make this expenditure I will find a warrant to run a circus or menagerie at the expense of the people of the United States.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can find precedents.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Yes; for anything.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can find precedents for just such action.

Mr. OATES. I want to say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] that I am most heartily in accord with him in this matter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I congratulate my distinguished friend from Alabama. This is the first time I have known him to be right during the session.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The imputation cast upon the proposed celebration at Gettysburgh in characterizing it as in the nature of a junketing party and likening it to that at Yorktown, where there was some misconduct, is, in my judgment, entirely unwarranted. I take the floor now simply for the purpose of calling attention to the express and explicit language of the resolution, which excludes the use of spirituous or intoxicating liquors or the purchase of anything of that nature with the money here proposed to be appropriated. It is to be used under the direction of the Secretary of War for the erection of temporary barracks, kitchen and mess quarters, for the flooring of tents and straw for the same, for the building of stands and their decoration, etc., for the accommodation of those who participated in the battle that may attend the celebration.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague on the Military Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA].

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, this being the second time that this resolution has met with opposition from the other side of the House, opposition coming from gentlemen who claim to be the special guardians of the surviving soldiers of the war of the rebellion, I deem it but right and just that I should call attention to that fact. Now, sir, what is the purpose of this proposed meeting upon that great battle-field? I will read you a statement of the purpose of it. It is that "both armies may on that occasion recall, in friendship and fraternity, the sentiments of good-will, loyalty, and patriotism which now happily unite us all in sincere devotion to our beloved country." That is the object, sir, of the reassembling of the brave men who met there twenty-five years ago to contend with each other in deadly strife, and I am utterly amazed that a gentleman upon the other side should characterize it as a circus. The gallant men who are to meet on that great battle-field will not, in my judgment, accept that characterization——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If my friend will allow me, I did not characterize it as a circus.

Mr. SPINOLA. They will not accept that as a good reason for the opposition which has appeared here against this resolution on the part of the gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Now, sir, in regard to the constitutionality of this appropriation, the Government is to-day spending almost a million dollars, if not more than that, for the printing of the records of the rebellion in order that its history may go down to our children and our children's children, showing exactly what took place during the four years that we were contending with each other, and one great object of this meeting is that the survivors of both armies may mark out the positions which the armies on both sides occupied during those three terrible days. On the Union side that has been done to a considerable extent, but there has been little or nothing done to mark definitely the positions occupied by the forces upon the other side, where their batteries were planted, where their brigades and divisions and corps, which did such gallant service on their side in that contest, were stationed. Erroneous as their attitude may have been in our judgment, nevertheless, sir, they proved that as Americans they were brave men, worthy of our steel. Now, the men from the Southern country who are expected to attend this reunion have not the means to pay the expenses of the journey and to take care of themselves during the celebration, and we of the North, the survivors of those who served in the Army of the Potomac, are not to-day in a condition to furnish the necessary means. For that reason, sir, this appeal has been made to the Congress of the United States in the name of the Union veterans who fought at the battle of Gettysburgh, asking that this reunion may be recognized by Congress to the extent of this pitiful appropriation of $25,000, which is a mere——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman occupied all his time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that this resolution may pass, now that we have had these explanations on both sides.

Mr. SPINOLA. Yes; let it pass. Let the boys drink once more out of the same old canteen.

Mr. BURROWS. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is in order to ask unanimous consent, is it not?

The SPEAKER. Not when the regular order is insisted upon.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I would ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] whether he is not willing to let a vote be taken on the resolution without further debate and without raising the question of a quorum. If he is willing to do that, I am willing to leave the matter to the decision of the House. If two-thirds of the House do not think the joint resolution ought to pass, it will, of course, be lost. I hope the gentleman will agree that we may have a yea-and-nay vote or a standing vote upon the final passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. ENLOE. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SPRINGER. The regular order is the completion of the count by tellers, I believe.

The SPEAKER. It is.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires, however, before the count is resumed to correct an erroneous reference. Senate bill 2549, for the relief of Mary Isabella R. Clements, has been erroneously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; it should go to the Committee on Pensions, and in the absence of objection, it will be so referred.

GETTYSBURGH CELEBRATION.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will resume their places.

The House proceeded to divide. During the count by tellers, the following proceedings took place:

Mr. SPINOLA. There is an amendment to this resolution which ought to have been read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] made a motion to suspend the rules, and adopt a certain proposition which has been read.

Mr. SPINOLA. But there was a mistake in reading the resolution. The Clerk did not read as a part of the resolution the amendment offered the other day; that was overlooked.

The SPEAKER. But the Clerk has read the resolution which the gentleman from Illinois sent up and on which he made his motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TOWNSHEND (after examining the resolution). Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce a correction of the manner in which this resolution was read. It was intended to read—

That the sum of $25,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, etc., for the twenty-fifth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburgh on the 1st, 2d, and 3d days of July, 1888, by the survivors of the Army of the Potomac and their guests.

The last clause was read "by the survivors of the Army of the Potomac and the Army of Northern Virginia." The amendment, which should have been read as part of the resolution, strikes out the words "the Army of Northern Virginia" and substitutes "their guests."

The SPEAKER. Except by unanimous consent, the only way in which the gentleman can make the correction is to withdraw his motion and renew it in the amended form. Is there objection?

Mr. OATES. I do not understand what is the proposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The resolution as read included the words "by the survivors of the Army of the Potomac and the Army of Northern Virginia." It is now proposed to correct the resolution by striking out "the Army of Northern Virginia" and inserting "their guests."

Mr. OATES. I can not see what difference that makes. I object to the change.

Mr. TOWNSHEND (after the count by tellers had proceeded for some time). Mr. Speaker, as it is evident that the count by tellers must disclose the fact that there is no quorum present to-day, and as there is a determination manifested on the other side to defeat this resolution, I therefore will leave the responsibility where it belongs and withdraw the resolution.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] charges that the opposition to the resolution is entirely on this side, he says what is not true in fact.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I leave that question to be determined by the members of this House and the record of the proceedings to-day.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The gentleman has withdrawn his motion, and that ends the matter.

[Mr. TOWNSHEND continued, during the rapping of the Speaker's gavel, to address to Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, remarks which were inaudible at the Reporters' desk.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] is not in order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make a motion which is in order, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will yield a moment to allow me to offer a resolution to be printed in the RECORD.

QUARANTINE SERVICE.

There being no objection,

Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, presented the following; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Resolved, That the American Medical Association urges upon the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States the necessity and importance of the immediate passage of Senate bill No. 2943, "to perfect the quarantine service of the United States," which bill has passed the Senate, and is now pending in the House of Representatives, in order to make provision for protection against the introduction of contagious diseases before the approaching summer.

FRANCES H. L. PRESCOTT.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will correct an erroneous reference. The bill (S. 1144) granting a pension to Frances H. L. Prescott was erroneously referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It should have gone to the Committee on Pensions. If there be no objection, the change of reference will be made. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills, the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the first general appropriation bill in order, being the bill (H. R. 10540) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of this bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I do not consider it incumbent upon me to occupy any time in general debate on this bill. The report has been carefully prepared, and as we proceed to consider the bill paragraph by paragraph members who will take the trouble to refer to the report will be able to see in general the reasons which actuated the committee in reporting the several paragraphs with their respective amounts.

If any gentleman desires now to enter upon general debate on this bill I would like to know it. Otherwise I will ask unanimous consent that we proceed to consider the bill under the five-minute rule by paragraphs. [A pause.] As no gentleman indicates any desire to speak, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate on the bill be considered as closed.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill, read as follows:

For custom-house at Bangor, Me.: For not exceeding one-half the cost of constructing stone abutments and piers for the protection of the United States custom-house and post-office building, and approaches, situated in the Kenduskeag Stream, at Bangor, in the State of Maine, the sum of $10,000, the expense of such works to be borne in equal proportions by the United States and by said city of Bangor: Provided, That the plan of construction of said works shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further, That the entire amount to be thus contributed by the United States shall not exceed the sum hereby appropriated.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I wish to ask why it is that the city of Bangor is to pay one-half the expenses of the abutments and piers mentioned in this paragraph. I make this inquiry because my colleague [Mr. BOUTELLE] who represents that district is now absent.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state that the reason the bill stipulates Bangor shall pay her share of the expense is because very largely the benefits accrue to the citizens of that city. This appropriation is in exact accord with the former act for like objects. It meets the wishes of the gentleman [Mr. BOUTELLE] to whom the gentleman refers, who represents the Bangor district and who is now absent.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That is satisfactory.

The Clerk read as follows:

For marine hospital at Chicago, Ill.: For approaches complete, $10,000.

Mr. LAWLER. I have an amendment for repairs of the post-office and custom-house building at the city of Chicago, which I send up and ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 22 insert "for repairs of post-office and custom-house building at the city of Chicago, $50,000.

Mr. LAWLER. In introducing this amendment I wish to say we came here three years ago and asked $150,000 for repairs of this post-office and custom-house building, but we were only allowed, in the bill at that time, or in the House, $50,000. A year ago we were allowed $40,000. I notice there has been no special appropriation made in this bill in favor of this building in the city of Chicago. I claim there ought to be four or five hundred dollars appropriated for that purpose. That amount is required to put the building in proper condition for the service of Government. I wish to say the ceilings of some portions of the building occupied by the employés of the Government have not been cleaned for three or four years.

The Committee on Appropriations should have put into this bill an appropriation for $150,000. The Secretary of the Treasury, under the direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and who is employed in making the repairs in that post-office and custom-house building, makes a recommendation in favor of $112,000. I do not expect the recommendation of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, who is satisfied this appropriation ought to be made and whose recommendation has been indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury, will carry this House. I do not ask it. I do ask this Committee of the Whole and this Congress to give to the city of Chicago that amount of money which I have provided in my amendment for the necessary repairs to this post-office and custom-house building. I have therefore offered for that purpose this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations has not seen fit to recommend any distinct and separate appropriation in this connection. There is an appropriation of nearly $200,000 for general repairs for public buildings such as the one the gentleman's amendment refers to.

Now, as to this particular building, I desire to say I do not know when the repairs for that building will cease to need appropriations. In 1881 Congress appropriated for that building $40,000 in repairs separate and distinct from the general appropriation. In 1887 Congress appropriated for extraordinary repairs $50,000, and in 1888, the current year, for various objects in the way of repairs, $84,000—in all $174,000—for the repairs of that building during the three years to which I have made reference.

The committee therefore consider it time when separate and distinct appropriations should cease to be made and that building should have hereafter the sum required for repairs out of the general fund. The committee was quite safe in recommending that, and the House is quite safe in adopting the recommendation of the committee.

I really think the Committee on Appropriations in connection with public buildings has given about everything to everybody who has asked it.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask whether the Committee on Appropriations has not given a separate appropriation for the New Orleans building, for alterations and repairs, in this bill, and if so is not that a like case to the one of the building requiring repairs in the city of Chicago?

Mr. RANDALL. There has never been any separate appropriation for that building. It provides for an additional story, and for the further object of bringing in those offices which are now at an expense to the Government in buildings rented from private parties at large amounts.

Mr. FORNEY. Over $6,000 annually.

Mr. RANDALL. Over $6,000, as my colleague advises me. It is really a matter of economy to do that.

Mr. LAWLER. I do not find any objection against any city getting in this appropriation bill what it needs in the way of repair for its public buildings. I am willing they should get everything they possibly can from this committee.

Mr. RANDALL. That is gratuitous.

Mr. LAWLER. I do not understand the action of this committee in reference to this matter. I do not propose, for one, to put up with it. Gentlemen who have made personal examination of this building and the need for its repair are satisfied that provision should be made for that purpose. The recommendation from the Treasury Department is in favor of $112,000 being appropriated to make those repairs. If the city of Chicago is compelled to depend merely upon a portion of the general fund of $200,000 for all the public buildings in the United States, it will not get more then $25,000 or $30,000. It is a small matter for the third city in the United States, so far as the collection of taxes is concerned to carry on the Government. I hope, therefore, my amendment providing $50,000 for the repair of the post-office and custom-house building at Chicago will be adopted.

With what has been appropriated within the last three years, including $50,000 asked here, we will only have what was recommended to have been appropriated for this purpose three years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not here to fight any one particular feature of this bill, nor am I here to take up the time of the committee in discussing this particular point, which I have been trying to urge upon the attention of the House; but gentlemen certainly will understand that I shall insist that justice must be done to the city of Chicago in respect to a sufficient appropriation to carry on this work. I know it is absolutely essential.

I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to other gentlemen here that those who have been West within the last few years and have gone into this building have time and again told me it was a disgrace, a public disgrace, in the condition it is in.

I do not understand how this appropriation, having been recommended by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who has looked into the matter, should have been so cut down by the committee from $112,000 to the ridiculously small sum which this bill is expected to give to that city. It does not begin to allow the necessary work to be done on the building.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, here is a new building, which, I think, cost in the neighborhood of $4,000,000, if my recollection serves me aright, and if I am incorrect I hope the gentleman from Illinois will correct me, and yet, notwithstanding that cost, year after year they have been here asking large appropriations for repairs.

I do not know how the $175,000 has heretofore been expended in connection with the repairs of the building. I can not tell because it does not come within the range of my power to find out; but I apprehend from a casual or superficial observation of some of the expenditures of the Government in this connection, that a good part of it has doubtless gone for clerk-hire. I ask the gentleman from Illinois if that is true.

Mr. LAWLER. No, sir; it is not. There is only one clerk employed.

Mr. RANDALL. I will examine into the matter.

I hope the committee will maintain the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LAWLER, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAWLER. I move a further amendment, to insert after the words of the bill which have been read the words:

For repairs of post-office and custom-house building at Chicago, Ill., $25,000.

I would merely ask, without taking up the time of the committee, that they will allow this small sum to be inserted here.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no such warrant from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow this amendment to go into the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. In the amount given for general repairs of public buildings the committee feel satisfied that enough has been appropriated for repairs on all of these buildings, including this one; and, therefore, I hope the committee will be sustained in its recommendation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But this is a very slight addition for a very important work.

Mr. LAWLER. It is like putting a patch on your coat. It does not approach the repairs that are necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. We are always asked for these appropriations for that building, and I fear it will never be in a condition where they can be dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman knows the amount that has been recommended by the Supervising Architect?

Mr. RANDALL. The committee have carefully considered the recommendations and estimates.

Mr. LAWLER. And I want to say, in answer to the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, that this general fund, notwithstanding the fact that there are a great number of these public buildings dependent upon it, and although the Secretary of the Treasury has forwarded an estimate to Congress asking an appropriation of $750,000, this Appropriations Committee have done just as they did two years ago and a year ago, cut down the total amount from $750,000 to $200,000, and still the chairman says that out of this general fund, which has been so reduced in this manner, Chicago will get her proportion. Now Chicago may get her proportion of the $200,000, but I tell you that it is not enough. I know the condition of that building and its wants.

Mr. RANDALL. I said that only $200,000 was in this bill.

Mr. LAWLER. I understand that; but the Supervising Architect and the Secretary of the Treasury find upon looking over the whole ground that $750,000 is necessary and they recommend that sum, and also recommend that $112,000 shall be appropriated for the repairs of the building at Chicago. Now, what has this Committee on Appropriations done? Here is an investigation made by the competent officers of the Government in charge of this subject. That investigation is entirely disregarded by the committee; and right in the face of it they appropriate this insignificant sum. In this connection, too, allow me to say that it required nearly $40,000 to strengthen that building with iron-work, and it was necessary to preserve the stone-work by painting the outside face of the building. It was also necessary to take up every floor in that building from top to bottom and relay it. That is where these appropriations have gone, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred, and I say with this niggardly policy of appropriating from year to year these insignificant sums will make it necessary always to be coming here and asking appropriations instead of doing the work properly at once. Where is economy in such action?

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state that I made a mistake when I said this building cost $4,000,000. I find on examination that it cost $6,000,000.

Mr. LAWLER. I do not think that cuts any figure.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman presents an additional argument for this appropriation. If the building cost $6,000,000, and is used as I understand this building is used from the ground to the top floor, every room in it being occupied, and is in a condition of unwholesomeness and unsafety that warrants proper attention on the part of the Government, certainly there should be no objection in appropriating the small sums necessary to keep it in repair. All that is needed to show the condition of the building as far as this demand for repairs is concerned is, I am informed, to merely inspect it. It shows for itself.

Mr. RANDALL. I was there and saw it, within a few years, with my own eyes, and I think we have given enough money to repair it. The truth is, I do not think that justice has been done to the Government by the contractor in this case. Still, I believe that enough has been provided in the general fund to make the necessary repairs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no doubt that the Government was wronged in the original construction of this building, and that an outrage was perpetrated upon it in the way in which it was constructed. But the work has been done, and cost $6,000,000. The Supervising Architect says it will be necessary to appropriate $112,000 to put it in a safe and wholesome and proper condition. Now it does seem to me that when the gentleman from the Chicago district asks no larger sum than $25,000 in addition to what is appropriated under the general fund it should be yielded. I know, from my own observation within the last few months, that the building is needing repairs badly, both in regard to its sanitary condition and safety.

The building is crowded with the Federal courts. It is crowded with the post-office. It is crowded with the revenue offices. There are various other Government offices in that building. It is absolutely crowded from top to bottom. The walls are cracking. The roof leaks. There are other repairs that are greatly needed.

Mr. RANDALL. We gave $84,000 for that purpose last year.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You did not give near what the officers of the Government demanded.

Mr. RANDALL. In regard to the Supervising Architect, I beg members to take his statements with some degree of forbearance. If they knew the perplexity of the Supervising Architect, by reason of the zeal of members all wanting the particular buildings within their own districts cared for in some way or other, they would use some moderation in voting large sums upon the Supervising Architect's recommendation.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend should bear in mind Chicago is the great distributing point of the Northwest. The Chicago office is not alone the State office. It is the distributing post-office, the principal post-office of the whole Northwest. And only a small sum is asked in this case.

Mr. RANDALL. Nothing is being denied to Chicago. Chicago is merely remitted to the general fund, just as other cities are.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not see how we are going to get $112,000 out of the $200,000 of the general fund. I hope the House will grant this appropriation.

Mr. LAWLER. The building is not fit to work in; that is why the money is necessary. The money is needed to put the building in a fit condition to work in.

Mr. RANDALL. Twenty-five thousand dollars will not do it.

Mr. LAWLER. Twenty-five thousand dollars will help us.

The Chair put the question, and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 47.

Mr. LAWLER. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] that the effect of his point is to stop the further consideration of this bill, yet I want him to distinctly understand while that is the effect on the one hand, on the other hand I do not mean to be coerced in this way.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that tellers be ordered.

Mr. LAWLER. I have raised the point of no quorum. It is my duty to fight for my rights here, and I shall do so when the city I represent needs me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. LAWLER. I will withdraw my point of no quorum and call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER.]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAWLER. Knowing as I do the necessity for this money, I am compelled to insist on getting something in this bill, if possible, no matter how small the amount may be. I ask the committee to withdraw its objection and allow the sum of $20,000 to go in this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no authority from the committee to make any compromise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

After line 22 insert:

"For repairs of post-office and custom-house building, Chicago, Ill., $20,000."

Mr. LAWLER. I do not like to assume the position of begging for a building in regard to which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations makes the frightful admission that it cost $6,000,000. It is true. That only shows the more the necessity that the appropriation ought to be granted by this House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania knows himself and from others who have visited the building what its condition is. I do not want to take up the time of the House in showing what has been done with the last three niggardly appropriations made for that building. The building is not fit to carry on business in. The few appropriations made have put the building partly in a substantial condition. I have stated, and I repeat, there are rooms occupied to-day by employés of the United States Government there that have not been cleaned or painted in four years. It is a shame. I say here as a member of this House, in behalf of a city that I in part represent, I do not believe the opinion of the committee or the report of the committee ought to be followed in this case. The chairman of the committee dwells strongly on the $200,000 that has been appropriated in bulk for eight large cities. That appropriation could go to one large city alone instead of being distributed among eight large cities. The amount I now ask, $20,000, is small. I hope the House will grant it.

Mr. RICE. I wish to say that I am familiar with the condition of the building in Chicago. I have frequently been in it. It is unfit for occupation. It is dangerous. It ought not to be left in its present condition. It needs the appropriation recommended by the Treasury Department. It is indecent, unsafe, and inhuman to leave the building as it is. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. My only statement is that this matter is provided for in the general fund. If we go outside for one building we may be obliged to go outside for all.

The Chair put the question and was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and thereupon there were—ayes 41, noes 37.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Huntsville, Ala.: For completion of building under present limit, $50,000.

Mr. NEAL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after line 25, insert:

"For court-house and post-office at Chattanooga, Tenn.: For completion of building under present limit, $50,000."

Mr. NEAL. In connection with this amendment I desire to have read the letter from the Supervising Architect which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The letter was read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, April 12, 1888.

SIR: In response to your communication of the 11th instant, I have the honor to state that the limit placed by Congress on the proposed Federal building at Chattanooga, Tenn., is $200,000, of which amount $150,000 has been appropriated, and the balance, $50,000, is included in the regular estimate for the fiscal year 1889.

In view of this it will be necessary that the appropriation asked be made in order to permit the entering into contracts during the ensuing fiscal year for the erection of the building.

In this connection I have to inclose copy of Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1887, and to invite your attention to the marked paragraphs on pages XLVIII and XLIX.

Respectfully, yours,

WILL. A. FRERET,
Supervising Architect.

Hon. J. R. NEAL,
Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives.

Mr. NEAL. I desire also to have read the paragraph which I have marked in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The Clerk read as follows:

After a careful consideration of the method that has been pursued in the past in appropriating money for the construction of public buildings, I am convinced that a great saving of time and money would be secured if the full amount of the limit of cost should be appropriated in one sum, so that the work of construction might be uninterruptedly pursued, and thus avoid a suspension of work by reason of the exhaustion of a partial appropriation. If this method should be adopted the inconvenient delay experienced by the Department up to this time in building public buildings would be avoided, and the large sums required for the rental of private buildings on account of this delay be saved to the Government.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I think that the Secretary of the Treasury presents the common-sense business view of this matter. The expenditure in the amendment proposed by me is already provided for by law. The Supervising Architect practically admits in his letter that he will not be able to expend the extra $50,000 during the next fiscal year, but he states that it is included in his estimate and is necessary for the purpose of making contracts for the completion of the building. I know that we are in very great need of this building at Chattanooga, and I know of no reason why it should not be completed within the next fiscal year; but if it should not be, still this appropriation is necessary to enable the Supervising Architect to make contracts so that he can go on and complete the building within reasonable time without detriment to the general fund which has been provided by law as the limit for this building. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANDALL. On the 31st of December, 1887, there was $149,685 of the appropriation for this building unexpended, to which should be added $75,000, if I remember aright, appropriated in the bill which extended the limit $75,000.

Mr. NEAL. That is correct.

Mr. RANDALL. Making, on the 31st of December, $224,685 on hand to be expended during the coming fiscal year in the construction of this building, a sum which the Supervising Architect advised the committee was all that he could expend during that period. Therefore this $50,000 additional was not appropriated in this bill. If the Architect could expend that amount more during the fiscal year, well and good, or if he could with advantage to the Government make a contract up to the limit requiring an additional $50,000, I would not object to incorporating the appropriation in that part of this bill where like cases are provided for. If the Architect feels that he can with economy make contracts covering this amount, even though he may not be able to expend the money during the fiscal year we are appropriating for, I would be willing to allow it to go into the bill in connection with other cases that are treated in that way. Therefore if the gentleman [Mr. NEAL] will consent to incorporating Chattanooga in the general clause, which provides that the Treasury Department may make contracts up to the limit authorized by law, I shall not object.

Mr. NEAL. I have no objection to that. I have not had time to read the bill through since it was printed, and had not noticed that part of it.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the gentleman's object will be accomplished in the way I have suggested. We have had to take the same course with reference to the building at Jacksonville, Fla.

Mr. FORNEY. If the gentleman will examine page 7 of the bill, he will find that general provision.

Mr. RANDALL. When we reach that, I shall not object to the amendment being inserted.

Mr. NEAL. Then I withdraw my amendment for the present.

Mr. WILKINS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. NEAL] to lines 16, 17, 18, and 19, on page 7, where he can have his amendment inserted when that part of the bill is reached.

Mr. NEAL. That will be satisfactory.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Louisville, Ky.: For continuation of building, $60,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in after line 8.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 8, page 4, insert:

"For custom-house at Port Townsend, Wash.: For construction of building, in excess of present limit, $120,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I must make the point of order on that amendment. The committee can not extend limits.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the gentleman to withhold his point of order for a moment, to give me an opportunity to make a brief statement. The entire situation, briefly summed up, is this: Originally, $82,000 were appropriated for the construction of this building, but it was ascertained early in this session of Congress that that amount would be wholly inadequate for the purpose of constructing such a building as the public business requires at that point. Consequently, the Supervising Architect requires an additional appropriation of $38,000 for the purpose of constructing the building in accordance with the present plan.

Mr. RANDALL. And they got it too.

Mr. VOORHEES. I will state the exact situation. That amount of money was appropriated in the legislative appropriation bill——

Mr. RANDALL. In the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should have said "the urgent deficiency bill." But to such an extent is the Supervising Architect impressed with the importance of an additional appropriation for the construction of such a building as is necessary for the rapidly increasing business at that point that he has entirely suspended work upon the building from that time to the present. He is thoroughly convinced that the completion of the building in accordance with the present plan would be anything but in line of public economy. In order to show the attitude of the Supervising Architect in this matter I ask that the letter which I send to the desk may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, June 15, 1888.

SIR: Referring to our conversation of this morning, I have the honor to state that Congress has appropriated $120,000 for the construction of the custom-house at Port Townsend, Wash., and limited cost to the amount of appropriation.

By reference to resolutions passed by the Board of Trade of Port Townsend I find that the limit placed will be insufficient to secure the needed accommodations for the transaction of the Federal business, for the reasons:

First. That this port stands first in the number of American steam-vessels engaged in foreign trade.

Second. That it stands second in the tonnage of American steam-vessels engaged in foreign trade, New York being first.

Third. That the collections of this district have increased from $79,000 for the fiscal year of 1886 to about $250,000 for the fiscal year of 1887, as approximately estimated by the collector of customs.

Fourth. That the number of employés in this district is double the number employed at the time the original bill passed in 1884.

It is apparent, therefore, from a full consideration of the subject, that the limit of the cost of the building should be extended from $120,000 to $240,000.

Respectfully, yours,

WILL. A. FRERET, Supervising Architect.

Hon. C. S. VOORHEES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. VOORHEES. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this case is an exceptional one. The Supervising Architect, in addition to what he has stated in the communication just read, has assured me that it would be very unwise to continue to work on that building under the present limit. Hence it seems to me a case is presented here for the exercise of some discretion on the part of the Committee on Appropriations as to whether the point of order should be pressed.

Mr. RANDALL. If what the gentleman states as to the public necessity in this matter is correct—and I do not undertake to controvert his statement—the proper tribunal from which to seek relief is the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, not the Committee on Appropriations; and the sundry civil bill is not the proper place in which to remedy the difficulty. The original appropriation for this purpose was $82,000. In the urgent deficiency bill passed at this session the limit of the original appropriation was exceeded and an appropriation of $38,000 was made, aggregating, as the Supervising Architect states, $120,000. Now there comes in a proposition to extend the limit still further. I must insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that this amendment changes existing law and is out of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Los Angeles, Cal.: For completion of building under present limit, $100,000.

Mr. VANDEVER. I move to amend the paragraph just read by inserting, after the word "hundred," in the last line, the words "and fifty;" so as to make the appropriation $150,000. I offer the amendment for this reason——

Mr. RANDALL. I make a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. VANDEVER. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars can be advantageously expended within the coming fiscal year in the completion of this building. The original amount fixed in the last Congress was $150,000, which, as the Secretary of the Treasury and the Supervising Architect have reported, is insufficient for the erection of a building which will be adequate for the public wants at that point. They have therefore recommended an increase of $100,000. This amendment simply asks that the limit be extended $50,000. If this be agreed to, contracts can then be made for the entire completion of the work. I wish to state further——

Mr. RANDALL. Those who originally introduced this subject to the consideration of Congress should have been better informed, perhaps, than they were when they fixed too small a limit. But the remedy is not with the Committee on Appropriations, nor in this bill. I insist on the point of order that the amendment is in violation of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that this amendment proposes to extend the limit of appropriation already fixed by law, and is therefore a change of existing law. Does the gentleman from California desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. VANDEVER. I was only going to present the question whether the circumstances in the case of Los Angeles, the second city in importance in California, do not justify the making of an exception in this case. There is not a public building in that entire Sixth Congressional district, and it strikes me as very poor economy to confine the limit to the original appropriation, inasmuch as since that appropriation was made a United States court has been established for that southern district.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not a question of economy; it is a question whether the Committee on Appropriations can recommend a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order well taken, and sustains it.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I wish to be heard a moment on that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order. Does the gentleman wish to address himself to the point of order?

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I do. I do not see why a point of order should be held good as against this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that both the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who made the point of order, and the gentleman from California, who offered the amendment, have admitted that the amendment would extend the limit now fixed by law. That being so, the Chair was of opinion that the amendment proposed a change of existing law in violation of the rule of the House, and was not in order upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. May I be heard in opposition to that ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman briefly, if he insists upon it.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the gentleman had better take his five minutes upon some other matter, because this point of order has been decided.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I can not understand how this amendment is a change of existing law. The law is already in force for the construction of this building and it is in course of erection.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will come over here, I will show him the law and he will see the effect of it. I do not want to consume time by having it read.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I think there is too much of what is called "economy" in connection with these public buildings.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not a question of economy, but a question of law.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana. I know that in the district which I have the honor to represent a public building has been authorized; and the Department has put in that building glass of second quality, on the ground that a sufficient appropriation had not been made to authorize the use of first-class glass. This sort of "economy" has become a matter of public complaint.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. VANDEVER. In regard to the point of order, I will state that the original limit was $150,000; and $50,000 now proposed to be appropriated would be within the limits of the original appropriation. So I think the point of order is not good.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to state and the gentleman from California to admit that the amount carried in this bill, added to what the gentleman from California proposed to insert, would be an extension of the limit of expense heretofore fixed by law.

Mr. VANDEVER. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair was in error——

Mr. RANDALL. The law is plain. The limit is $150,000. Fifty thousand dollars was appropriated last year, and in this bill we appropriate $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statement just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], the Chair thinks the point of order well taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office at Minneapolis, Minn.: For heating apparatus, complete, $31,000, and for one elevator, $6,500; in all, $37,500.

Mr. RICE. I move to amend by striking out "31" and inserting "37," so as to make the appropriation in the second line of this paragraph $37,000. The estimate of the Treasury Department for this item is $55,000, which would, perhaps, include $5,000 for furniture; but $12,000 under the general appropriation added to this will not make up $55,000, which amount is absolutely necessary to put the post-office building at Minneapolis in a condition to be occupied.

The building is nearly completed, and all that is now needed is an appropriation of this amount. I do not understand the point of order is insisted upon.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say that the Supervising Architect and the subcommittee went over this estimate carefully, and we gave what we considered sufficient. The gentleman himself is a member of the committee, and I am not aware he made any proposition in the committee in this connection.

Mr. RICE. In view of the statement just made I will withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Rochester, N. Y.: For heating apparatus, $20,000; and elevator, $6,500; in all, $26,500.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 23, after the word "twenty," insert "five."

Same page, line 24, strike out the words "six" and "five hundred" and insert "nine" in lieu of the word "six;" after the word "dollars," same line, insert the words "for approaches, $11,000."

Same page, lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "twenty-six thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "forty-five thousand."

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That amendment, Mr. Chairman, is in accordance with the recommendation of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department. This building is now in course of completion, and the amendment provides for appropriating the amount recommended for the construction of the elevator and for the approaches to the building. These recommendations aggregate $45,000. The committee in its estimate have reduced the item for heating apparatus from $25,000 to $20,000, and for elevator from $9,000 to $6,500, and have stricken out the item of $11,000 for approaches.

As this report of the committee shows, the last story of the building is being put on, and it is expected before the snow flies this building will be completed and ready for occupation. It is to be hoped that will be the case.

Now, as a business proposition I desire to appeal to the House to act on the recommendation of the Supervising Architect in this respect. I desire to say in reference to the Supervising Architect that his management of these public buildings is admirable. I propose by my amendment to have appropriated in this bill the money necessary to complete the building so that it may be made useful for the public service. I have admired the able, business-like manner adopted and pursued by the Supervising Architect in reference to all these public buildings. We have twenty-one or twenty-three in course of completion; this at Rochester is one of them. This building aggregates an expenditure of over $550,000.

These items as provided for in my amendment are necessary, and I submit, as a business proposition, the recommendation of the Supervising Architect, whose judgment is reliable, should be carried out. He stated to me this morning what he asked for should be appropriated. The heating apparatus, the elevator, and the approaches to the building are required just as soon as the building is completed.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know what the Supervising Architect stated to the gentleman this morning, but I do know what he stated to the subcommittee. And I know the subcommittee and the general Committee on Appropriations have given great care to the examination of these estimates for public buildings, and we appropriated in that direction what we believed to be necessary.

This building is not yet higher built than its third story.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. They are putting on that story now.

Mr. RANDALL. Next comes the roof. I say, with deliberation, the Supervising Architect came before the Committee on Appropriations and said he did not need this appropriation for approaches. It is not for me to reconcile the two statements. I hope, therefore, the gentleman's amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I was assured by the Supervising Architect this morning in person that these items will be necessary, and he has uniformly in all his reports and communications urged them upon Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury has also urged upon Congress the appropriation of these amounts so as to make them available for the prosecution of the work.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say an additional word. The Supervising Architect was asked by the subcommittee, and he said——

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I know all about that.

Mr. RANDALL. The subcommittee showed him what it had done.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Let me ask my friend, did the Supervising Architect advise the committee to reduce the amount for heating apparatus and elevator?

Mr. RANDALL. He did. He recommended that.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. It is contrary to his letter to me, which I have here, asking for appropriations for heating apparatus, $25,000, and for elevator, $9,000.

Mr. RANDALL. We know what heating apparatus cost.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Everybody knows it. We ought to provide an adequate heating apparatus for a building that has cost $550,000. Heating apparatus can not be provided for less than $25,000. We also provide for the construction of an elevator for doing business and carrying my friend to the top of the building when he comes there to look after the Democratic party in my district. [Laughter.] It is the very lowest figure that ought to be accorded, as a business proposition, for such a purpose. We, as business men, are bound to regard the recommendations of the head of the bureau in dealing with such a question, rather than the opinion of my good friend from Pennsylvania, who likes to cut down these estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not care for the criticism, but unfortunately have lost the power to cut down. Everybody who appeared, almost, has got just what he wanted in this respect. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the cost of the elevator. He proposes $9,000 for that. Now, we did not give such an amount because we do not believe it to be necessary. The elevator here in the corner of this building, near the room of the Committee on Appropriations, which is as handsome an elevator as could be constructed, did not cost but about $5,000.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Well, but this is only two or three stories at the most.

Mr. RANDALL. That would not make very material difference. When the aperture is once made the main cost is in the material and in the workmanship.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The elevator in this building at Rochester will take double the amount of labor that was required here, and it will cost double as much money, I am satisfied.

Mr. RANDALL. And besides that, we know what the heating apparatus will cost.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. And in addition, Mr. Chairman, the elevator at Rochester will have to serve a double purpose; it will have to serve for both passengers and freight. It must serve the purpose of the United States court and of the Post-Office Department in a city which pays $200,000 a year net, almost, and is constantly growing, more rapidly in proportion, I think, than Philadelphia.

Again, I hope my friend from Pennsylvania will accept this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. And carry out the recommendations of the Supervising Architect.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, well; we have his recommendations before us, too.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. As a business proposition before business men, this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. In connection with the heating apparatus, that is regulated by the cost per cubic foot of space, and the committee have given enough for that.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Well, I am willing to submit this matter to a vote of the committee. I believe the House will evince better judgment than my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania on that subject.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BAKER, of New York. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 44.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered, twenty members only rising in support of the demand.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted. I think this is a fair business proposition, one that should commend itself to the consideration of the House, and I propose to stand by it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understood that twenty members had risen to sustain the demand for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Was not that one-fifth of the last vote?

The CHAIRMAN. It was.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not that meet the requirement of the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. No, it requires one-fifth of a quorum to order tellers. One-fifth of the last vote, whatever it may have been, will order the yeas and nays, but not tellers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think the gentleman from New York made his point too late.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. No, I make the point of order that no quorum has voted. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is made too late. Tellers had been demanded.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. But, having made the point of asking for tellers, I certainly did not waive my right to make the point of no quorum. It amounts to the same thing practically.

Mr. RANDALL. But the gentleman from New York chose his remedy. Now, having failed, he wants to go back.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had announced the result of the vote, and it is proper to make the point of no quorum as soon as the result is announced. The gentleman from New York did not make the point then.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I think it is but fair treatment to accord tellers when the point of no quorum is made. It is a common sense business transaction, and I propose a common sense business proposition.

Mr. WILKINS. Let me ask, Mr. Chairman, how many does it require to order tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. One-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. WILKINS. Not one-fifth of the last vote?

The CHAIRMAN. One-fifth of a quorum under the rule. One-fifth of the last vote would order the yeas and nays, but not tellers.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I will not press that point, but will move a further amendment.

I move to amend, in line 23, by fixing the amount at $24,000 instead of $25,000 as proposed in the former amendment, and leave the rest of the amendment stand as originally proposed, and change the total footings to $44,000.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BAKER, of New York. The House divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 48.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. No quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman from New York wants a division by tellers I have no objection to tellers being appointed; but if he wants to stop further progress upon the bill, then I shall move that the committee rise.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. That would have satisfied me before. I only want tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. FORNEY, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. BAKER.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 49.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows.

For post-office at Worcester, Mass.: For continuation of building under present limit, $100,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, to follow line 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

For post-office and United States court-house at Utica, N. Y.: For paving Broad and John streets abutting the United States court-house and post-office at Utica, N. Y., $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay the same amount per foot as property-owners on the said streets are required to pay.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order upon that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make a statement.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly I will; but I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. The court-house and post-office at Utica occupy three sides of a square, the east side fronting John street, the north on Broad street, and the west on Franklin street. Franklin street has been paved with sandstone pavement of the best kind, paid for by the city of Utica. The pavement on both John and Broad streets is all dilapidated cobble pavement, and a disgrace not to the public building alone but to the city. The city paid for the entire pavement on Franklin street. Under the charter of the city of Utica the city pays one-third of the cost of all paving, the other two-thirds being assessed to the property fronting on the streets; so that the city of Utica in any event pays for one-third of the pavement in front of the Government building, provided this amendment is adopted. I do not see any reason, Mr. Chairman, why the United States should not pay for paving in front of their buildings, not only in the city of Utica, but anywhere else. The buildings are not put there for the benefit of any city. They are put there for the benefit of the Government, to be occupied by its officers. It is absurd, it seems to me, to say that any particular city should pay for the pavement abutting upon United States property.

Mr. RANDALL. I only desire to state that a proposition providing for paving streets in front of public buildings is not new to the House. In fact there is no law authorizing any such procedure on the part of the Government of the United States. On the contrary we have proceeded upon the never-varying assumption that the property must be dedicated to the United States without municipal taxation or burden. To this the House has adhered.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made that the amendment changes existing law and is obnoxious to the rule. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize contracts to be made for the whole or any portion of any of the foregoing public buildings and the post-office and custom-house at Jacksonville, Fla., within the limit of cost fixed by law as to each of said public buildings.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 19, after the word "Florida," insert "court-house and post-office at Chattanooga, Tenn."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Light-houses, beacons, and fog-signals:

Charlotte Harbor, Florida: For the establishment of a light or lights and other aids to navigation to guide into Charlotte Harbor, Florida, $35,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, in the absence of my colleague from the First district [Mr. HIRES], who did not expect this bill to come up to-day, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, between lines 20 and 21, insert:

"For the purchase of a site and the erection of a boat-house for light-ship boats at Cape May, N. J., $750."

Mr. RANDALL. As that is in connection with the safety of human life, I ought not to object to it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is. It is for a landing for boats for the light-ship. They have no place to land.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no authority to accept it. We have an item of the same sort in the bill. I am willing to let the committee determine it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will read from the report——

Mr. RANDALL. I am quite willing to have the committee decide it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Goose Rocks, Maine; light and fog-signal: For the establishment of a light-house and fog-signal at or near Goose Rocks, at the entrance to Fox Island Thoroughfare, and the establishment of a day beacon at or near Channel Rock, in the vicinity of Goose Rocks, Maine, $35,000.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 2, page 9, insert:

"For completion of light-house on Crab Tree Ledge, in Frenchman's Bay, Hancock County, Maine, $13,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order. Congress has already appropriated the full amount for this work. There is a separate bill before the Committee on Commerce in that connection. I am perfectly willing to hear the gentleman.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I simply desire to say that the amendment was recommended by the Light-House Board. Twenty-five thousand dollars was appropriated for the purpose of establishing a light-house on that ledge.

It is found that the ledge at certain times is covered with water. The light-house has to be protected by iron at the bottom to keep it from being disturbed by the ice in winter, and this amount of money having been recommended, I offer the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not undertake at this time to controvert anything that the gentleman says as to the merits of the case, but I do say that the law authorizing this work limited the amount, and therefore the amendment is of course subject to the point of order, but I understand that there is now before the Committee on Commerce a bill to extend the limit.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have no doubt that the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's relief is with the Committee on Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I have no doubt that it is well taken, but I had hoped that it would not be taken at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two Harbors light-station, Minnesota: That the appropriation of $10,000 made by the sundry civil appropriation act, approved August 4, 1886, for the establishment and completion of a light-house at Two Harbors, Minnesota, is hereby authorized to be used for the establishment and completion of a light-station at the point named.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, between lines 21 and 22, insert:

"For the purchase of a site and erection of a buoy depot at Absecon Inlet, New Jersey, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish merely to say with reference to this amendment that I do not think the point of order lies against it, for the reason that this buoy depot is a necessary incident of the service, as is shown by the letter of Vice-Admiral Rowan, which I have before me. As to the necessity for this buoy depot, I will read from the Book of Estimates the note on this point, which I personally know to be true:

A buoy shed should be built at this place, where the tender can come close to it and large enough to receive most of the buoys, etc., needed in the New Jersey inlets. When this is done the buoys for Great Egg Harbor Inlet, a few miles below, can be stored here, and the $40 per year rent paid can be saved.

It is necessary to have a place to deposit these buoys along the New Jersey coast, and the proposition is to have it here for the reason that the water is better at this inlet than anywhere else. The buoys can be stored here, where the tender can come up close alongside, and the result will be a considerable saving to the Government. This has been recommended from year to year by the Light-House Board, and I know that it ought to be done. As to the point of order, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist upon it, because this amendment is in the line of economy.

Mr. RANDALL. I have only to say that the Government of the United States does not acquire property and establish buoy depots in the way proposed without some law authorizing it. I would not object if the Committee on Commerce would provide for it by law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They probably would have done so if they had been allowed to have their day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is incompetent for the Government, without express authority of law, to acquire title to real estate as provided in the amendment, and therefore that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But I do not think the gentleman insists on the point of order. He has done his duty in calling the attention of the committee to the point. I am as familiar as any man can be with that coast, and I assure the gentleman that this amendment is in the line of economy, and I do not think he will insist upon the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing for the committee to vote upon the amendment, simply because it is connected with the saving of human life. That is the reason, and the only reason, I consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one superintendent for the life-saving stations and for the houses of refuge on the coasts of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, $1,200.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 10, line 20, strike out "two" and insert "five;" so as to make the amendment read: "$1,500."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on that; but if the gentleman desires to make an explanation, I will reserve the point.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the committee but a moment. In the last session of Congress I called the attention of the committee to the fact that in my judgment the superintendent of the life-saving stations specified in this section of the bill was not adequately paid. I am also aware of the fact that the point of order reserved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] would lie against this amendment; but it does seem to me clearly within the province of the committee, if it should see fit, to allow this amendment to be incorporated in the bill. The superintendent of life-saving stations and houses of refuge mentioned in this portion of the bill is required to travel a greater number of miles probably than any other superintendent upon the coast. I am not offering this amendment, sir, simply for the purpose of getting an increase of salary for an officer who happens to be in my district, but because I believe the man is underpaid for the work he is required to perform. I will state further, that the means of communication between the life-saving stations and houses of refuge in that district, especially upon the coast of Florida, are exceedingly bad. The superintendent has to travel upon the ocean in an open boat. There is no regular communication between the stations, communication is difficult, and it does seem to me very unreasonable that the lowest paid superintendent of life-saving stations anywhere upon the coast of the United States, except this man, should receive $1,500, while he receives only $1,200.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a recent statute fixing this salary, and an increase is not recommended by Mr. Kimball, the head of this service.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of (not more than two hundred and twelve) plate printers, at piecerates to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed the rates usually paid for such work, including the wages of (not more than two hundred) printers' assistants, at $1.25 a day each, when employed, and for wages of (not more than thirty-eight) printers' assistants at steam-presses, at $1.50 a day each, when employed, and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines, $398,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury:

Mr. WILKINS. I wish to inquire whether this paragraph authorizes an increase in the number of plate printers in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. RANDALL. It contemplates an increase from one hundred and eighty-seven to two hundred and twelve.

Mr. WILKINS. Does the Committee on Appropriations propose an increase in the number of steam plate presses in that bureau?

Mr. RANDALL. They do not.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, page 13, strike out the words "not more than two hundred and twelve;" in line 1, page 14, strike out the words "not more than two hundred;" and in lines 3, 4, 5, and 6, on the same page, strike out the words "and for wages of not more than thirty-eight printer's assistants at steam presses at $1.50 a day each when employed, and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state my reasons for offering this amendment. At the present time the quality of the work turned out from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing is a subject of investigation before one committee, if not two committees, of this House. I see that this clause is so framed as to meet a contingency which has been prepared by the chief of this bureau. The paragraph does not propose to put in more steam presses, but it gives the present head of the bureau enough money to put in such presses if he desires to do so. Without giving the chief of the bureau distinct authority to put in more presses, which is really the objectionable part of the work of that bureau, the committee proposes to give sufficient money to enable him to do so if he wishes, thereby curtailing the amount of plate printing.

Taking either horn of the dilemma there will be no need of any committee of this House investigating this bureau further, if this proposition is to stand as it is. As a member of one of the committees that have been engaged in this investigation—and I have gone considerably into the matter—I wish to say, without any prejudice against any of the officers of that bureau and without claiming that every complaint which has been made is valid, I think it right, when the amount of money here proposed to be given is voted, that the Committee on Appropriations should not take out of the hands of other committees engaged in this investigation their proper and just regulation of this class of public printing. If this paragraph is to be passed as it now stands, we might just as well set aside at once all investigation of this bureau by other committees, and declare that the Committee on Appropriations shall say how this printing shall be done, how many new machines shall be brought into use, how much royalty shall be paid, and what class of work shall be turned out.

Mr. WILKINS. Will the gentleman state what committee is investigating that bureau?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. WILKINS. Is that committee engaged in the investigation now?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes, sir; it is making a practical investigation in person.

Mr. RANDALL. And there have been other investigations. The Committee on Banking and Currency has had the matter under consideration, but I believe declined to investigate it.

Mr. WILKINS. There was nothing to investigate.

Mr. RANDALL. The chairman of that committeee states there was nothing to investigate. The Committee on Appropriations, before deciding upon the form of this paragraph in the bill, gave a lengthy hearing to the parties in interest.

Let us brush aside all this mist which seems to surround this question. The Committee on Appropriations have only adopted what was in the existing law in this connection up to a certain point. They have stricken out the proviso which permitted, and we understand such was the intention, the purchase of six more of these steam presses. They were not willing to go further. They were not willing to say the eighteen steam presses there should not be made valuable. The saving on each one of these steam presses, as the committee is informed, is that of four persons, or a saving in salary amounting to $4,000.

The Committee on Appropriations have no power to say steam presses now in possession of the Government should not be used. They did omit to repeat the act of last year as to further purchase of steam presses; and they did so with the understanding the rule of the Department has been that where authority is given in one bill and omitted in the next the effect is to stop any further purchase in that direction. The committee fully understand the question, and as far as that subject is concerned acted in that direction.

Mr. WILKINS. Will the gentleman permit this proviso to be read? I think the gentleman from New York will find it covers the ground which he wishes to have covered in this bill.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will yield for the purpose of having it read for information.

Mr. WILKINS. It meets with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. WILKINS. I send up an amendment to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended in royalty for steam plate-printing machines other than for those now in use by this Department.

Mr. RANDALL. If the amendment introduced does that, I have no objection.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think this officer intends to take any other action. I hope there will be a serious reduction in internal-revenue taxes so the appropriation we give when it comes to be expended will only be used in part, and that a large balance will be left over to be returned into the Treasury.

Mr. WILKINS. Your committee does not object to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let me make a fair proposition now. Why not strike out the words my amendment indicates. Then you will have $398,000 to run the bureau on and let the chief of this bureau run it on his best judgment.

Mr. RANDALL. That is for the Treasury Department to determine, I understand.

Mr. FARQUHAR. But the chief of the bureau, Mr. Graves, has carried out as nearly as possible the intention of the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. He had the concurrence of the Secretary.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have no means of knowing that.

Now if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will allow me a minute, I will say that as far as the investigation has gone, the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department are not satisfied that everything has been well done. That is the whole of it; that we are not getting the highest character of engraving in that bureau for which we are paying the highest price. When the head of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the Government Printing Office can not turn out as good work for the United States as private individuals, it is time it should be inquired into and some remedy applied.

Mr. RANDALL. That is another matter.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is the way to do it. The paragraph of the Committee on Appropriations is practically in the line of putting in more steam presses by cutting down a certain number of plate printers. It is to provide that Mr. Graves shall do so.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee does not think so. The committee is sincere. I agree the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILKINS] should be put on the bill. He is chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and has investigated this subject. I did not know any other committee was investigating the matter than the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Banking and Currency. The Committee on Appropriations could not wait forever for the report of the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

Mr. WILKINS. The House never authorized any investigation by that committee.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have nothing to say about the Committee on Banking and Currency. If it took four months to investigate a Government office——

Mr. RANDALL. If it is the desire that the work of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing should be remitted to private parties, that is another question. I do not say that I will vote for that.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I do not pretend to do that, but what I do say is that when we are paying the highest wages for engravers and plate printers we should be able to get the very best work, and work of a very different character from that which we do get. I do not say it is the fault of the head of the bureau, but what I do say is that this Bureau of Engraving and Printing shall not be——

Mr. RANDALL. There is no such thing intended so far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned.

Mr. McADOO. I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments are now pending. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Ohio if his amendment is offered as an amendment to that of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WILKINS. No; it is offered in lieu of that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words, in lines 5 and 6, page 14 of the bill, "and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines."

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, I think the error that has been made by those who have discussed the pending amendment of the gentleman from New York is in presuming that the House understands the true status of affairs in this connection. There are many members of the House who know nothing of the way the work is being done, or why this provision is incorporated in the bill at all, only from the general knowledge which the public possesses that steam plate-printing machines are used in that department.

The statement in brief is simply this: There are to-day in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing a number of machines that do the work which was formerly done by hand operators, and which are used in printing the currency of the United States, and the internal-revenue stamps. It is claimed by the expert workmen who are employed in this branch of the public service that the work done by the machines does not compare in quality with the work done by hand, but that, on the contrary, it is far inferior to it. They have made a comparison of the silver certificates which are printed upon the plate presses by steam, with the greenbacks printed on the hand presses, and I have myself examined some of the specimens which are exhibited in comparison. If they were honestly selected, there can be no question whatever, even to a casual observer, that the machine work is very inferior to that done by hand.

Many members present will, no doubt, if they have given a little reflection to the matter, recollect that in handling the new silver certificates, although they may have been recently issued, perhaps not six months old, that they are shriveled up and have a very poor and despicable appearance for Government money, as compared with the notes heretofore issued from the Treasury. The cause of this is alleged to be that the machine does not give the same impression with the same care and sensitiveness of touch as is given by the hand plate printer; that the friction and the heat of the machine itself are so great that the life is as it were pressed out of the paper, and the bank-note is artificially burned by the machine heat before it begins to circulate amongst the people.

Now, it is not a question as between machine and human labor by any means. These men employed as hand plate printers are not asking us to do away with an invention which does a great deal more work than the hand printers can do, or which does its work as well as human labor; they simply ask this because they take a pride in their work, and they know this machine work to be inferior. They make the request, therefore, for consideration of this matter as experts, as skilled mechanics, and because the United States is turning out a miserable character of currency and wretched stamps by the use of machines which can not and do not perform the work as well as it can be done by hand.

Now, the amendment which I have suggested strikes out the provision for royalty for the use of these steam plate printing machines. These machines have been patented and the patentee is to-day reaping and has already reaped a fortune from the Government for their use. Five hundred dollars is paid for the right to use a machine; $400 is paid for the plan of the machine; $1,250 is paid for making the machine; and $1 a thousand is paid by way of royalty for every thousand impressions the machine makes; and $1,800 for a Government superintendent to represent the patentee and inspect the work of the machine. It is simply enormous. There never was anything like it in the world. Talk about the discoveries of gold in California or elsewhere! Why this man has a mine in the very Treasury of the United States at his command for the use of these machines. And it was claimed—I was not a member of the committee which I understand investigated the matter, and can not say whether it be true or not—but it has been claimed that the Government is not saving any money by the use of the machines, which are not performing the work of human labor with equally satisfactory results; whereas, on the other hand, it is alleged that the work is not even as good as the hand labor, but is manifestly inferior.

Now, I do not think it fair that this Government should continue, from year to year, to fill the pockets of the men who invented these machines, and continue paying to them such enormous tributes as is paid here. Five hundred dollars for the right, $400 for the plans——

Mr. WEAVER. You mean for each machine?

Mr. McADOO. As I understand it.

Mr. WILKINS. You do not mean every year?

Mr. McADOO. Every machine, I understand it. No plans can be used in making the machine unless they get the right from him at this rate.

Mr. WILKINS. But the gentleman does not mean to say that $500 is paid every year and $400 for the plan of each machine?

Mr. McADOO. I do not know how that may be.

Mr. FARQUHAR. But one thing is certain, that he gets a dollar for every thousand impressions.

Mr. McADOO. And $1,250 for making the machines of which he is a patentee.

Now as to the question of the character of work performed there—the question of merit—Mr. Graves, the Superintendent of the Bureau, says:

As to the relative merits of the steam printing and hand printing it may be said that in the widest sense steam printing is not equal to hand printing.

Now about the investigation. As I understand it, a resolution was introduced here in the House and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency——

Mr. WILKINS. There was no resolution introduced into the House.

Mr. McADOO. How did your committee get cognizance of it?

Mr. WILKINS. There was a memorial addressed to the House of Representatives and sent to the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. McADOO. Your committee made no report on that.

Mr. WILKINS. We reported adversely long ago.

Mr. McADOO. Leaving the matter on the table?

Mr. WILKINS. Certainly.

Mr. McADOO. I understand this matter is being investigated by another committee.

Mr. WILKINS. This House has authorized no committee to make an investigation. The gentleman should not say that.

Mr. McADOO. I do not claim the House has authorized it.

Mr. WILKINS. They can not do it without authority.

Mr. McADOO. The House has no evidence on this matter. No evidence has been submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McADOO] has expired.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I hope I have the attention of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. Is it not a fair matter, now—I regard it as especially fair—for the House at least to take care of its own officers and the Treasury Department also? The matter of the limitation of these plate printers ought to be stricken out. Why should not, at least, my two amendments be accepted by the committee? Let us leave out the limitation "212," and let the bureau take care of itself.

Mr. RANDALL. What you want stricken out is the number.

Mr. WILKINS. If you will limit them, and say they shall not employ any more presses, I will be with you.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That matter will take care of itself.

Mr. TRACEY. I rise for the purpose of inquiring the wording of the amendments before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments in the order in which they have been presented.

The Clerk reported the amendments at length.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to ask my friend from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] what the effect of his amendments will be upon the use of the steam presses now used in this department?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The effect of my amendments would simply be to keep the eighteen steam presses they have now and provide that no other steam presses shall go in there until Congress and the Treasury Department are satisfied the work is well and correctly done. There is no curtailment of the work nor amount of work that may be turned out. When this committee demand curtailing the number of plate printers to two hundred and twelve they give the head of that bureau the opportunity to go to the Treasury Department and say, "With this number of men I can not do the work and will have to put in sixteen presses." That would be the continuation of an abuse.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, as I now have the floor, I desire to pursue my inquiry a little further. If I understand the gentleman aright, his answer to my question was that his amendments would not in any wise interfere with the use of the presses they have now.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is just it; not a particle.

Mr. RYAN. I understand that the bureau can use those presses only on condition that they pay a royalty.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Certainly.

Mr. RYAN. But you provide that we shall not pay any royalty.

Mr. FARQUHAR. On other presses; not on the ones we have. That is correct. That is the point.

Mr. TRACEY. In case the expression "and for royalty for use of steam plate-printing machines" is stricken out, will not that prevent the department from paying a royalty?

Mr. WILKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FARQUHAR. A proviso follows that.

Mr. TRACEY. I would like to say that as far as the general idea expressed by the gentleman from New York is concerned, I am in accord with him. It appears to me to be unreasonable to prevent the Government from carrying out the contracts it has made.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am not tenacious on this matter. If any member of the committee has an idea that this legislation would stop paying the royalty on the presses now in use I would endeavor to make it perfectly plain.
